Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister on what date the book "Inside Intelligence" by Anthony Cavendish was referred to the D Notice Committee; on what date the committee cleared the book; whether any alterations or deletions were requested by the committee; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Discussions between the Defence Press and Broadcasting Committee and the press, broadcasting authorities and publishers are regarded as having taken place in confidence. It is not our policy to comment on discussions on individual books.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister why Sir Philip Woodfield, the security services counsellor, refused a request from Anthony Cavendish for an interview about his proposed book "Inside Intelligence"; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The responsibilities of Sir Philip Woodfield as staff counsellor for the security and intelligence services were set out in my reply of 2 November 1987, column 512, to my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney). I do not propose to comment on the details of how Sir Philip Woodfield discharges those responsibilities.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps were taken by her Press Secretary on 1 January to publicise the fact that an injunction had been granted to Her Majesty's Government against the Sunday Times and The Observer newspapers restraining publication of extracts from the book "Inside Intelligence" by Anthony Cavendish; what is the general practice with regard to the timing, source and scope of Government briefings on such subjects; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The No. 10 Press Office informed the Press Association of the injunction obtained on 1 January. The practice with regard to timing, source and scope of such briefings varies according to the circumstances.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Prime Minister if she will meet representatives of voluntary bodies concerned with conservation to discuss the disposal of nationally owned nature reserves.

The Prime Minister: The Nature Conservancy Council is considering this matter as part of its current review of national nature reserves. There are regular opportunities for the voluntary bodies to discuss issues which concern them at meetings with the NCC and with Ministers.

"The Secret Servant"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Sir Patrick Reilly sought the approval of Her Majesty's Government to be interviewed by Mr. Anthony Cave-Brown during preparation of his book "The Secret Servant" a biography of Sir Stewart Menzies; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We have no record of approval being sought for such an interview.

ENVIRONMENT

Nitrate Protection Zones

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 2 December 1987, column 916, if he has completed his consideration of the creation of nitrate protection zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has not yet completed his consideration of this subject.

Hedgerows

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of hedgerows have been lost in England during the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The current rate of hedgerow removal is not easy to establish and information is not available over this particular time scale. Results from the monitoring landscape change survey published in 1986 and conducted by Huntings Technical Services Ltd. for the Countryside Commission and this Department (a copy of which is in the Library of the House), indicated that hedgerow length in England fell from approximately 359,000 miles in 1969 to approximately 315,000 miles in 1985. However, figures produced by a MAFF survey show an average loss of 500 miles per year in England and Wales between 1981 and 1985. Work is continuing to enable us to improve our information on both the rate of removal and the extent of new planting, so that the position can be kept under review.

Local Council Borrowing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about local council borrowing from the National Association of Local Councils; and what response he has given.

Mr. Chope: The association has sought an increase of 26 per cent. in the overall annual borrowing allocation for parish councils. It has been invited to submit further information in support of its request.

Storm Damage

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details by local authority of (a) original bids and (b) final allocations of funds from the Countryside Commission's "Task Force Trees for Replanting" following damage sustained in the inclement weather of 16 October 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: The following information relates to the special allocations made by the Countryside Commission for 1987-88.

The Countryside Commission arrived at the figures for net bids by deducting costs which were ineligible under the terms of the special scheme; and, where this was separately identified, by deducting the contribution which the local authority itself proposed to make.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds have been (a) paid out and (b) allocated to the London borough of Newham for damage sustained during the inclement weather on 16 October 1987.

Mr. Chope: No payments have yet been made to the London borough of Newham under the scheme of special financial assistance for dealing with the storm damage on 16 October. My Department has not yet received a claim from the borough. No specific sum has been budgeted for Newham, nor any other authority under the scheme. Payments will be made on the basis of eligible expenditure in each authority's claim.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his Department's latest estimate of the costs to local authorities arising from the damage caused by inclement weather on 16 October 1987.

Mr. Chope: In advance of receiving local authorities' claims for special financial assistance the Department does not have sufficiently reliable information available to provide such an estimate.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount his Department has (a) paid out and (b) budgeted for damages arising from the consequences of inclement weather on 16 October 1987.

Mr. Chope: Up to 12 January only four claims have been received, and no payments have yet been made under the scheme of special financial assistance for dealing with storm damage on 16 October 1987. My Department has initially budgeted £25 million in 1987-88. This estimate is provisional and will be amended as necessary in the light of claims received. Provision will also be made in Main Estimates for 1988-89 for such payments.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is in a position to respond to the request from Kent county council for special financial assistance in respect of the severe weather during the 1986-87 winter.

Mr. Ridley: I have today written to the leader of Kent county council indicating that we have concluded that the weather conditions experienced in the county last winter were such as to justify invoking a scheme of special financial assistance under the Bellwin arrangements, and an exclusion from total expenditure.

In reaching this decision we have had particularly in mind the exceptionally severe weather conditions experienced by Kent compared with normal winter weather for the county and that, as a direct result of these conditions, communities were put at risk and suffered severe hardship and inconvenience which required immediate relief.

My officials have written to Kent with full details of the scheme. It will provide for grant to be paid at a rate of 75 per cent. on emergency-related expenditure above a threshold. This threshold will be the same as that used in relation to the storm emergency last October: the product of a 1p exclusive rate for the county council and 0·15p rate for non-metropolitan district councils.

I am also consulting local authority interests about an exclusion from total expenditure in respect of authorities' 25 per cent. share of eligible expenditure above the threshold and have asked that those wishing to comment on this proposal should do so by 5 February 1988.

It is open to other authorities who believe that they qualify for assistance under the terms of this scheme to make a case to the Department, and if it is accepted, to make a claim for special financial assistance.

The responsibility for dealing with such emergencies remains with local authorities. The Government regard special financial assistance as an exceptional measure. They will decide each case on its merits.

Rate Rebates

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of households with below average incomes but above average reateable values are in receipt of rate rebate.

Mr. Howard: 41 per cent. of homes with above average rateable values are occupied by households with below average incomes. Information on the proportions of such households receiving rate rebates at present is not available.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the current number of residential mortgages remaining with the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Waldegrave: At the end of December, 31,446 residential mortgages remained with the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details by boroughs of the amounts distributed by the London Residuary Body since the commencement of the current financial year.

Mr. Chope: Firm figures in respect of the amount distributed by the London Residuary Body since the commencement of the current financial year will not be available until LRB's 1987-88 accounts have been audited and certified. However, LRB's latest estimate, as set out in its 1987-88 budget, of distributable revenue balances during the year is shown at table A.

These figures reflect the substantial progress already made by LRB in disposing of surplus land and property previously held by the Greater London council, to the benefit of the ratepayers of London.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if all moneys owed to the London Residuary Body by Government Departments have now been paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of 22 October 1987. Discussions between the LRB and the Department are continuing, as are investigations by the district auditors.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any compensation has been paid to MEPC plc during the period of Mr. Christopher Benson's chairmanship of the London Docklands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment (1) how many responses his Departm received to the consultation document Competition in Provision of Local Authority Services issued in 1985 these responses, how many were from local authorit including the Inner London education authority and lo authority associations; and of the responses from th authorities how many supported the introduction compulsory competitive tendering into the provisio local authority services;

(2) how many of those responses received by Government to the consultation document "Competit in the Provision of Local Authority Services," issue 1985, were from employers' associations or any ot organisations representing actual or potential contract for local authority services; and of the responses fr those organisations, how many were in favour of introduction of compulsory competitive tendering into provision of local authority services and how many w in favour of introducing competition over a period of a years.

Mr. Chope: Over 450 responses to the consultat paper were received and a list of respondents was pla in the Library on 30 October 1985. Some 240 were fr local authorities or local authority associations, and so 60 from private contractors or associations representa of their interests. It is not easy to summarise the views forward on this complex subject, but the hon. Gentlem is free to ask consultees what they said.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what proportion of households with be average incomes live in properties the rateable valu which is more than the average domestic rateable value the authority in which they are situated.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is available.

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment whether he is yet in a position to update estimates of the impact of the community charge individual households.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library a r which updates the principal exemplifications of the imp of the community charge, originally contained in Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cm 9714).

These later figures confirm that:

domestic rates are very badly related to ability to p For the lowest income group (those with an income o to £50 pw) rates amount to 4·1 per cent. of net income. community charge amounts to 3·4 per cent.;

community charges on average will be less than dom rates at all income levels up to £150 pw;

many poorer people pay more in rates than those are better off even in the same local authority area. Th because 41 per cent. of households living in homes above average rateable values have below average incor 40 per cent. of those with above average incomes liv homes with below average rateable values;

80 per cent. of single pensioner households and 75 cent. of other single adult households will gain from t proposals; when fully implemented 53 per cent. of households (9·8 million) will gain from the introduction of the community charge.

These figures demonstrate that domestic rates do not reflect ability to pay, that the poorest households stand to gain from the community charge, and that, contrary to recent opinions reflected in a recent poll, the majority of households will in fact gain from these proposals.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the numbers of single pensioners to whom his reference of 69 per cent., Official Report, column 1325, 17 December, represents in respect of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library updated estimates which show that overall some 2¼ million single pensioners (66 per cent.), in England, would benefit from the full implementation of the community charge and nearly 2 million (80 per cent.) of single pensioner households would do so.

Water Supplies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his latest estimate of the cost to the water industry of complying with the EEC recommendations about the levels of water pollution;

(2) what time scale is now envisaged by his Department to allow water authorities to bring their domestic water supplies into conformity with EEC regulations regarding acceptable levels of pollution.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) of 2 December 1987, at column 622, and 15 December 1987, at column 460 on the subject of drinking water quality.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify the areas containing the majority of the 900,000 people who receive drinking water containing nitrate in excess of the EEC's recommended levels.

Mr. Moynihan: The areas are in Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk and Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will identify by (a) the pollutant and (b) the level over the EEC recommendation the areas where domestic drinking water supplies do not comply with the latest EEC requirements.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the levels of pollutant contained in the domestic water supply in the London borough of Newham above those recommended by the EEC.

Mr. Moynihan: I am not aware of any pollutants exceeding the EC drinking water directive limits in the London borough of Newham.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what provisions will be made for home dialysis users, in the event of water privatisation, with regard to (a) setting levels of charges, and (b) disconnecting supplies for non-payment; and what representations he has received on this matter;

(2) whether there will be a code of practice for water public limited companies to deal with possible termination of supply in cases where general health might be at risk.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Water authorities at present operate a code of practice in relation to payment of bills and disconnection of water supplies. Privatised water utility companies will be required to operate a similar code. Present arrangements to protect dialysis patients in respect of loss of supply and quality of supply will continue.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps will be taken to ensure that water public limited companies comply in all respects within the EEC directive on water quality; and whether he intends to seek amendments to the directive.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 11 January 1988]: The legislation to privatise the water authorities will give the EEC drinking water directive the force of law in the United Kingdom. The Commission is itself considering the process by which directives on water matters may be reviewed.

Virus Research (Waste)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what form of monitoring is applied to the discharge of waste from the animal virus research centre at Pirbright; and what waste matters are involved.

Mr. Moynihan: Discharges of small quantities of low-level radioactive waste from the Animal Virus Research Institute are authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The institute is inspected by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution to check that the discharges are within authorised limits. The inspectorate also monitors levels of radioactivity in the environment resulting from these discharges.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any licence applications have been made by (a) Lilly research centre, (b) Serono Diagnostics, (c) Mercia Diagnostics and (d) the central veterinary research laboratory for the discharge of radioactive waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Lilly Research Centre Ltd., Serono Diagnostics Ltd., Mercia Diagnostics Ltd., and the Central Veterinary Research Laboratory are all authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to discharge small quantities of low-level radioactive waste. The authorisations are issued by my Department and the organisations are inspected under the 1960 Act by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution to check that any discharges of radioactive waste are within authorised limits.

Threatened Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts are being made by the Government to protect the species in the United Kingdom identified by the World Wildlife Fund as being threatened with extinction.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the report recently published by the World Wildlife Fund listing threatened species did not identify any United Kingdom species. Nevertheless, the Government will be studying the report carefully.

Nature Reserves

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his statutory duties with respect to England's national nature reserves.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the privatisation of nature reserves.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the preparation for sale of national nature reserves.

Mr. Ridley: I am responsible (with the approval of the Treasury) for determining the public funds made available to the Nature Conservancy Council via an annual grant-in-aid for the performance of its functions, including the establishment, maintenance and management of national nature reserves. Several of the conditions of the grant-in-aid affect NNRs, particularly those which reserve the right to myself to decide in certain circumstances whether the NCC should incur expenditure on the acquisition of land, or on payments under management agreements, needed to establish specific Reserves.

I am also responsible for authorising any proposal by the NCC under its powers to acquire land compulsorily to establish a reserve, although these powers have only been exercised very rarely; my authority is also required to confirm byelaws for the protection of reserves.

In addition, I also have discretionary powers to give the NCC directions concerning the discharge of any of its functions.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on the future ownership, control and management of Britain's national nature reserves;

(2) if he has asked the Nature Conservancy Council to examine ways of selling the national nature reserves in their ownerships and control.

Mr. Ridley: The National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 provided the framework almost 40 years ago for a policy under which nature reserves are normally established and protected by agreement between private landowners and the Nature Conservancy Council, without the need for public ownership. Successive Governments have operated that policy. Of the 160,000 ha of reserves declared by 31 March 1987, only 43,000 ha (27 per cent.) are publicly owned by the NCC. Many of the most outstanding reserves — including several in the Norfolk Broads, upper Teesdale, Avon gorge, the Gower peninsula and the Scottish highlands — have been successfully protected for many years in private ownership.

In line with my general policy that all non-departmental public bodies should be asked to keep their land holdings to the minimum necessary for their functions, I have asked them, including the NCC, to examine their portfolio and consider whether there is greater scope for both existing and future reserves to be kept in private ownership with appropriate conservation safeguards. The review will consider also the size of the NNR network, methods of further improving reserve management and the of generating more income (for example from vi could be ploughed back into conservation. I receive a report on these matters from the NC year when they have fully considered the positi

King's Cross (Fire)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of St Environment what additional funds have been a the London borough of Camden for costs arisi out of the King's Cross fire disaster.

Mr. Chope: None.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of St Environment what progress has been made in c between his Department and the London resid about the payment of outstanding Government which provision has been made in the Greate Council's 1985-86 closing accounts.

Mr. Chope: The Department and the LR operating with the district auditor to clari entitlement to certain Government grants.

Manor House, Millbank

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of St Environment what plans his Department has the use of Manor house, Millbank; at what cost, what form of tenure.

Mr. Chope: I am not aware of any building o known as Manor house.

Ozone Layer (Convention)

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of St Environment why agreement to Community si the Montreal protocol to the Vienna conventi protection of the ozone layer was giv parliamentary scrutiny procedures were compl he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: When international negotiat approaching their conclusion the Commission Council's agreement to Community signatu protocol to the Vienna convention by means of 8335/87 dated 11 September 1987. The authorisation was given by means of urge procedure in time for a conference on plenipot Montreal at which the protocol on substances t the ozone layer was adopted on 16 Septe Community (and the United Kingdom) protocol on the same day.

The House was in recess at the time and possible for the normal scrutiny procedures to out. The Government did, however, keep informed of developments, at column 319 on 27 1986, at column 134 on 24 March 1987, and at c on 23 July 1987, and have since reported on th of the diplomatic conference, at column 277 on 1987. The Select Committee on European Legi recommended that this subject should b considered by the House when the Commission proposals for common rules for the Com contemplated in the protocol. The text of the protocol will be published shortly as a Command Paper and laid before the House before ratification, in accordance with the usual practice.

TRANSPORT

Tolls

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with regard to the level of toll charges on esturial crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Government policy is that toll revenue should be sufficient to recover the cost of each undertaking in accordance with its enabling legislation, but that account needs to be taken of local circumstances. Decisions on particular applications for the revision of tolls are taken in the light of all the evidence available at the time.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his estimate is of the debt of the Mersey road tunnels which can be recovered by tolls at a realistic level.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One of the objectives of current discussions with the Merseyside passenger transport authority is to arrive at a joint assessment of the proportion of debt which the undertaking can service and repay. That assessment has only just begun and I cannot anticipate the outcome.

Plutonium Nitrate

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to carry out full destructive testing of air transport and packaging options proposed for the movement of plutonium nitrate; and what standards or safety guidelines are currently used for the design and operations of such air transport options.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to transport plutonium nitrate by air.

British Nuclear Fuels plc is examining options for the return of reprocessed plutonium oxide to Japan in the 1990s. A programme to develop and test a suitable package for air transport is currently being undertaken. The Department is being kept informed of progress and in due course the design will be submitted for approval. The package is being designed to the standards prescribed by the United States Government. The International Atomic Energy Agency is currently reviewing the international regulations covering these matters.

Breath Tests

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) casualties, (b) deaths, (c) breath tests, and (d) positive breath tests there were during the Christmas period for each year from 1979 to 1987, by police authority.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Cars (Headlights)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to monitor the experiment in Canada of cars driving at all times with headlights lit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Canadian authorities said that they will monitor the effect of their recent which requires all new motor vehicles to be fitted daytime running lights. These lights may be in se forms, but they are required to light up automati whenever the engine is running. We will be interested i results.

Accident Remedial Schemes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State Transport whether he will make it his policy to accep accident remedial schemes on highways as eligible transport supplementary grant; and if he will ma statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Transport supplementary grant (TSG) is pai support of expenditure on roads of more than importance, such as roads forming part of the prin route network (PRN), designated roads in Lon bypasses and other roads that relieve communitie longer-distance through traffic, and links to the PRN motorways. Expenditure on accident remedial scheme all such roads may be accepted for TSG. There ar plans to change the scope of TSG, which represents national taxpayer's interest in local roads. Scheme purely local significance are funded by local autho from the other sources of finance available to them.

Public Transport (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State Transport how many proposals for investment in pu transport in London since 1984 have been assessed cost-benefit basis.

Mr. David Mitchell: Major investment proposal London Regional Transport which require spe approvals are appraised on a financial and cost-be basis. Since 1984, in addition to projects for which t was clear financial justification, we have received approved in every case six LRT proposals which depe upon non-financial benefits. In the same period, an the proposals submitted by British Rail two approval additional rolling stock were justified in part by the to meet agreed service quality targets.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State Transport how much money his Department provide intends to provide, either directly through the Lon Docklands Development Corporation or through tr port supplementary grant, for investment in new roa docklands and for public transport in docklands.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is suppo £1·884 million of expenditure with transport supple tary grant (TSG). We will consider further scheme support with TSG if proposed by the boroughs. We funded half the initial cost of £77 million of the Dockl light railway through London Regional Transport an shall be meeting some £83 million of the estimated million cost of the Bank extension, the remainder b contributed by the Canary Wharf Development Comp Trunk road schemes giving access to docklands w £175 million have been completed or are u construction and a further £360 million of expenditu planned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Wildlife Conservation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made by Her Majesty's Government to prevent the importation into Hong Kong of rare and endangered species of wildlife for use as restaurant food.

Mr. Eggar: Hong Kong is a party to the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora (CITES).

The import, export and possession of rare and endangered species of animals and plants are controlled by law in Hong Kong, and their import for use as food is prohibited there.

Checks are made at all entry points into Hong Kong to prevent the illegal importation of such animals and plants: in 1987, 136 seizures were made and offenders prosecuted.

Inspections are also conducted at local restaurants and markets to ensure that no such animals are offered for sale as food. In 1987, 80 visits were made resulting in 14 seizures and prosecutions.

Hong Kong

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report on Hong Kong will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Eggar: The report has been laid before Parliament today. It is also being published today, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Human Rights

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Eastern European countries of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act during the last six months.

Mr. Mellor: During the last six months to 31 December 1987, Soviet and East European implementation of their Helsinki commitments continued to carry special significance in the light of the third CSCE follow-up meeting currently under way in Vienna. Overall, compliance with CSCE commitments continued to be unsatisfactory, with persistent breaches of the provisions relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms, although the record varied from country to country.

Security in Europe: Principles regarding relations between participating states; confidence-building measures and certain aspects of security and disarmament (basket I).

Violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms covered by principle VII, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief continued.

In the Soviet Union there was little significant change in practice towards principle VII. Performance over the last six months was disappointing in some areas, when compared with the more encouraging rate of change up to July. Some hundreds of people are still known to be detained for political reasons, including the Estonian Helsinki monitor, Mart Niklus, whose case has been raised by Her Majesty's Government on a number of occasions. A formal amnesty, published in June in conn the 70th anniversary of the October revoluti benefit as many political prisoners as had bee did not cover inmates of mental hospital treatment for political reasons, although som this category have been released recently. virtually no new criminal prosecutions o grounds were known to have occurred—on being the case of Ivan Pankratchenko, give sentence in October for "anti-Soviet agi propaganda" — some activists were subjec extensive range of harassment. Several old attacks on individuals were published. Sovi legislation, including some of the articles most used to sentence political or religious activists, to be under review. It was officially suggested 190/1 of the RSFSR criminal code in (slandering the Soviet state) might be abolished 70 revised. But no amendments have yet been

The theoretical freedom of religion enshr Soviet constitution has remained a dead letter those wishing to profess their religion wit subject to petty controls and harassment from state organs. Many believers such as the Orth Vladimir Rusak, remain imprisoned for although the Baptist, Anna Chertkova, released from psychiatric hospital in Decem long campaign in the United Kingdom to However, there were articles in several defending believers' rights and criticising the for infringing them.

The welcome and steady increase in the Jews, Armenians and Germans allowed to em the Soviet Union noted in the first half continued. Some long-standing Jewish refus given permission to leave, including Ida Nude Slepak, Alexander Ioffe, Pavel Abramovich, and Viktor Brailovsky. Analysis of Jewish shows that in practice the "first degree" rule, in January, permitting emigration only by c members, was waived in some cases and t security objections were dropped in others. departmental review commission was esta examine refusals; however, the initial experi working has been discouraging. The proc arbitrary and subject to local differences something of a break with past practice, forme (mainly Jewish) were allowed to return to th some numbers—and even to leave again, in cases. But others were unable to return, h stripped of their citizenship when they first emi such case is that of Mrs. Inna Budanova, curren in the United Kingdom.

In non-Russian areas of the Soviet Un intellectuals expressed outspoken demands linguistic and cultural rights. Some demonst national groups with grievances (Jews, Balt Tartars) were permitted; others, particularly witnessed by Western journalists, were sometimes with force.

The record of Bulgarian CSCE implements last six months showed little change from tha periods. Principle VII continued to be widely fl for ethnic Bulgarians and ethnic Turks. Religio for all non-orthodox denominations remaine Although the appointment of a new Catholic Plovdiv was allowed, the functioning of the Catholic church was closely circumscribed. The Muslim community continued to receive the worst treatment. There was strict supervision of Turkish populated areas during a Muslim festival in August to prevent traditional rituals. The use of the Turkish language in public remained banned. There were also reports of harassment of ethnic Turks by the Bulgarian militia.

There was no significant improvement in Czechoslovakia's implementation of CSCE provisions. While freedom of religion is constitutionally guaranteed, the freedom of religious practice continued to be strictly limited and regimented by the state. But harassment of religious activists appears to have been limited recently to temporary detention, surveillance and interrogation. Among the positive developments was the release of all but one of the members of the Jazz Section imprisoned earlier in the year. Karel Srp remained in detention. Harassment of other dissidents and members of unofficial groups continued at a relatively low level. To our knowledge no Charter 77 activists were charged in the last six months, although some were detained and interrogated. In September police refrained for the first time from breaking up a public Charter meeting, but since then groups gathering in private have been disrupted by the authorities on spurious grounds.

The overall implementation of the final act by the GDR remained unsatisfactory despite certain positive aspects. The Evangelical and Roman Catholic churches held large gatherings at which church views were clearly expressed. For the first time in over two decades, a rabbi was appointed for the Jewish community. There was the first ever non-state organised peace demonstration in September, but in November the authorities took action, including the arrest of a number of people, to suppress the activities of an environment library attached to a Protestant church in East Berlin. The death penalty was abolished and a general amnesty was announced. The order to shoot those attempting to flee the country continued in force, though there have been few reported incidents of shots having been fired.

Hungary continued to be the most open of the Eastern European countries with a fairly good, but not flawless, record of compliance with CSCE commitments. Church-state relations remained harmonious. The role of dissidents took on a slightly higher profile, which provoked some harassment of minor samizdat publications. Several conscientious objectors to military service remained in gaol.

Polish implementation of the human rights provisions of the final act improved during the last six months. No custodial sentences for political prisoners were imposed, although heavy fines were handed down for activities such as the distribution of illegal literature. There was a high degree of religious tolerance, although limits continued to be placed on publications by churches and other religious bodies.

Over the last six months, the Romanian regime distinguished itself by its ugly repressiveness. Unlike its Eastern European neighbours, Romania's CSCE implementation record continued to deteriorate in all aspects of human rights. Although no information on political trials became available, prisoners of conscience continued to be detained. Religious toleration existed only in so far as it did not conflict with official policy. Romania continued to pay lip service to promoting the effective exerci human rights and freedoms, while repressing population through the maintenance of a climate of Confidence and security building measures

Warsaw pact countries continued to comply st with the commitments entered into in September 198 the adoption of the Stockholm document. In the la months four observable Warsaw pact exercises and observable NATO exercises took place, including involving United Kingdom troops. British obs participated in a Soviet-GDR exercise in Septe Hungary notified "as an act of good will" one ex (Bazalt-87) held in October, even though it fell belo notifiable level. Observers from six Warsaw pact cou (all except Romania) attended the Purple Warrior ex in the United Kingdom in November.

Co-operation in the field of Economics, of Scienc Technology, and of the Environment (Basket II)

There were some interesting new developments, th the resulting practical benefits were few. In the S Union a relaxation of the visa regime for participa joint ventures was announced. The Soviet joint ve legislation was amended in September but its terms re too restrictive to attract many companies. So far or ventures — with medium or small firms — have concluded, although the Soviet Union may be consid further amendments to make the ventures more attra Both Hungary and Poland have implemented eco and financial measures of interest to Western busines in general there was virtually no improvement i conditions for business men from the West; (a Romania conditions remained particularly unsatisfac Throughout the Eastern countries housing, hotel r and office facilities continued to be generally inade and expensive. Telecommunications facilities wer poor. Economic and commercial information rem inadequate and unreliable.

Environmental problems drew an increasing amo public comment, both from Eastern Government of and citizens. The Hungarians appointed an Enviro Minister in December; the first in Eastern Eu Additional resources have been promised, especially USSR, but it seems that attention to pollution is sti a major priority.

Co-operation in Humanitarian and Other Fields (Baske

In most Eastern countries, there was little improve in opportunities for outside contact. In the Soviet U there was a gradual improvement in the processing o visas and a significant increase in the number of exit granted for temporary family visits. But it was still th that only a fortunate few were able to travel abroad Soviet press itself carried critical comment on bureaucratic obstacles to travel still in place. As al noted, emigration levels rose significantly for some gr but decisions on applications remained arbitrary or s to dubious state security restrictions. The substantia welcome increase in GDR citizens under pensionab allowed to visit the West continued, though the proce for granting visas remained inconsistent and the nu of those allowed to emigrate remained at a low level Hungarians announced that liberalised travel rules w be introduced in 1988. Poland introduced a more re passport policy and Czechoslovakia made ma improvements in its travel regime, but Bulgaria and Romania continued to resist changes to facilitate human contacts.

The official Soviet media continued to be relatively open under the policy of glasnost, with a measure of debate on a wide range of sensitive issues, such as Soviet history, psychiatric abuse, and legal institutions. However, differences of emphasis about the scope of the policy emerged from the speeches of Soviet leaders. In any case, it became clear that the policy was not intended to apply to some of the most critical samizdat publications, such as glasnost. Radio Liberty, Radio Free Europe, Deutsche Welle and Israel Radio remained jammed. So too did the BBC Polish service on shortwave, apparently from within the Soviet Union, though we have been promised by the Poles that this will cease from 1 January. Some of the many new informal groups began to be attacked in the press and leading members were harassed. Attempts were made in December to disrupt an unofficial humanitarian seminar in Moscow. There were some small positive developments in Eastern Europe; for example, difficult subjects, like AIDS, and major accidents began to be treated more openly in Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and the GDR. In Poland the appearance of the first legal "independent" press organ, Res Publica was an important step. But overall access to information remained severely restricted. Availability of Western publications was generally poor (partly as a result of financial constraints) and conditions for journalists remained difficult or, in the case of Romania, became worse.

Co-operation and Exchanges in the field of Culture and Education

There were no major new developments in these fields.

Over the last six months cultural co-operation with the Soviet Union increased following the signing earlier in the year of United Kingdom-Soviet memorandum of understanding covering information, culture and education. The Kirov ballet toured Britain, the Royal ballet visited some Soviet cities and Soviet culture was strongly represented at this year's Edinburgh festival. A cultural agreement also came into effect with Hungary in July and the British Council resources in Hungary were increased to cover new activities.

Visits and stays by research workers or academics were largely governed by an increasing number of bilateral agreements. These generally worked well, although the East remained keen to ensure that educational exchanges focused on scientific and technical areas which corresponded to state requirements. Exchanges with Romania were hampered because nominees frequently failed to get permission to travel.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications for the economy of the current state of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Major: The current state of British manufacturing industry is excellent, with strong growth in output, productivity and exports in 1987. We expect further healthy expansion in 1988.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he has yet received from the European Court of Justice its decision on the case initiated by the EEC Commission arguing that the United Kingdom should levy value added tax on industrial and commercial buildings and on the supply of gas, electricity, water, sewerage and protective clothing and footwear to industry and commerce; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to receive the decision of the European Court of Justice on the case raised by the Commission under the sixth directive relating to value added tax on gas, electricity, water, sewage and protective clothing supplied to industry and commerce and the building of shops, offices and factories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The European Court of Justice has not yet delivered its judgment; it is expected to do so in the early months of this year.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive the decision of the European Court of Justice on the case raised by the Commission on the levying of value added tax on spectacles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The judgment of the European Court is expected fairly soon.

Occupational Pensioners

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if people with occupational pensions, such as teachers, who are not working but not yet on a retirement pension, will receive a backdated sum uprating their pensions in line with those on state retirement pensions and benefits who are due to receive a backdated sum due to a miscalculation in the benefit uprating of April 1987.

Alternative Sources of Energy

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary Energy what estimate he has of the cont renewable sources of energy to (a) electrica (b) overall energy supply in the years (i) 200

Mr. Michael Spicer: Hydro power co equivalent of about 2 million tonnes of coal the United Kingdom energy supply per quantities of electricity are also generate power and landfill gas. In addition, some h renewables have now become established as attractive and are beginning to make a sm contribution. This overall position is not change significantly by 2000; the contributio beyond is unpredictable since it will depend upon economic circumstances and the success of the research and development we are currently conducting.

The appraisal of a wide range of energy technologies considered to be relevant for the United Kingdom was published in July as Energy Paper 54. The background papers prepared by ETSU for this study have also been published as ETSU R43: these contain estimates of both the technical potential and the potential contribution for all the renewable technologies. Copies of both publications are in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for encouraging the commercialisation of biomass energy; and if he has any plans for joint initiatives with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has research, development and demonstration programmes on biomass energy. These programmes embrace a range of projects from assessment studies to design, development and field trials. Where biofuels are already being developed and exploited by industry, no Government support is envisaged. Some biofuels, though considered to be economic now, are not yet being used to a significant extent; these are being demonstrated through my Department's energy efficiency demonstration scheme. Support is also being given under the biofuels programme for work which would not otherwise be undertaken; for example, to improve equipment and techniques for biomass use so that these can become economic and commercially acceptable.

No joint initiatives are planned with other Government Departments, although we shall continue to consult them and industry through advisory committees and other means as appropriate.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his proposals for encouraging the commercialisation of wind energy; and if he plans any joint initiatives with the Department of Trade and Industry and Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is continuing to press ahead with its research and development programme on wind energy which is intended to provide a basis for commercial exploitation of this resource by the late 1990s.

The programme is being carried out in collaboration with the generating boards and with a number of major British companies active in the wind energy field, which have already established significant export opportunities for their products.

No joint initiatives are planned with other Government Departments, although we shall continue to consult them through advisory committees and other means as appropriate.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what grants or incentives are currently available to members of the public who wish to utilise wind energy, hydro power, passive solar heating and biomass energy; and if he has any proposals for further grants or incentives.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is supporting comprehensive research, development and demonstration programmes aimed at exploiting the United Kingdom's significant renewable energy sources. The Department's programmes are aimed at producing economically competitive and environmentally acceptable renewable technologies which can compete in the market. There are no grants currently available to members of the public who may wish to utilise renewable energy and we have no plans to introduce grant aid for renewable sources. The renewable technologies would not be best served in the long term by distorting the market by grant aid or other subsidies for their use.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what grants or incentives are currently available to industrial concerns which wish to utilise wind energy, hydro power, passive solar heating and biomass energy; and if he has any proposals for further grants or incentives.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is supporting comprehensive research, development and demonstration programmes aimed at exploiting the United Kingdom's significant renewable energy sources. The Department's programmes are aimed at producing economically competitive and environmentally acceptable renewable technologies which can compete in the market. The Department of Trade and Industry, through its support for innovation scheme, makes funds available to industry for highly innovative research and development projects in this area. The European Commission offers grants for research and development and for demonstration projects for the renewable technologies. There are no grants available to industrial concerns which may wish to use renewable energy and we have no plans to introduce such measures.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for the commercialisation of passive solar heating in buildings; and if he plans any joint initiatives with the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department supports a comprehensive research and development programme on passive solar heating and lighting in both domestic and non-domestic buildings. Its aim is to encourage the commercial integration of passive solar design into the United Kingdom energy economy by the early 1990s. To do this, the programme gathers information on the benefits of passive solar design which, when incorporated with other energy efficient design techniques, can significantly reduce the energy requirements of buildings. This information is obtained from a series of design studies, field trials and studies of the relevant markets for the technology.

Increased emphasis will be given over the next few years to technical transfer, with the results of our programme put in a form that it is intended will influence building designers, developers and users. Over the next three years a wide range of design handbooks, housing layout guides, books and technical reports will be published. In addition we are examining a number of innovative technical transfer techniques which will further promote the take-up of this technology.

No joint initiatives are planned with the Department of Trade and Industry, but we shall continue to consult it, and other Government Departments, through advisory committees and other means as appropriate.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of staff employed in his Department are engaged in work related to (a) energy efficiency, (b) renewable sources of energy, (c) nuclear fusion, (d) the fast breeder reactor and (e) other nuclear issues.

Mr. Parkinson: Staff directly employed on energy efficiency are some 6 per cent. of total staff, those on renewables are between 1 and 2 per cent., and those on nuclear some 5 per cent. The figure for nuclear represents staff in atomic energy division. It would be misleading to break down this percentage into time spent on individual projects, since this varies significantly over time.

UKCS (Drilling)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current levels of drilling activity on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The total number of well starts during 1987 was 298. This is 12 per cent. above the level of 1986 when 266 wells were drilled.

A breakdown of these figures is as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computers

1. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much Britain's share of world trade in computers changed between 1979 and 1986; and what was the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Butcher: Between 1979 and 1986 Britain's share of all OECD countries' exports of computers fell by about half from 13·5 per cent. to 6·5 per cent.

This was against a background of a fivefold increase in Japan's share and substantial falls in the shares of other major exporters such as the United States and France.

Nevertheless, our exports of computers are worth over £1,000 million each year and we are the fourth largest exporter among OECD countries.

27. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the trade balance in computers changed between the second quarter of 1979 and the second quarter of 1987; and what was the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Butcher: Britain's trade balance in computers, as measured by the ratio of our exports to our imports fell by about 40 per cent. between 1979 and 1986. Japan's ratio rose by over 800 per cent. and that of the United States fell by 80 per cent. Excluding Japan, the ratio for OECD countries as a whole fell by 27 per cent.

53. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the percentage of Britain's domestic market met by imports of computers changed between 1979 and June 1987; and what are the comparable figures in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Butcher: Data for international comparisons are not available. For the United Kingdom information is available only up to 31 March 1987. The ratio of the value of imports to home demand was 89 per cent. in 1979 and 101 per cent. in the year ending March 1987. The value of imports is distorted by the inclusion of imports for re-export.

Regional Aid

9. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish his White Paper on regional aid; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's review of regional policy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We published yesterday a White Paper following a review of my Department's activities, including regional policy.

21. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about his plans for regional development.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Changes in regional industrial policy were announced yesterday. I have no doubt that we shall receive a number of representations about them.

Treeton Enterprise Centre

13. Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what number of jobs is likely to be created at the Treeton enterprise centre he visited in December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Treeton enterprise centre comprises 14 workshop units, employing 40 people to date. Fifty-five people are likely to be employed there by 1989.

Electronics

17. Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the trade balance in electronics changed between the second quarter of 1979 and the second quarter of 1987; and what are the comparable figures in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Butcher: Britain's trade balance in electronic goods, measured by the ratio of exports to imports, fell by 17 per cent. between 1979 and 1986.

Among the top 10 OECD exporters of electronic goods, Japan saw an increase of more than 60 per cent. in its export-import ratio, and the United States a fall of more than 40 per cent. over the period.

Excluding Japan, the largest exporter in this category, the average for the OECD countries was a fall of 25 per cent.

58. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much Britain's share of world trade in electronics changed between 1979 and 1986; and what was the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Butcher: Data on world trade are not readily available. Information on OECD countries' shares of total OECD exports are in the table.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

18. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the future role of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State yesterday announced the conclusions of a review of some aspects of competition policy, including some aspects of the MMC's work. The MMC will retain its current role, but the Government expect that it will be possible to make further progress in cutting the length of time taken by merger investigations.

South Korea

19. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current value of exports to South Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest figures available show that for the 10 months January to October 1987, our exports to South Korea amounted to £350 million, an increase of 50 per cent. over the corresponding period in 1986.

Mechanical Engineering

23. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the trade balance in mechanical engineering changed between the second quarter of 1979 and the second quarter of 1987; and what was the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Atkins: Britain's trade balance in mechanical engineering goods, as measured by the ratio of our exports to our imports fell by 25 per cent. between 1970 and 1986. The average fall among OECD countries was 16 per cent. Among the top 10 OECD exporters of mechanical engineering goods, Japan saw an increase of nearly 40 per cent. in its export-import ratio and the United States saw a fall of nearly 60 per cent.

34. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the percentage of Britain's domestic market met by imports of mechanical engineering changed between 1979 and June 1987; and what was the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Car Imports

24. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the percentage of Britain's domestic market met by imports of motor cars changed between 1979 andd June 1987; an what are the comparable figures in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Atkins: Data on import penetration for OECD countries are incomplete and not available beyond 1985. In the United Kingdom, imports accounted for 51 per cent. of the value of sales of motor vehicles in 1985, compared with 41 per cent. in 1979, a proportionate increase of 23 per cent. Among those OECD countries for which data are available, including most major producers, there was an average proportionate increase of 29 per cent., ranging from 72 per cent. in the United States to a fall of 20 per cent. in Italy.

Accountancy Firms

25. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce legislation to enable accountancy firms to incorporate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Yes. We intend to remove the existing statutory prohibition on the audit of companies by corporate bodies when we implement the EC eighth company law directive. I placed a note giving further details in the Library on 10 December last year, in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page).

Civil Research and Development

28. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the level of research and development spending by Government and industry.

Mr. Butcher: It is my Department's intention to increase its support for its total research and development programme, including its support for EC research and development programmes.

My Department has recently undertaken a review of innovation policy and its conclusions were announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 12 January. The review concluded that the balance of existing innovation policy should be altered and that greater emphasis should be placed on encouragement of collaborative programmes and technology transfer. It also noted that the general scheme for providing innovation grant assistance to indivi companies should be ended, although small technology companies should continue to be encoura

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: British Steel and ICI have sent letters to my Department expressing concern a the proposed increases.

Manufacturing Industry

30. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on outlook for manufacturers costs.

Mr. Butcher: In his Autumn Statement my right Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast manufacturers' total cost per unit of output would ris 2 per cent. in 1988.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Du of Lancaster what was the deficit or surplus which United Kingdom experienced in manufactured trade (a) the EEC and (b) the rest of the world, in the r recent 12-month period for which figures are availa and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the table:

36. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duch Lancaster what effect he forecasts on the export manufacturing industries in 1988 arising from cur exchange rates.

Mr. Alan Clark: Exports depend on many factors in addition to exchange rates. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be making a new forecast at Budget time.

Textiles

31. Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the percentage of Britain's domestic market met by imports of textiles changed between 1979 and June 1987; and what is the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Atkins: The latest available data refer to 1985, when the level of import penetration in the United Kingdom was 42 per cent., compared with 28 per cent. in 1979, a proportionate increase of about 48 per cent. The average proportionate increase among the OECD countries was 2 per cent., ranging from an increase of about 60 per cent. recorded by the USA, on a very low level of penetration, to a fall of 9 per cent. recorded by Canada.

51. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the prospects for the textile industry in the calendar year 1988.

Mr. Atkins: Provided that United Kingdom textile firms remain competitive, the prospects for 1988 should be good.

60. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the trade balance in textiles changed between the second quarter of 1979 and the second quarter of 1987; and what was the comparable figure in the average, best and worst performing Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country.

Mr. Atkins: Data are not readily available on a quarterly basis. Information relating to OECD countries' trade in textiles is in the table.

Small Firms (Audits)

Mr. Maude: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 22 May 1986.

Direct Selling Association

33. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give assistance to the Direct Selling Association in its implementation of the voluntary code of practice recently agreed with the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Government welcome the Direct Selling Association's revised code of practice. Responsibility for enforcing and publicising the code lies with the association and its member companies. However my Department and the Office of Fair Trading will draw attention to the benefits of the code as suitable opportunities arise.

Mobile Telephones

35. Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding the introduction of a common European standard to the telecommunications industry enabling mobile telephones to be functional throughout the European Community.

Mr. Butcher: An agreement was reached in May 1987 in the European Conference of Posts and Telecommunications (CEPT) on the technology to be used for a Europewide mobile telephone network.

In parallel with this, a joint effort between operators and manufacturers is under way in the special mobile group of CEPT to define the detail of the technical standard.

It is planned that a Europewide mobile telephone service will be introduced in 1991.

Stokes and Poises (Metrication)

37. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to metricate stokes and poises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: It is already the case, since 1 January 1986, that these two units may be used only as supplementary indications. In accordance with Council directive 80/181/EEC on units of measurement, dynamic and kinematic viscosities are now stated in terms of pascal seconds and metres squared per second respectively which are metric units.

European Regional Development Fund

41. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, when he next meets his counterparts in the European Community, he will raise the subject of the reform of the European regional development fund.

Mr. Atkins: The ERDF is at present under general review in Brussels together with the Community's other structural funds. I therefore expect many discussions on this subject this year.

47. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the value of the grants allocated to England from the European regional development fund since its inception.

Mr. Atkins: £1,276 million.

Rubber and Plastics

Retail Sales

45. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of retail sales in October 1987 and 1986.

Mr. Butcher: The estimated values of retail sales were £8,120 million in the four-week trading period for October 1987 and £7,480 million in the corresponding period for 1986.

Toys (Safety Mark)

48. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy on efforts in the toymakers' industry to introduce a safety mark for toys.

Mr. Maude: The Government welcome and support the initiative of the United Kingdom toy industry to promote the safety of toys through the "Lion Mark" and other means.

Exports (Spain)

49. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of British exports to Spain in the first six months of (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom exports to Spain for the first six months of 1986 and 1987 were respectively £873·4 million and £1,056·9 million.

Consumer Protection

50. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce new legislation to protect consumers.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) on 18 November and to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 16 December.

In addition, the Government intend shortly to introduce regulations to implement the EC directive on misleading advertising. We are also considering proposals for regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 on misleading price indications.

Export Promotion

52. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to promote exports by small and medium-sized firms.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our existing services to exporters are designed to be of particular use to smaller companies: About 75 per cent. of companies that use them have fewer than 200 employees. The measures my right hon. and learned Friend announced yesterday include additional support for such companies. In particular, the consultancy assistance now available to companies with fewer than 500 employees is an important new initiative designed to help them plan their approach to exporting, and we are planning to introduce soon a repackaging of our export services which we think will meet more closely the needs of exporters, particularly the smaller or inexperienced exporter.

British Steel Corporation Stainless

54. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the of Lancaster if he will give the profits of Britis Corporation Stainless, Sheffield, for each of the years, respectively; and if he will make a statement Majesty Government's plans for the future of Briti Corporation Stainless.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: For reasons of com confidentiality, the BSC does not publish full accounts for individual businesses within the corpo Profit and loss figures for BSC Stainless, which ha in Sheffield and South Wales, are therefore not av As I indicated on 3 December, the Government in privatise BSC as a single entity, and the future Stainless will therefore be considered in the context as a whole.

Shipbuilding

55. Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Du Lancaster when he last discussed with his Eu counterparts the European Commission's propo "Shipbuilding — Industrial, Social and R Aspects"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: An early version of the Comm document "Shipbuilding — Industrial, Socia Regional Aspects" was tabled at the Octobe Industry Council. The most recent version, in proposals for the Renaval programme of assist shipbuilding closure areas, has yet to be fully disc

On 22 December last, during Industry discussion of the Resider steel areas programme, m hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Du Lancaster urged the early adoption of the R proposals for shipbuilding areas also. I hope tha programmes will be adopted early this year.

British Steel (Denationalisation)

56. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Chancellor of the of Lancaster if he will make a further statement detailed timetable for the denationalisation of Steel.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As I indicated on 3 Decemb Government intend to privatise BSC as soon as p subject to market conditions. The necessary legislati be introduced later in the current Session. No de have yet been taken, however, on the detailed timeta the privatisation.

Output

57. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the of Lancaster what information he has regarding the of the service industries and manufacturing between the second and third quarter of 1987.

Mr. Butcher: Between the second and third qua 1987 output of both service and manufacturing ind rose by 2 per cent. in volume terms.

British Steel

59. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss prospects for the industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No date has yet been fixed for our next meeting, but I expect to meet the chairman of British Steel on a number of occasions during 1988.

British Caledonian

61. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the implications for the areas of his Department's responsibilities of the latest development in the takeover attempts for the British Caledonian airline.

Mr. Maude: The proposed merger between British Airways and British Caledonian has been investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which concluded that the acquisition, having regard to proposals as developed by BA during the course of the inquiry, might be expected not to operate against the public interest. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has made it clear that he expects BA's proposals to be implemented in full.

Information Technology

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the professional information technology staff in his Department, including programmers, systems analysts and managers, are based in London and the south-east.

Mr. Butcher: Of the professional information technology staff engaged in administrative computing in the Department of Trade and Industry, 50 per cent. are based in London and the south-east.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the trainees for professional information technology posts within his Department are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Butcher: Of the trainees for professional information technology posts engaged in administrative computing in the Department of Trade and Industry, 37 per cent. are women and 22 per cent. are more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the professional information technology staff in his Department, including programmers, systems analysts and managers are (a) female and (b) more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Butcher: Of the professional information technology staff engaged in administrative computing in the Department of Trade and Industry, 33 per cent are women and 67 per cent. are more than 30 years of age.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many professional level information technology staff are employed by his Department, including programmers, s and managers; and how many trainees t posts.

Mr. Butcher: There are 457 profession tion technology staff engaged in administ who are employed by the Departmen Industry and of these 76 are trainees.

Departmental Responsibili

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor Lancaster if he will list in the Official R of his departmental responsibility w Scotland.

Mr. Atkins: In general, the respor Department of Trade and Industry ext and it has lead responsibility for policy some matters, notably regional in operational responsibility in Scotland l Ministers and Departments.

Pens (Safety)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor Lancaster (1) whether he will introduce l pen tops of the type that caused the death of Braunstone, Leicester;

(2) whether he will institute research pens available to schoolchildren;

(3) whether he will consult Biro Bic voluntary withdrawal by them from the with the type of tops which caused th Walker of Braunstone, Leicester.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. and learn the answer given in respect of his c Monday.

My officials will be monitoring the pro towards introducing safer models both t the pen top implicated in the death of I of other pen suppliers. I have no plans to legislation on pen tops, but suppliers are under the general safety requirement c Protection Act 1987, to supply consumer pens, which are reasonably safe having circumstances. Producers and importe subject to the product liability provisions come into force on 1 March.

Director General of Oftel

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Director General of Oftel; and what subjects he discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last met the Director General of Telecommunications on 18 November. We discussed a number of current and longer-term telecommunications issues.

Companies (Subsidiaries)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prevent companies from leaving subsidiaries out of their group accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We are considering possible changes to the law governing which companies have to be included in consolidated accounts, in the context of the EC seventh company law directive.

International Tin Council

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total expenditure incurred by Her Majesty's Government for legal and administrative costs of the International Tin Council since 25 October 1985.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 11 January 1988 at column 129.

Pacer Trains

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Pacer trains have been sold abroad to date.

Mr. Atkins: None to date.

Small Business Organisations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of small business organisations; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regularly meet members of the small business community and take note of their views on a wide range of issues.

Advertising Services (Report)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Lancaster when the report of the Monopolies an Commission on the supply of advertising s specialised magazines for campers, climbers an is to be published; and if he will make a statem

Mr. Maude: The report is published today.

The commission found that a complex existed in favour of Holmes McDougall L Magazine Ltd, Rambler Ltd. and Mountain Ltd. which are publishers of magazines int campers, climbers and walkers. These companie a policy of refusing to accept advertisement c information about the price of the goods adv their magazines.

The commission concluded that the operati policy by the publishers restricted or distorted co and amounted to an action by each of them whic against the public interest. The commission foun operation of the policy had three particular adve First, it has hindered or prevented reade magazines from making an informed choice of supplier according to the balance of their priorities between personal service and lower p

Secondly, it has restricted competition between specialist retailers and the mail order c which sell at lower prices. Finally, it has nar range of prices at which particular goods are of it has increased the average price level.

The commission has recommended that the of State should make an order which would unlawful for publishers of specialist magazines for campers, climbers and walkers to operate the refusing to accept advertisements containi information.

I accept the findings of this report and the con recommendation that an order should be made Fair Trading Act to remedy the detriments to interest. I am consequently arranging for the p shortly of a notice setting out the terms of the order and inviting interested persons who wish representations to do so.

Self-regulating Organisations

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Lancaster if he will make a statement about p recognising self-regulating organisations u Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: The Financial Services Act provides that the Securities and Investments Board may not recognise a self-regulating organisation without the consent of the Secretary of State. The Act also requires the Secretary of State to refuse his consent if he considers, after receiving and considering a report on the matter from the Director General of Fair Trading, that the rules of the organisation have, or are intended or likely to have, to any significant extent the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition or, if they have or are intended or likely to have that effect to any significant extent, the effect is no greater than is necessary for the protection of investors.

I announced that my right hon. and noble Friend had given leave to the board to recognise the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association on 14 December. He has now considered the rules submitted by the Association of Futures Brokers and Dealers (AFBD) to the board, and has received and considered a report on it by the Director General of Fair Trading. He has concluded that on the basis of the information presently available to him he does not consider that those rules have, or are intended or likely to have, to any significant extent the effect described above. He has therefore today given his consent to the board for the recognition of AFBD.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 18 December 1987.

Mr. Maude: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, agreed the key elements of a directive on the provision of non-life insurance services. This represents significant progress towards a free market in financial services within the Community. The Council also agreed directives on member states arrangements for the inspection of laboratories to verify compliance with good laboratory practice; on the rules governing the classification, packaging and labelling requirements for dangerous preparations; and establishing a mandatory range of quantities in which spirit drinks and sparkling wines must be sold. It discussed proposals for directives on member states laws on trade marks and on the disclosure of major shareholdings in listed companies.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of all the people appointed to public bodies by his Department who are currently in office, giving for each the office concerned and the date of appointment.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 12 January 1988]: This information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Centre for Exploitation of Science and Technology (CEST), which will operate as a completely independent body, is jointly funded by contributions from industry and Government. The Department of Trade and Industry, with the Department of Education and Science and the Advisory Council on Science and Technology are together providing £1 million over five years. The main contribution, however, is from industry with some 18 companies already committing £5 million to the centre's launch. Other companies are expected to join once the centre is underway.

I welcome the setting up of CEST as an important step in helping to create the conditions in which United Kingdom companies can exploit opportunities for innovation. I expect it to do this by improving industry's access to the most up-to-date information on trends and developments in science and technology from around the world and by helping to bring together the scientific community, industry and the relevant parts of the Government.

DEFENCE

Falklands Campaign

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the relationship between the benefits paid to those injured in the Falklands campaign and to their families, to those paid to the families of those killed or similarly injured in Northern Ireland; how much would be paid in each case to (a) a man losing a leg and (b) a widow left with two young children; and what are the payments made for a comparable injury or death resulting from military action in any other area of the world.

Mr. Freeman: The range of benefits available under the provisions of the armed forces pension scheme in respect of those killed or injured as a result of duty in Northern Ireland, or in any other area of the world, are the same as for those of casualties of the Falklands campaign. Actual amounts payable vary according to the rates of benefit in force at the date of death in service or invaliding from service.

Benefits payable under the scheme in the event of death attributable to service vary according to rank. Those payable in respect of attributable injury which results in invaliding from service vary according to rank and degree of disability and, in certain circumstances, may also be affected by length of service given. Examples of benefits payable in 1982, that is at the time of the Falklands campaign, are as follows:

a. On attributable invaliding, after four years reckonable service, with total loss of one leg:

	Private (and equivalent) £	Captain (and equivalent) £
Service Pension	[1]1,447	[1]5,267
Lump Sums	2,974	5,839

[1] Index-linked from date of award.
[2] Per annum.

b. On attributable death in service, for a widow left w children in her care:

	Private (and equivalent) £	(
Forces Family Pension	[1][2]3,405
Lump Sums	7,435

[1] Index-linked from date of award.
[2] Per annum.

Additional benefits would also be payab war pension scheme administered by the De Health and Social Security.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State how much money has been donated to the So Fund since its inception; how much has bee in each year for (a) the welfare of those wh a result of the Falklands conflict and (b) th those who continue to work in the arduous c the South Atlantic; and how much money re fund.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent report pub trustees, a copy of which was forwarded to t Member with my letter of 30 October 1987, 31 October 1986, £15,168,652 in donation received. Accounts for the fund's financial ye October 1987 have not yet been published.

The annual reports show that grants hav for each of the fund's accounting periods Within the figure for the period ending 31 O certain grants were made for the welfa continuing to defend the Falkland Islands page 6 of the trustees' annual report for 198

Grants

1 November 1983-31 October 1984
1 November 1984-31 October 1985
1 November 1985-31 October 1986

As at 31 October 1986 the balance i £3,498,012.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State if he will publish a table giving for the Roy Royal Marines, the Army, the Royal Air For Fleet Auxiliary and RNSTS, and the Mercha following information about the Falklands w Atlantic Fund: (1) the number who died: (a) without dependants, (2) the number who were with and (b) without dependants, (3) the tot from the fund to individuals who had been or of each service, (4) the total distributed from families of those who died in each service amount given to each of the services for gen the terms on which this was given.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers killed tot follows:

	(a) Totals
Royal Navy	86
Royal Marines	27
Army	123

	(a) Totals	(b) With dependants
RAF	1	1
RFA/RNSTS	10	6
Merchant Navy	6	5
Chinese unofficials	2	2

There were 777 service and civilian casualties arising from the conflict. This figure is increasing as further disabilities come to light. It is not possible to say how many of the injured had dependants as this information is not held centrally.

As regards any analysis of grants by service or to families of those who died, the trustees of the South Atlantic fund have not published such data.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the South Atlantic Fund had sufficient money to help widows so that they would be as well off as they would have been had their husbands not died;

(2) what assumptions were made about the income that would have been earned had the man concerned not died, in calculating the amount paid to widows of those killed in the Falklands conflict; and for how many years it was assumed that this income would have lasted.

Mr. Freeman: The aim of the trustees, within the framework of charity law and the assets of the fund, has been to help all those who suffered or were bereaved to live, as far as possible, the kind of life they might have expected had the conflict not taken place. In considering grants to widows the trustees have had to bear in mind both the earnings potential of their deceased husbands and the long-term needs from the fund of those men who suffered injury.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been means-tested by the South Atlantic Fund before a grant was made; if this is universal; what income and capital is taken into account; and if there were objections to means testing.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the trustees. However, I understand that there has been no general means testing, though the trustees have taken into account state pensions and benefits but not personal assets or personal insurance and other similar personal provision.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if, when the South Atlantic Fund is closed and the residual assets transferred to the service benevolent funds, he will ensure that each service gets money according to the numbers belonging to it that were injured or killed in the Falklands conflict;

(2) if he will request the trustees of the South Atlantic Fund to ensure that, when monies are transferred on the closure of the fund, they will not be greatly in excess of what will be needed to meet all due claims from beneficiaries in perpetuity.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters for the trustees who have decided to extend further the life of the fund to not later than July 1989.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints have been received from beneficiaries of the South Atlantic Fund regarding the criteria for grants, the method of assessment and the method and timing of pay; what was their nature; and what response was made.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters for the trustees.

Training Land

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many acres of land in the United Kingdom are currently used for the purposes of military training.

Mr. Freeman: The area of United Kingdom land used for military training, ranges and camps totalled 459,318 acres as at 1 April 1987, the latest date for which complete figures are available. This figure includes both land and foreshore and 81,000 acres which MOD has rights over only.

Land Disposal

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many acres of land held by his Department have been disposed of to local authorities or private developers for the purpose of home construction in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that records are not maintained in the form required that would enable this information to be provided. I can, however, say that between 1 April 1982 and 1 April 1987 the Defence estate has been reduced by 21,047 acres.

Departmental Land

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail by (a) grade and (b) location all listed properties on land held by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the latest estimate of the acreage of all land belonging to, or used by, his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The figures for Ministry of Defence land holdings in the United Kingdom at 1 October 1987 are as shown:

Freehold	553,055
Leasehold	39,482
Rights only	93,086

The Ministry of Defence owns virtually no land overseas but some 309,000 acres are either made available to the Department by host Governments or leased; the Department additionally has rights of access over 197,600 acres.

Service Personnel (Hirings)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give details of the machinery by means of which serving members of the armed services are hired for activities associated with private individuals, companies and associations;

(2) if he will give details of the amounts received from the hire of serving members of the armed services during the most convenient accounting period.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 12 November 1987 at columns 304-5.

Private Security Companies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid by his Department for services provided by private security companies in the most recent available period.

Mr. Sainsbury: For the year 1987 the value of centrally placed contracts with private security companies is expected to be in the order of £1·2 million.

Information on contracts placed locally is not held centrally. However, these will be of very low value.

Private Landlords

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what annual rents have been paid out by his Department to private landlords in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: I regret the information is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, figures for each financial year from 1982-83, the earliest for which detailed information is immediately available, show MOD paid out the following amounts as rent or other related charges for married quarters, land and other buildings hired in the United Kingdom and overseas.

1982-83	61·442
1983-84	59·549
1984-85	67·814
1985-86	72·361
1986-87	85·590

BP Share Launch

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply of 12 November 1987, Official Report, column 306, the sum of £2,293 has now been recovered from the publicity company involved in the BP share launch ceremony.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. The sum of £2,293 has now been recovered from BP.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Community Care

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet received Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care.

Mr. Newton: No.

Nursing Training

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money in real terms expressed at constant prices has been spent on nursing training in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

1977-78	498
1978-79	479
1979-80	479
1980-81	503
1981-82	490
1982-83	482
1983-84	480
1984-85	453
1985-86	441

Notes:

The figures for each year are estimates made up from two elements

(a) The expenditure of English Regional Nurse Training Committees (for the years 1977-78 to 1982-83) and the grants made to the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health visiting for salaries of nurse teachers and other training costs (for 1983-84 to 1986-87).

(b) The salaries and superannuation costs, but not national insurance costs, of learners paid by Health Authorities. These salary costs do not take account of the service contribution made by learners during training which varies according to the particular course and the School of Nursing.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will procure from North West Thames regional health authority estimates available to them from the strategic plan of the Paddington and North Kensington district health authority of the number of beds needed for AIDS patients in 1992, for publication in the Official Report.

Mr. Newton: The district health authority has not yet published figures for beds required in 1992 for AIDS patients. However, I understand that work is well advanced on the production of a further draft strategic plan which has yet to be approved for issue by the health authority. Should my hon. Friend wish to pursue the matter further, he may wish to contact the chairman of the Paddington and North Kensington authority direct.

No Smoking Day

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for how many years the Health Education Authority has retained the public relations company, Peter E. Firth and Co., for the promotion of National No Smoking Day;

(2) what fee is to be paid by the Health Education Authority to the public relations company, Peter E. Firth and Co., for the promotion of National No Smoking Day;

(3) what expenses have been agreed to be paid by the Health Education Authority to the public relations company, Peter E. Firth and Co., for the promotion of National No Smoking Day 1988;

(4) how many public relations consultants were asked to tender for the contract to promote National No Smoking Day 1988.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the National No Smoking Committee, which is composed of a wide range of charitable and public bodies including the Health Education Authority, has retained the public relations firm Peter E. Firth and Company since 1984 for the promotion of National No Smoking Day. The firm was invited with two others to tender in 1986, when it was awarded the contract for the 1987 and 1988 events. The fees and expenses to be paid in 1988 are a matter for the committee.

South Tees Health Authority (Urology Department)

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the length of the waiting lists in the urology department in the South Tees health authority in the current year and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: The requested information is given in the table, together with in-patient cases treated during each year.

Toxic Distress Allergies

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to ensure that general practitioners are up to date in modern toxic distress allergies and environmental illnesses.

Mr. Newton: The management of allergies and environmental illnesses feature in the undergraduate medical curriculum and in vocational training for general practice. Established general practitioners decide how best to keep their knowledge up to date; they may also refer patients to physicians specialising in allergic disorders and specialists in occupational medicine.

Private Hospitals (Unused Capacity)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake measures to encourage the National Health Service to explore unused capacity in the private hospital section.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities are encouraged to consider the use of non-National Health service health care provision where this would be a cost-effective way of providing NHS services. In 1986, patients from 121 health authorities received treatment from non-NHS health care institutions. As part of this year's waiting list initiative activity, health authorities have set up over 20 projects, treating approximately 2,700 patients, with non-NHS providers. In October 1987 my right hon. Friend contributed the foreword to a district health authority by district health authority directory of private acute hospitals, produced by BUPA and distributed throughout the NHS; this provided essential information for NHS managers considering the use of non-NHS facilities. We have supported two pilot schemes (in the Trent and West Midlands regions) involving BUPA in negotiating with non-NHS hospitals for the treatment of NHS patients under contract. The waiting list fund for 1988-89 has been increased from £25 million to £30 million. As part of the initiative for the coming year, we are encouraging DHAs to consider worthwhile projects which use facilities beyond their own, including the private sector.

Late Abortions

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and what proportion of late abortions in England and Wales are for women resident in Scotland.

Mr. Newton: There is no universally accepted definition of late abortion. However, the number of notifications of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 on women usually resident in Scotland, carried out in England and Wales at 21 completed weeks gestation and over, for 1986 is 46, which represents 1·69 per cent. of all abortions at this gestational age carried out in England and Wales.

Capital Schemes (North-West Region)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many capital schemes of over £1 million (a) have been completed and (b) are under construction, in the National Health Service north-west region since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally on health building schemes, each cost over £1 million, for north-western region shows that 37 schemes have been completed since 1979 and nine more are currently under construction.

Married Couples (Capital Cut-off)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to change the provisions of the Social Security Act so that the capital cut-off for a married couple is no longer subject to the same £3,000 limit as a single person.

Mr. Portillo: It is a long-established principle of income-related benefits that a married couple living together are treated as a single financial unit. It would be both impractical and costly to treat all adults as individuals for benefit purposes. The capital cut-off which applies to each financial unit is to be raised to £6,000 from April when income support replaces supplementary benefit. An income of £1 a week will be assumed on capital between £3,000 and £3,250 and a further £1 a week for every band of £250 held up to £6,000. The same level will also apply to housing benefit and family credit.

Hospital Projects

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital projects costing at least £1 million have been started and completed since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally shows 25 health building projects, each costing over £1 million, have been started and completed since 1979.

Health Authorities (Audits)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to require health authorities to be audited by independent auditors appointed by the Audit Commission with a duty to report on the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which they manage and deploy their resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so, but officials are in close touch with officers of the Audit Commission about ways of developing the National Health Service audit function.

The Secretary of State is required by the National Health Services Act 1977 to appoint auditors for the statutory audit of the accounts of health authorities. The statutory auditors, who include five major firms of commercial auditors, work to standards which we have approved and which are fundamentally the same as the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies standards, adapted and extended as necessary for application to the external audit of health authorities. The primary duty placed on the auditors is the certification of the annual accounts, but the standards include responsibility for ensuring that health authorities have adequate arrangements for achieving economy, efficiency and effectiveness in their deployment of resources through testing the adequacy of health authorities' systems for achieving value for money.

The activity of the statutory audit branch is examined each year by the Comptroller and Auditor General who, in addition to obtaining assurance about the certification of the annual accounts, also reviews and takes into account the value for money audit when making his own inquiries into the deployment of NHS resources.

Single Payments

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown for each of the last four years for which figures are available of single payments made to the following categories of claimants from his Department's Brighton office: pensioners, single parents and long-term unemployed.

Mr. Scott: I regret that figures for single payments made to single parents and to the long-term unemployed are not kept by local offices. Figures for single payments made to pensioners from the Brighton DHSS office are as follows:

Year	Number	Amount £
April 1983—April 1984	680	44,925
April 1984—April 1985	1,132	58,755
April 1985—April 1986	1,471	78,045
April 1986—April 1987[1]	[1]1,683	[1]101,007

[1] The figures for 1986-87 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify the average size of single payments made to claimants from his Department's Brighton office for each of the last four financial years together with details of how many payments were made in the following bands: £0 to £50, £50 to £100, £100 to £150, £150 to £200, £200 to £250, £250 to £300, £300 to £350, £350 to £400, £400 to £450, £450 to £500 and over £500 for each of those years.

Mr. Scott: Details of how many single payments were made in each of the bands quoted is not kept.

During the last four financial years the average size of each single payment made by the Brighton DHSS office was as follows:

Financial year	Average amount of payment £
1983-84	65·77
1984-85	61·84
1985-86	71·64

[1] The figure for 1986-87 is provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details for the last four years for which figures are available of the number of single payments made by his Department's Brighton office for (a) household furniture, (b) clothing, (c) bedding and (d) replacement household equipment, and as a result of urgent payments made to replace domestic and household goods affected by natural disasters (fire, flood and so on).

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultation was undertaken by his Department with local authorities and welfare organisations to determine local needs and the formula by means of which the balance was determined between grants and loan budgets under the social fund for 1988-89 for each local office of his Department.

Mr. Scott: The division of the national social fund budget between grants and loans was based on research carried out on our behalf by the social policy research unit. An explanation of the basis of social fund allocations to local offices for 1988-89 is available in the Library. In deciding community care grant allocations for future years we will be carrying out a local consultation process, the precise details of which will be announced closer to the time.

Manor Hospital, Walsall

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the extension to the Manor hospital, Walsall is now to be opened for full use; and if there are any financial reasons for delay.

Mrs. Currie: The timing and opening of new capital schemes is a matter for the regional and district health authorities to determine in the light of available resources. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands RHA for the information he seeks.

Radiotherapy Unit, Southend

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a decision on the proposal by the North East Thames regional health authority to close the radiotherapy unit in Southend; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We hope to make a decision as soon as possible.

Eraldin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library any information ICI gave his Department regarding the level and total of payments it made for each type of adverse reaction that occurred from the drug Eraldin.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 2 November 1987]: We have found no record that ICI informed the Department of the details of payments made under the Eraldin voluntary compensation scheme. Certain information about payments was given by ICI in confidence under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, but cannot be disclosed without a breach of that confidence.

Hospitals

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how the nursing establishment for individual hospitals is computed; and what methods are used to refine such computations from time to time.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for individual health authorities to determine.

Glaucoma

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the exact number of sufferers of glaucoma whose final diagnosis resulted from initial detection during the course of a National Health Service sight test in each of the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number, and cost at current and at 1987 prices to the National Health Service, of agency nurses employed for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: [holding answer 14 December 1987]: The information requested is given in the table.

Agency Nursing and Midwifery Staff[2] (whole-time equivalent) as at 30 September		Expenditure[1] on Non-NHS Staff (Agency, Etc.)—Nursing	Per annual accounts £000	At 1986-87 prices £000

Nurses and Midwives

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Services what is the number of (a) nurse (b) midwives whole-time equivalents, excluding staff, in each district health authority.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 14 December 1987] information is given in the tables:

Ancillary Staff

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give, for each year since 1979, the average number of whole-time equivalent ancillary staff employed per unrestricted principal in general practice in England and Wales;

(2) if he will give the total and a breakdown for each family practitioner committee, for the last full year for which figues are available of (a) the average number of whole-time equivalent ancillary staff per unrestricted principal in general practice and (b) the number of unrestricted principals in general practice who employ less than their full entitlement under the ancillary staff scheme of two whole-time equivalent ancillary staff.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 December 1987]: Information on employment of ancillary staff by individual doctors and on ancillary staff in general is not available in the form requested. In respect of ancillary staff in the ancillary staff scheme the information as at 1 October each year is as follows:

Dalkon Shield

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the Dalkon shield was withdrawn in Britain; when his Department circulated advice of its withdrawal; what action was recommended to them; what efforts were made to inform women using the shield of the risks of side effects; and whether there was any media advertising or leafleting in doctors' surgeries or family planning clinics to inform women;

(2) if he will estimate the number of women currently using the Dalkon shield;

(3) if, when a medically related device is withdrawn because of side effects, he will make it his policy to place advertisements in national newspapers to in term users of the withdrawal and to urge them their general practitioners;

(4) how many regional health authorities recall systems for women using the Dalkon what was the departmental advice to health a

(5) if he will make representations to A. H allow those making a late application for co because of damage from the Dalkon shield to cases considered;

(6) what discussions were held with A. H. manufacturer of the Dalkon shield, regardi advertising campaign warning against continu shield; and what conclusions were reached;

(7) when the Committee on Safety of Medic him to approve the use of the Dalkon shield; was taken by his Department when the withdrawn from the United States market whose initiative it was withdrawn in Britain; a make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 January Dalkon shield was voluntarily withdra manufacturer, A. H. Robins, from the Unite market in July 1974 immediately after similar United States of America. The manufacture doctors of the withdrawal. Such devices had time been made subject to licensing control Medicines Act and therefore the Committee Medicines was not required to advise on app

I understand that, as a result of its investig United States, the Food and Drugs Administr insist on withdrawal of the Dalkon shield fro States market.

The 1974 handbook of contraceptive practi GPs and family planning doctors advised ann checks for users of intra-uterine devices gener Department did not consider that it was neces specific guidance or to undertake publicity NHS.

In 1980 and 1985, the manufacturers again doctors about the tracing of women still fit device and in 1985 the Committee on Safety o in an issue of "Current Problems" sent to referred to the possible risks of over-extende Dalkon shield, as with any other IUD, and manufacturer's advice for removal in case shield was still being worn. Advice sou

Department at that time from leading medical bodies, indicated that the number of women still using the device was likely to be very small.

In 1985 the manufacturers had discussions with Ministers about their plans for publicising the need for women still using the device to see their doctors. They placed advertisements in the women's press.

In 1986, at the direction of the United States District Court of Virginia, the manufacturers publicised, in the United Kingdom and other countries, the need to file any claims in connection with Dalkon shield by 30 April 1986, the date set by the court.

It would not be appropriate for the Government to intervene in a matter of litigation. Late claims are a matter for the courts and no guidance was issued to health authorities on this matter. I am aware, however, of initiatives taken over a number of years in one regional health authority, West Midlands, to recall the shield and latterly to advise about claims.

The Government's general position if side effe medical devices are reported is that the action wh needed will be considered in the light of the par circumstances of each case.

Nurses

22. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secret State for Social Services when he expects to recei report on nurses' pay and conditions in London.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 12 January 198 assume my hon. Friend is referring to the review of n services in London commissioned by the National H Service management board. The report of the study is now being finalised for submission in evidence nurses' pay review body.

ENERGY

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the estimated volumes of radioactive waste likely to be produced by a commercial fusion reactor in terms of cubic metres per gigawatt (e) year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority that a commercial fusion power reactor of the type now envisaged might produce 10-100 cu m of radioactive waste per gigawatt (e) year. This volume is similar to that produced by a fission reactor of similar volume, but its radioactivity reduces more quickly with time.

Fast Breeder Reactor Programme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when national representatives of the European fast reactor collaboration programme last met; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Representatives of the utilities, the design companies and the R and D organisations involved in the European fast reactor collaboration meet frequently and discuss a wide range of fast reactor issues.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of past and current spending proposals for renewable energy research and development supported by his Department over the last five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department's expenditure on renewable energy research and development over the last five years is as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	14·7

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

County Courts

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Attorney-General what changes in staffing there have been since 1983 in the county courts of (a) Bristol, (b) Exeter, (c) Yeovil and (d) Taunton.

The Attorney-General: Since 1983 the number of staff at the county courts at Bristol, Yeovil and Taunton have increased from 81 to 82, 19 to 20½ and 13½ to 14 respectively. The number of staff at Exeter remains unchanged. It is intended by the end of January 1988 to increase the staffing levels at Bristol, Exeter and Yeovil by two additional members of staff and at Taunton by one additional member of staff.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask th

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many investigations have been made under section 444 of the Companies Act 1985 and its predecessor, section 173 of the Companies Act 1948, in each of the last five years;

(2) how many civil servants at the Department of Trade and Industry, and how many others, are currently concerned in carrying out investigations under section 444 of the Companies Act 1985;

(3) what criteria he uses in deciding whether to hold an investigation under section 444 of the Companies Act 1985 into the ownership of shares in or debentures of a company.

Mr. Maude: The criteria for an investigation under section 444 of the Companies Act 1985 is that it appears to the Secretary of State there is good reason to investigate the ownership of any shares or debentures of a company, and that it is unnecessary to appoint inspectors for the purpose. The section empowers the Secretary of State or his officers to make the investigations; it does not empower him to appoint outsiders for this purpose. No investigations are currently in progress. Information sought about previous investigations cannot be provided without undue expense.

Sumrie Clothes plc

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry received the report of his inspectors into the affairs of Mr. Michael Hepker, Sumrie Clothes plc and related matters; if he will make the report public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The inspectors' report on Sumrie Clothes plc has not been received. When it is, a decision on publication will be taken.

Furniture Foam

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the statement by his Under-Secretary of State on 11 January, why he requires to seek the prior approval of the EEC Commission before implementing his proposals to restrict the use of foams in furniture in the interests of safety.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with directive EC 83/189 on the provision of information on technical standards and regulations, member states of the European Community submit new proposals to the Commission of the European Community in draft. This provides other member states and the Commission with an opportunity to comment on the proposals from the point of view of any possible conflict with proposals for EC legislation, and in case the proposed measure could constitute a new barrier to trade which could not be justified by reference to the need for protection of health and safety of consumers or workers. These established procedures will be followed in the case of the proposed regulations for improved fi domestic upholstered furniture. Although th has the power to prohibit the United Kin any regulations which it believes would b trade and can use the European Court to en it would be unlikely to do so in any c regulations would affect United Kingdom manufacturers alike, as these would.

Peckham Task Force

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor o Lancaster how many jobs have been c Peckham task force in (a) its first 12 mont and (b) its second 12 months of operation; of those jobs have been filled by (i) you (ii) local people.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Many north Peck projects create new jobs directly. Other j indirectly by businesses helped by task fo

- jobs in firms assisted by development fund;
- jobs created in voluntary or stat a result of task force assistance;
- jobs gained for residents as a r courses facilitated by the task f

In addition, the broad range of work be by the task force to increase skills and ent north Peckham residents feeds throu confident and employable people who c and hold down jobs in the wider London

It would involve disproportionate cost jobs resulting directly and indirectly from task force's work, and be misleading to in that can be readily counted.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor o Lancaster how much has been spent by th force; and in relation to any expenditure o estates have been the recipients of work p the task force.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since the Gove Peckham task force was set up in 1986, so of Government funds have been committe projects benefitting the residents of the are £1 million has come from funds availabl and £1·3 million from other Government addition, some £250,000 has been co private sector and £130,000 by the local a which have benefited from task force Peckham estate, where the task force improved lighting and the refurbishment Southwark adult education institute, Grove estate, on which projects to est facilities and to convert unused garages t small firms are in hand.

Support for Innovation

Mr. Speed: To ask the Chancellor o Lancaster if he will make a statement o support for innovation schemes for projects.

Mr. Butcher: As my right hon. and lea the House during his statement on 12 J decided that research and development stage of commercial exploitation should be the responsibility of the private sector. Therefore, the general schemes of single company support for innovation were closed to new applications at 18.00 hours on 12 January. Formal applications received before then will be appraised under the schemes as they existed previously. The schemes covered are support for innovation, the microelectronics industry support programme, support for software products support, and the fibre-optics and opto-electronics scheme.

Departmental Press and Public Relations

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of his Department's 1987-88 expenditure on press and public relations will be devoted to the production of a video to promote a new corporate image of his Department.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 January 1988]: In the context of the new measures recently announced to the House, we have produced a short video to help with staff communications, as is now common in many organisations in both the public and private sectors. This video is mainly concerned with the Department's new policies and services although it does also mention the importance of the Department's image with the business community. The production cost of this video is approximately £17,000. The Department's expenditure on press and public relations in 1987-88 is expected to be £1,123,000.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to change the corporate image of his Department; and what costs will be involved on (a) new stationery, (b) uniforms and badges and (c) the change of vehicle logos.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 January 1988]: We have introduced new letterheads in the Department to replace a wider range of diverse styles which were previously in use. An expensive survey would be needed to identify the exact costs of redundant stationery including those held locally by secretaries and typing pools. We estimate the purchase cost of redundant stationery held in the central stationery stores to be approximately £5,000. However, this will be offset to a significant extent by using this stationery internally or in scrap pads. It is our intention that in due course the new style will be reflected in other areas such as uniform badges and on vehicles. Planning is still in hand for this process but in many cases we will phase in the changes as part of normal renewal and maintenance programmes.

PRIME MINISTER

Yorkshire

Q31. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Yorkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Winterbourne Houghton

Q47. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Winterbourne Houghton.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Taxation and Family Policy (Departmental Co-ordination)

Q59. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the relevant Departments responsible for taxation and family policy, with particular reference to eligibility for mortgage interest tax relief as it applies to married couples, unmarried couples cohabiting and groups of individuals buying the same house together.

The Prime Minister: All Government Departments take account of the effects of legislation on the family and there is proper co-ordination of their work on policy changes. Mortgage interest tax relief is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer; the aspect to which my hon. Friend refers was discussed in the Chancellor's Green Paper "The Reform of Personal Taxation" published in March 1986 (Cmnd. 9756).

Tayside

Q71. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Tayside.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the proposals by the Commission for the mutual recognition of firearms certificates; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is no doubt referring to the proposal for a Council directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons. Member states must be free to carry out the checks necessary to preserve security and maintain law and order. We shall continue to make clear to other member states our belief that the proposal in its present form does not contain adequate safeguards to combat terrorism and limit the ability of criminals to acquire firearms illegally. As the proposal has yet to be formally discussed, it would not be appropriate to raise it at the next European Council.

Civil Service (Report)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what consultation has taken place between Her Majesty's Government, the First Division Association, and the permanent secretaries, in their capacity as affected employees, over Sir Robin Ibbs's report on the Civil Service.

The Prime Minister: The report to which the hon. Gentleman refers is still under consideration. The unions will be consulted if any change in terms and conditions of service is contemplated.

Africa (Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all those who accompanied her on her recent visit to Africa; and what their duties were.

The Prime Minister: On my visit to Africa I was accompanied by four officials and 11 support staff. It would not be appropriate to list the names and duties of those who accompanied me.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of her recent visit to Africa; and if it was all met from public funds.

The Prime Minister: It is too soon to give precise information on the cost of this visit. A provisional estimate is £80,000. The cost was met from public funds.

Publicity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is responsible for ensuring that the conventions governing the content of Government advertising and promotional materials are complied with.

The Prime Minister: Ministers in charge of Departments are responsible for ensuring that Government conventions on publicity and advertising are complied with.

Windscale Fire

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her reply of 11 January, Official Report, column 2, she will list all those papers about the 1957 Windscale fire withheld from release under the terms of the Public Records Act.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose the contents of closed records. The limited number of records concerned have been retained under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958 or closed for longer than 30 years under section 5(1) of the Act in accordance with the established criteria.

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 January.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Third World (Education Campaign)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to provide more funding for a public education campaign on Third world issues.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have decided to increase the Overseas Development Administration's annual grant to the Centre for World Development Education from £100,000 to £125,000 for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90. The Scottish Education and Action for Development also receives an annual grant of £6,000, and recently I agreed a contribution of £70,000 to the Council of Europe's public awareness campaign on north/south interdependence.

The widespread distribution to schools last year of our booklet "British Aid" is to be followed this year with the ODA's first video for schools on the aid programme.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Repossession

106. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the latest figures for property repossessions arising from mortgage default in 1987.

Mrs. Roe: The Building Societies Association has estimated that 21,950 properties in the United Kingdom were taken into possession by building societies in the year ending June 1987, 0·3 per cent. of the number of loans which were outstanding to the societies at the end of that period. It is estimated that 630 dwellings were taken into possession by English local authorities during the financial year 1985-86, the latest period for which an estimate is available. Corresponding information is not available from other lending institutions.

Severe Weather

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make special financial arrangements to assist district councils in the county of Durham in the event of severe weather conditions during the winter.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 17 December 1987 at column 617, and to my right hon. Friend's reply on 13 January 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold).

Rating Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the proportion of households in England which will be liable to pay above average community charge which are households with below average incomes.

Mr. Howard: In order for a community charge to be larger than the average of £224, local authorities in that area would have to be spending at least £47 per adult more than the estimated cost of a standard level of service. I estimate that in England 16 per cent. of households have below average incomes and live in such areas. Many of that 16 per cent. may be entitled to a rebate. This estimate is necessarily subject to a margin of error.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the proposed community charge for premises in enterprise zones.

Mr. Howard: Non-domestic property in enterprise zones will continue to be exempt from rates during the life of the zone. We propose to provide for a special method of valuing properties in enterprise zones, so that, when the zone comes to an end, rateable values will discount any element of rent payments which reflect the benefit of the rates holiday.

Individuals living in enterprise zones presently pay domestic rates and will be liable for the community charge in the same way as everyone else.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the detailed calculations for each local authority showing the assumptions about numbers of poll tax payers whose incomes will lead to payment of rebates, which led him to give a figure of £1,500 million for payment of rebates in his speech of 16 December 1987, Official Report, column 1117.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 11 January 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Raison) on 8 December at columns 98-99, for the basis on which my right hon. Friend made his estimate of a total rebate cost of £1,500 million.

It is not possible to make such estimates for individual local authorities since information about incomes at this level is available on a sample basis which is not adequate to make estimates at local level.

Supermarket Development (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the sale of land belonging to Nottingham city council for supermarket development without competing tenders being received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. One letter of objection about a proposed superstore development at Hyson Green, Nottingham, addressed to the leader of the city council and signed by 10 persons has been copied to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Council House Sales

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce proposals to abolish the cash-flow provisions affecting the right to buy council homes.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals" proposed that the cost floor rule under the right to buy should be abolished. The responses are still under consideration.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities will still be able to utilise the priority suppliers scheme under the arrangements for competitive tendering proposed in the Local Government Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 11 January.

Acid Rain

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information about the deterioration of forests due to acid rain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 18 December 1987, at column 795, to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams).

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of the percentage of the United Kingdom native tree species showing signs of acid rain die-back.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

The survey of forest health carried out by the Forestr Commission in 1987 included observations of oak, beec and Scots pine. The results are being analysed in relatio to levels and types of air pollution at each of the sites; n information is yet available to provide guidelines on th relationship between crown thinning and acid rain an other pollutants.

Treasure Trove

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for th Environment whether he has any plans to review the la on treasure trove; and if he intends to issue a consultatio paper.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has bee reviewing the arrangements for reporting and recording o archeological finds generally. We plan to issue consultation paper shortly.

Tree Survey

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for th Environment what representations he has receive concerning the desirability of a nationwide tree survey and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not received any suc representations. However, annual surveys of forest healt are carried out by the Forestry Commission. Variou surveys have been carried out, or are being carried ou into the effects of the great storm on 16 October 1987, bu these are confined to the affected area in the south-east o England.

Car Exhaust Emissions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for th Environment what proposals are being considered by hi Department for the reduction of emission of hydrocarbon and nitrous oxide from car exhausts.

Mr. Moynihan: As to standards which are already permitted within the European Community, I refer th hon. Member to my reply of 7 December, at column 20 to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr Carrington). We expect proposals from the Commissio shortly to allow tighter standards of controls over smal cars.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for th Environment if he will list the current emoluments to th chairmen and members of the residuary bodies for the fiv former metropolitan county residuary bodies.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Current remuneration (from 1 October 1987)

Chairmen
Greater Manchester Merseyside West Midlands	19,064
South Yorkshire Tyne and Wear West Yorkshire	17,330

Members
All members	6,107

Notes:

(i) One member of West Yorkshire residuary body receives a daily attendance allowance (currently £17·55) as an alternative to an annual salary.

(ii) Remuneration is subject to abatement, if applicable, in respect of public sector pension received.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers of meetings of each residuary body since 1 April 1987.

Mr. Chope: The number of full residuary body board meetings held during the period 1 April 1987 to 13 January 1988 was as follows:

Residuary body	Number of full Board meetings
London	34
Greater Manchester	9
Merseyside	18
South Yorkshire	9
Tyne and Wear	10
West Midlands	18
West Yorkshire	10

Local Income Tax

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Envoronment (1) if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) of 16 November 1987, Official Report, columns 183-185, he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of income tax payers he has assumed were resident in each rating authority, (b) the average level of income he assumed each income tax payer was earning and (c) the total number of income tax payers in England, the average level of income they were earning and the source of his information;

(2) if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) of 16 November 1987, Official Report, columns 183-185, he will give the exact relationship he assumed between changes in expenditure by a local authority and changes in grant when producing exemplifications of local income tax rates for each authority.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 January 1988]: The assumption about the relationship between expenditure and grant was described in the note covering the exemplifications placed in the Library on 12 November. Full equalisation of taxable resources was assumed. To calculate exemplifications on this basis it is unnecessary to make assumptions about the number of income tax payers or the average income, either for England as a whole or for each district and borough.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) of 16 November 1987, Official Report, columns 183-85, on local income tax, he will publish the figures he assumed for England for (a) the total amount of Government grant, (b) what part of Government grant was equivalent to the total paid in rate rebates and (c) the level of the national non-domestic rate in pence to two decimal places.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 January 1988]: A number of assumptions were made about such matters as the total amount to be raised from LIT, rebates, balances and the yield of an extra 1p income tax. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 23 November to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). It was unnecessary to make any additional assumptions about the total amount of Government grant. The Government's assumption about the level of the NNDR has been that, on the basis of actual poundages in 1987-88, it would be 224·11p.

Plutonium

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the transport by air of plutonium, plutonium oxide or plutonium nitrate produced at the Sellafield reprocessing plant; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The transport of all radioactive materials by air must comply fully with the national and international regulations governing this type of transport. The International Atomic Energy Agency is about to undertake a review of this particular issue, to decide whether any regulatory changes are required.

Fuller Peiser

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all consultancies carried out by the London-based agents Fuller Peiser since 1983 on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Chope: The Department is currently using Fuller Peiser as agents for the disposal of some of its property in London. I am not aware that the Department has placed other work with the firm since 1983.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all asset sales by the Department or its agencies managed by the London-based agents Fuller Peiser since 1983.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency is currently using Fuller Peiser as agents for the disposal of some of its property in London. No central record is kept of commissions by the Department's agencies, but we are aware that the firm was also retained as agents by Aycliffe and Peterlee new town development corporation to carry out the marketing for the disposal of the industrial assets of the Corporation.

TRANSPORT

Lenton Triangle Junction, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the closure by British Rail of a part of the Lenton Triangle junction, Nottingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the hon. Members for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and for Nottingham, North. It would not be appropriate to comment on these in view of his quasi-judicial position.

Nottingham-Bulwell-Mansfield Railway

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the opening of a railway line from Nottingham through Bulwell to Mansfield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the hon. Members for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and for Nottingham, North. As this possibility of reopening a passenger service between Nottingham and Mansfield through Bulwell is relevant to British Rail's proposal to close part of the Lenton Triangle junction, it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to comment in view of his quasi-judicial position.

M1 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve the speed of traffic flow along the M1 during carriageway repairs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are always looking for ways of improving traffic flow, consistent with safety of road users and the work force at roadwork sites. We aim to minimise delays by careful programming, improved traffic management and greater use of lane rental contracts which give an incentive for early completion.

Settle to Carlisle Railway

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the financial contribution to the running costs and maintenance of the Settle to Carlisle railway service which has been provided by North Yorkshire county council in 1987 and proposed for subsequent years.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that North Yorkshire county council is making no financial contribution to the maintenance and running costs of the Settle to Carlisle railway service in the financial year 1987-88, but is contributing £750 for publicity. I am awaiting confirmation of the council's position.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the financial contribution to the running costs and maintenance of the Settle to Carlisle railway provided by Cumbria county council in 1987 and as to what contribution is envisaged by Cumbria county council over the next two years.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that Cumbria county council is presently contributing £27,000 to support services on the Settle to Carlisle railway, and that that level is unlikely to change in the next two years, provided the line stays open for British Rail services. I also understand that the county council is contributing £2,000 for publicity in 1987-88. I am awaiting confirmation of the council's position.

Coach Drivers

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State Transport if he has any plans to change the conditi regarding the health of a coach driver before he obtain public service vehicle licence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The conditions, which are set in "Medical Aspects of Fitness to Drive" (published by Medical Commission on Accident Prevention), are k under regular review by the Secretary of State's honor medical advisory panels. Compliance is monito through an initial medical examination and regu mandatory checks for all PSV drivers from the age of

Pedal Cyclists

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State Transport how many persons have been killed or inju by pedal cyclists in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Statistics are available only pedestrians injured by pedal cyclists. They are as follo

Motorways (Hunting)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State Transport what advice he gives concerning hunt adjacent to motorways; and if he will make a stateme

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are not aware of any spec safety problems that this is posing or of ignorance on part of hunting interests about the dangers and need vigilance. The attention of the Fox Hounds Associati has been drawn to this in the past.

A30 (Honiton to Exeter)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State Transport why his decision on the route of any A improvement between Honiton and Exeter has not been announced; and what decision he has now reach

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering the respo to the public consultation held last year and other relev factors. We shall announce our preferred route as soon we have completed this.

Travel Statistics

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State Transport if he will show the most recent information the percentage of passenger journeys made by transp mode for each region in Great Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following information available from the 1985-86 national travel survey:

Percentage of journeys (all journeys over 1 mile)

Other public modes include coach tours and excursions, taxis and minicabs, air journeys (within Great Britain), and other public modes.

Other private modes include motor cycles, scooters and mopeds, bicycles, other private modes and walking (over 1 mile).

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, ignoring journeys to and from work of under 25 miles, he will show the most recent information available on the percentage of journeys made by (i) car-van, (ii) bus-coach, (iii) rail, (iv) aircraft and (v) other over distances of 25 to 50 miles, 50 to 100 miles, 100 to 150 miles, 150 to 200 miles, 200 to 250 miles and over 250 miles, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following information is available from the 1985-86 national travel survey:

Percentage of journeys

	Length of Journey
	25 to 50 miles	50 to 100 miles	100 to 150 miles	150 to 200 miles	200 to 250 miles	Over 250 miles

All Modes of Transport	100	100	100	100	100	100

Other public modes include coach tours and excursions, taxis and minicabs, air journeys (within Great Britain) and other public modes. It is not possible separately to identify air journeys.

Other private modes include motor cycles, scooters and mopeds, bicycles and other private modes.

Motor Cycles (Eye Protectors) Regulations

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the availability of eye protectors prescribed in the Motor Cycles (Eye Protectors) Regulations 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The supply of visors has improved through new manufacturers' products significantly increasing the numbers available. A drop in demand was reported in December but not all motor cyclists may yet have approved eye protectors. I urge all those riders who are in such a position to obtain them well before 1 April 1988.

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning possible difficulties in enforcing the Motor Cycles (Eye Protectors) Regulations at the present time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Association of Chief Police Officers expressed concern about the availability of approved eye protectors. This has led it to recommend that riders should for the time being be warned rather than prosecuted for not having approved eye protectors.

King's Cross Fire

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, following the preliminary hearing of 2 December 1987, he is in a position to announce where and when the formal investigation into the King's Cross underground fire will be held.

Mr. Channon: The formal investigation into the King's Cross underground fire will be held before Mr. Desmond Fennell OBE QC and will begin on Monday, 1 February 1988 at 10.30 am in Westminster Central hall, Storey's gate, London SW1H 9NU.

A second one-day preliminary meeting devoted to technical matters concerning the King's Cross underground fire, will be held before Mr. Desmond Fennell OBE QC, at 10.30 am on Monday, 25 January 1988 in Church house, Great Smith street, London SW1.

Both meetings will be held in public. Advertisements will be placed in the press.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the current administrative costs of the dock labour scheme and the individual administrative costs of each local board in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the income and expenditure account which is published in the annual report and accounts for the National Dock Labour Board and in the notes to the accounts which follow. The latest published figures, for the year ended 27 December, 1986, show that the board's management levy was maintained at 2¼ per cent. of the total leviable wage bill, and amounted to £4·3 million. Administrative costs for individual local boards are not made public.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Medomsley Prison

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether work on the new kitchen block at the premises of the former Her Majesty's prison at Medomsley, Derwentshire, has been completed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The building element of this work is nearing completion, but the kitchen equipment will not be installed pending a decision on the future role of this establishment.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the recently closed prison at Medomsley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's prison Medomsley, originally a detention centre, was temporarily brought into use as a category C training prison in June last year. The establishment was closed in October and the staff deployed to areas of pressing need in other prisons. The establishment is presently being surveyed with a view to assessing whether, and how, it should be redeveloped. A decision on Medomsley's future will be made when the results of the survey have been evaluated.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate a review of the administration of drugs in Her Majesty's penal establishments.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. This was one of the matters reviewed by the Social Services Committee in its Third Report in the 1985-86 Session. The use of medicines at all establishments continues to be monitored by the Director of Prison Medical Services.

Video Recordings Act 1984

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of convictions obtained for offences under the Video Recordings Act 1984 in respect of each year during which the Act has been in force.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 27 November at columns 365-66.

Arson (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of the Home Department how many alleged ar incidents of arson at holiday and second homes h dealt with by police forces in Wales since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form rec not collected centrally.

Drug Addiction (Report)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of Stat Home Department whether he will place a co drug addiction research initiative report, comp by Dr. Virginia Berridge, in the Library.

Probation and Community Service

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the weekly cost of supervising a person on probation and community service in England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. John Patten: In the financial year 1985-86 the weekly cost of supervision by the probation service in England and Wales was about £15 for a person on a probation order and about £13 for a person serving a community service order. These are estimates which depend on assumptions about the allocation of the time of probation officers and are approximate. The figures are derived from those published in "Probation Statistics, England and Wales" (table 12.3 of the latest issue, 1986), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the weekly cost of supervising a person in a probation hostel in England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. John Patten: The estimated weekly cost of accommodating a person net of residents' contributions in a probation/bail hostel in England and Wales in 1986-87, was £155·25.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for t Home Department (1) how many persons convicted of indictable offence in England and Wales in 1986 by magistrates' court had committed an offence whi involved violence;

(2) what percentage of persons sentenced to a period immediate imprisonment in 1986 in England and Wa had been sentenced to a period of six months or less.

Mr. John Patten: In 1986, there were 34,647 perso found guilty of violence against the person, sexual offen and robbery. There were 42,743 persons sentenced at courts to immediate imprisonment, of whom 49 per ce received sentences of six months or less. This informati can be found in table S1.1(A) of "Criminal Statisti England and Wales, Supplementary Tables 1986, volu 1" and in table 7.28 and 7.29 of "Criminal Statisti England and Wales 1986", (Cm. 233), respectively, cop of which are in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the costs of runn the prison service is published in the annual reports on work of the prison department, copies of which are in Library. The report for 1986-87 (Cm. 246) shows that average weekly cost of keeping a person in a pe establishment in England and Wales in that year was £ (see appendix 6, table D).

Mr. Khurshid Ahmad Malik

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department if his Department has been able return to Mr. Khurshid Ahmad Malik the Indian passp which was deposited with the Department in Septem and acknowledged on 21 October under the refere M565200, to enable him to return to his homeland af receiving private medical treatment, details of which h been sent to the Under-Secretary of State by Dr. S. Malik of Southend on Sea.

Mr. Renton: I regret that we have not been able to so. As Mr. Malik was told in the immigrat department's letter to him on 6 January, an exhaust search has not traced his passport. I acknowledge that t has caused Mr. Malik considerable inconvenience a extend the Department's apologies to him. The le recently sent him may, as it indicated, assist him in obtaining an emergency travel document from the Indian high commission. If the high commission is unable to issue a travel document we will consider what further action we are able to take.

I can assure my hon. Friend that strenuous efforts to locate the missing passport will continue. Staff are trained to treat passports and other documents with care and the incidence of loss of passports within the immigration department, which receives some 500,000 items of correspondence each year, many of which contain passports, is very small.

Remand

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what had been the longest time a person had been held in prison awaiting trial as of 31 October.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 December 1987]: According to such information as is held centrally, the longest period a person has been held in custody on 31 October awaiting or during his trial was just over 15 months. The trial was completed on 10 December 1987.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to introduce a unified business rate in Scotland.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the proposed business rate will take effect in Scotland; and when the Scottish business rate will be brought to the same level as in England.

Mr. Lang: The introduction of a uniform business rate applying throughout Great Britain cannot be considered until non-domestic property north and south of the border is valued for rating purposes on a comparable basis. The process of harmonising valuation practice is under way but is unlikely to be completed until after the 1990 revaluation. On the question of a separate uniform business rate for Scotland, I refer the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) to my reply to his question on 17 December at column 643.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of convictions obtained for offences under the Video Recordings Act 1984 in respect of each year during which the Act has been in force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table gives the number of persons against whom a charge was proved of an offence under the Video Recordings Act 1984, excluding offences under section 14 (which cannot be identified separately from other offences of forgery).

Unit Costs

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he last published in a written answer the unit cost of a particular system;

(2) when it became his practice not to publish project unit costs.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: The unit cost of a particular system was last published in a written answer on 6 July 1987, at columns 61-2. Information of a similar character was given on 2 November 1987, at column 609.

Last year the practice of publishing unit costs of selected equipments in the annual "Statement on the Defence Estimates" was reviewed. It had long been recognised that publication of prices paid for equipment by my Department could be inimical to the commercial interests of manufacturers in other markets, and representations from the manufacturers themselves confirmed that this was the case. My right hon. Friend accordingly decided to discontinue the publication of such figures. They will, however, be made available to the Defence Committee of the House each year on a classified basis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry's efficiency scrutiny of the Meat and Livestock Commission, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, has been discussed with the MLC which is taking action on a number of the recommendations it contains.

WALES

Public Inquiry (Swansea)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in the light of the existence of circular 44/87, he will undertake to review any findings of the inspector for the public inquiry into the application for executive houses at Murton lane, Newton, Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This appeal is one of those transferred by regulations to a planning inspector and my right hon. Friend has no power to intervene in the decision-making process other than by formally recovering jurisdiction. On present information, he does not believe that there is a case for taking such action. The guidelines on housing for senior management remain as set out in Welsh Office circular 30/86.

Agriculture Department, Ruthin

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the Welsh Office Agriculture Department, Ruthin, will remain open for the foreseeable future;

(2) if he will meet staff unions from the Agriculture Department office in Ruthin to discuss the prospects for closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: We have no plans to close the Ruthin divisional office.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretar Wales how many staff are employed at t Department office in Ruthin; how many c handles annually; and how many farms in n office is expected to service annually.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information r held centrally. The cancer treatmen Clatterbridge hospital, Wirral, are the resp Mersey regional health authority to which information should be directed.

Flooding

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretar Wales if he will introduce a system of hig or cheap loans to farmers in Wales for the works and buildings to alleviate the enterprises of persistent flooding; and if statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Grants of 30 per c favoured areas and 15 per cent. outside th areas are currently available to farmers facilities to prevent the flooding of agric watercourses if such works form part of ar under the agriculture improvement schem water authorities have permissive powers Drainage Act 1976 to undertake land dra protection works. I said in the House on at column 752, during the debate on the ef in Wales, that I would look into any prob drawn to my attention. I am still happy t

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals for works to alleviate persistent flooding on major roads in mid-Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In consultation with the county council and the water authority we are continuing to investigate the causes of persistent flooding of the A483 and A487 trunk roads in North Powys and to seek to identify cost-effective remedies where needed. Non-trunk roads are the responsibility of the county highway authorities.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to alleviate farm losses caused by flooding in the Severn valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Flood protection works are the responsibility of the Severn Trent water authority which, I understand, has a flood alleviation scheme for the confluence of the rivers Vyrnwy and Severn under initial consideration. Any works may be eligible for Government grant under the Land Drainage Act 1976. Otherwise farming is a commercial operation which should reasonably be expected to allow for the consequences of bad weather.

Milk

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh farmers are at present engaged in milk production; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of registered milk producers in Wales in December for each year since 1979 is shown in the table:

Registered milk producers in Wales in December

Farm Diversification Grants

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds have been made available for grants for farm diversification in Wales during 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is not anticipated that claims for grant will be made during the financial year.

Local Authorities (Vacant Land)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the amount of vacant land held by each Welsh local authority in 1974, 1979, 1983 and for each subsequent year; what percentage of the total land in each authority area and of the local authority's total land holding this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Grist: This information is not held centrally.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the relative percentages of training and work experience for participants on the community programme.

Mr. Lee: Agents and sponsors are responsible for designing their own programmes of work experience and training, and detailed information is not held centrally. However, the following information is provided from the latest (4th) community programme participants survey:

66 per cent. of participants were receiving on-the-job training at the time of the survey.

20 per cent. were receiving formal training at their place of work.

12 per cent. were receiving training away from their place of work but during work hours.

12 per cent. had received, or were receiving, training in their own time, of whom 60 per cent. were attending one day a week for an average 26 weeks.

There is some overlap in the figures, with many of those receiving on-the-job training receiving one of the other types of training.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of participants on the community programme is women (a) nationally, (b) in the county of Durham and (c) in Durham, North-West constituency.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to give the information in the precise form requested. During the 12 months ended 30 November 1987, the latest date for which statistics are available, the total number of entrants to the community programme was 272,697, of whom 70,356, or 25·8 per cent. were female. The corresponding figures for the county of Durham were 6,551, 1,670 and 25·5 per cent. Figures for the Durham, North-West constituency are not available.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give an estimate of how the change in the community programme from part time to full time is likely to affect the numbers of women applying for places.

Mr. Lee: The planned change in the community programme from part time to full time has been overtaken by the Government's decision that the community programme and a number of training programmes should be replaced by a new comprehensive training programme for unemployed adults. No detailed assumptions about the breakdown of those applying for places on the new programme have been made.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) why the Manpower Services Commission has declined to provide authorisation and funding for community programmes after 26 August; if he will provide guidance to the management of such schemes on the longer term arrangements they may make for recruitment and programmes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a further statement on the future of the community programme.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the House on 18 November that the community programme is to be replaced by a new adult training programme from September. I hope that most existing community programme managing agents will decide to take part in the new programme, which will offer, for the first time, a comprehensive package of assessment and training for long-term unemployed people. We are currently considering the Manpower Services Commission report on the new programme and my right hon. Friend expects to respond shortly to the chairman of the commission.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons were employed in connection with community programmes sponsored and financed by the Manpower Services Commission at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: On 30 November 1987, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 221,348 persons employed on community programmes.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the operation of the community programme in the Southend-on-Sea area.

Mr. Lee: The community programme is operating successfully in the Southend-on-Sea area, as it is elsewhere in the country.

Age Discrimination

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prevent age discrimination in employment.

Mr. Lee: The Government do not believe that legislation of this nature would be beneficial or practical.

Restart Scheme

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what percentage of those invited to attend restart interviews are women since the beginning of the scheme; and what is the total number of women approached;

(2) if he will publish up-to-date figures showing the outcome of interviews conducted under the restart scheme, classified by sex, covering the period from the introduction of the scheme in the same format used in the reply given on 10 December 1987, Official Report, columns 231-32, giving a breakdown of these figures to show outcomes for each three month or similar time period.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available.

MSC (Press Releases)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of press releases issued by the Manpower Services Commission in each month since August 1985.

Mr. Lee: The total number of press releases issued in each month includes those prepared and issued by the MSC press office and COI regional offices on MSC's behalf.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

14. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trend of public expenditure as a proportion of national income.

25. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trend of public expenditure as a proportion of national income.

Mr. Major: Public spending as a proportion of national income has been falling since 1982-83. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced plans in his Autumn Statement which will ensure that this trend continues.

19. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the White Paper on public expenditure.

Mr. Major: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper will be published at 11 am on Wednesday 20 January and copies will be available in the Vote Office.

43. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will describe the procedure and criteria used in determining the relative priorities accorded to the different programmes within the annual public expenditure planning total for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The public expenditure plans for 1988-89 announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement were determined by the Government in the 1987 public expenditure survey, in addition to the specific policy reviews which go on throughout the year. Briefly, the survey process involved a review by each departmental Minister of his spending programme. In the light of these reviews there was a discussion in Cabinet in July which determined the framework for bilateral discussions between departmental Ministers and myself in the autumn. The plans agreed at these bilaterals were endorsed by Cabinet in October.

Decisions on priorities are based on detailed analysis and assessment of programmes, particularly in the area of efficiency and value for money, but ultimately such decisions must be a matter of political judgment. In the 1987 survey the Government's policies set out in our general election manifesto were reflected in expenditure decisions — for example, the increases in planned spending on education, health and inner cities.

66. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trend of public expenditure as a proportion of national income.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton).

87. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the outturn for public expenditure in 1987-88; and what is his latest estimate of revenue.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement forecast for 1987-88 was for general Government expenditure of £172·8 billion and general Government receipts of £171·1 billion. More details are available in the 1987 Autumn Statement.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the likely savings in public expenditure as a result of the recent proposals of the efficiency unit.

Mr. Brooke: The efficiency unit proposals to which my hon. Friend refers are still under consideration.

Luncheon Vouchers

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to increase the level of tax exemption for luncheon vouchers.

Mr. Brooke: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the public sector borrowing requirement outturn in 1987-88.

21. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the public sector borrowing requirement outturn in 1987-88.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement forecast was for a PSBR in 1987-88 of £1 billion.

46. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the public sector borrowing requirement's outturn in 1987-88.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall).

North Sea Oil

20. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate expected North sea oil revenue from all sources for each year up to 1991.

Mr. Lilley: Projections of Government revenues from the North sea for 1987-88 were published in the Autumn Statement 1987 and, for later years, in the 1987-88 Financial Statement and Budget Report. Revised projections will be published at the time of the next Budget.

70. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the current taxation regime governing North sea oil activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: We have received representations from a number of representative bodies and companies. We have taken careful note of these representations, and keep the North sea fiscal regime under constant review.

Economic Growth

22. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of th Exchequer what has been the rate of growth in the Unite Kingdom economy since 1980; and how this compare with the figures for other major European Communit countries.

55. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of th Exchequer what has been the rate of growth in the Unite Kingdom economy since 1980; and what are th comparable figures for other major European Communit countries.

77. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of th Exchequer what has been the rate of growth in the Unite Kingdom economy since 1980; and what has been th comparable figure for other major European Communit countries.

Mr. Lilley: Since 1980 the United Kingdom econom has grown at a rate of over 2½ per cent. a year, which substantially faster than any other major Europea country.

32. Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the rate economic growth in the United Kingdom over the comi year.

35. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of th Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the rate economic growth in the United Kingdom over the comi year.

81. Mr. Wells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequ what is his latest forecast for the rate of economic grow in the United Kingdom over the coming year.

Mr. Major: In the Autumn Statement my right ho Friend the Chancellor forecast that the economy wou grow by 2½ per cent. in 1988. The non-oil economy expected to grow by 3 per cent. This will take us into t eighth successive year of steady growth.

34. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of t Exchequer if he will estimate the effects on employment economic growth in the United Kingdom since 1983.

97. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequ if he will estimate the effects on employment of econom growth in the United Kingdom since 1983.

Mr. Major: The steady growth of the United Kingdo economy since 1983 has contributed to a rise of over million in the number of jobs.

49. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of t Exchequer when he next expects to meet the direct general of the Confederation of British Industry to discu the prospects for the British economy.

95. Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of t Exchequer when he next expects to meet the represe tatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discu the state of the economy.

104. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of t Exchequer when he next expects to meet the direct general of the Confederation of British Industry to discu the current performance of British industry.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend meets the direct general of the CBI from time to time and a wide range issues are discussed.

Take-home Pay

23. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of real take-home pay for a married man on male average earnings since 1978-79.

Mr. Lilley: Since 1978-79, real take home pay has risen by almost 24 per cent. for a married man on average male earnings.

British Petroleum plc

24. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many shares the Bank of England now holds in British Petroleum.

89. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of the shares which the Bank of England now holds in BP.

100. Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the number of British Petroleum shares that have been purchased by the Bank of England under the special arrangements to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Approximately 39 million.

102. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards future sales of shares in British Petroleum plc in the light of the outcome of the recent sale of shares in the company.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The shares in British Petroleum which were purchased by the Bank of England under the buyback scheme will be disposed of in due course as part of the wider privatisation programme. The Bank has undertaken not to dispose of any shares acquired under these arrangements up to 29 April 1988 except at a price in excess of 120p.

International Debt

26. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what initiatives he is taking with Finance Ministers of creditor countries to address the rescheduling of a share of the debt of Latin American countries.

28. Mr. David Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what initiatives he is taking with Finance Ministers of creditor countries to address the rescheduling of a share of the debt of Latin American countries.

37. Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what initiatives he is taking with Finance Ministers of creditor countries to address the rescheduling of a share of the debt of Latin American countries.

39. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what initiatives he is taking with Finance Ministers of creditor countries to address the rescheduling of a share of the debt of Latin American countries.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours).

29. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to his 1987 initiative to deal with the problem of developing countries' debt.

68. Mr. David Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses he has received to his 1987 initiative to deal with the problem of developing countries' debt.

Mr. Lilley: Good progress has been made on two of the three specific proposals that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made at the April meeting of the development committee. The United Kingdom has converted aid loans into grants for 14 African countries; other creditor countries are following suit. To date, seven countries have had their official debts rescheduled over longer than usual periods in the Paris Club. We are continuing to press for international action to reduce interest rates on rescheduled officially guaranteed debts.

74. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent meetings he has had with other Finance Ministers regarding world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Last September my right hon. Friend attended the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting and the meetings of the IMF and World Bank where the debt problems of some of the developing countries, especially those of the poorest in sub-Saharan Africa, were discussed.

Taxation

27. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to reduce capital taxation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion but cannot, of course, anticipate the Budget judgment.

Hospital Radio Broadcasting Equipment (VAT)

30. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about value added tax on hospital radio broadcasting equipment.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 27 November at column 129.

Interest Rates

31. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on present levels of interest rates.

83. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

96. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 8½ per cent.

58. Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the trend in interest rates during the Christmas adjournment.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates have remained at 8½ per cent. throughout the Christmas adjournment.

Credit Card Companies

33. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide for closer regulation of the operation of credit card companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to alter the regulatory framework for credit card operations.

Drug Trafficking

36. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the liaison arrangements between Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the police and other enforcement agencies in connection with the investigation of drug trafficking.

Mr. Lilley: Yes.

Self-employment

38. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will quantify the extent to which growth in the economy has been reflected in an increase in self-employment over the period since 1979.

67. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will quantify the extent to which growth in the economy has been reflected in an increase in self-employment over the period since 1979.

Mr. Major: Self-employment in the United Kingdom in June 1987 was over three-quarters of a million higher than in 1979, an increase five times as great as in the previous 30 years. Self-employment has been encouraged by the combination of steady, sustained growth in the economy and the success of supply side policies in stimulating enterprise.

Capital Investment

40. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to stimulate capital investment.

Mr. Major: The Government's economic policies will continue to encourage capital investment by promoting an environment in which business can prosper.

Value Added Tax

41. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue from value added tax (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows:

1979	6,360

73. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress on his negotiations within the European Economic Community regarding the raising of the value added tax threshold.

Mr. Lilley: The European Parliament has given general support for the Commission's draft directive concerning VAT and small and medium-sized enterprise proposes, amongst other things, a higher registration threshold of 35,000 ecu (about £25,0

101. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancello Exchequer when he next intends to meet the Ministers of the European Economic Commu discuss the possible harmonisation of value ad within the Community.

Mr. Lilley: Budget representations from seve bodies have included references to VAT on buil

Privatisation

44. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the E what is his latest estimate of the income to the E from privatisation in the present year, and in the years.

72. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Chancell Exchequer what is his latest forecast of incom Treasury from privatisation measures in 198 1988-89.

105. Mr. Cabora: To ask the Chancello Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the inco Exchequer from privatisation in the present yea the next two years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimate o from privatisation in the present year and in the years is contained in the Autumn Statement.

65. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Chancello Exchequer if he proposes to make any chang Government's privatisation programme as a res BP flotation.

84. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancell Exchequer what conclusions he has drawn fro flotation; and what measures he intends to take with any further privatisation proposals.

85. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancello Exchequer if he will make a statement on Her Government's latest plans for further pri measures.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

99. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the light of recent events, he has revised his estimates of privatisation proceeds to the Exchequer over the next few years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest estimate of proceeds for the next three years remains as given in the Autumn Statement.

Industry (Costs)

45. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the relative benefit to British industry of 1 per cent. off interest rates as compared with 1 per cent. off pay rises.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor).

Excise Duties

47. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding negotiations within the EEC about harmonisation of excise duties.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 20 November at column 704, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) on 11 December at column 288.

Pensioners

48. Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to undertake a study of the subject of the income tax burden on retirement pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion and will bear it in mind, although the income tax burden on pensioners is something we keep continually under review.

Income Tax

50. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the proportion of income tax revenue paid by the highest 5 per cent. of earners currently; what was the figure in 1979; and what are the absolute figures for these two fiscal years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that the top 5 per cent. of tax-paying tax units (married couples and single people) have income tax liabilities of £12·5 billion in 1987-88. This represents 29 per cent. of total income tax liabilities of about £43·1 billion. In 1978-79, the liability of the top 5 per cent. was £4·9 billion which was 24 per cent. of the total liability of £20·3 billion.

54. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average annual gain in each year since 1979 to those earning over £50,000 as a result of changes in taxation.

86. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much, on average, those earning over £50,000 a year have gained in changes in taxation since 1979.

94. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average individual cumulative gain to those earning over £50,000 a year as a result of changes in taxation since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows the average reduction in income tax liability of taxpayers who in 1987-88 had incomes over £50,000. The figures in the first column are the reduction in liability under the tax regime for the year in question, compared with the liability under the tax regime of the previous year. The second column cumulates the changes and therefore compares each year with 1978-79. All tax regimes have been indexed to 1987-88 levels by reference to the statutory formula and applied to incomes at 1987-88 levels, projected from the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes. Estimates are provisonal.

62. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figures he has showing the major beneficiaries of changes in direct taxation since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: All 24·7 million taxpayers will pay less in income tax in 1987-88 than they would under the 1978-79 income tax regime, indexed to allow for movements in prices; and, compared with that indexed regime, 1·4 million people have been taken out of income tax altogether.

90. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what income tax relief has been received by a taxpayer earning £50,000 each year since 1979, at 1987 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The income tax relief received in each financial year from his main personal allowance by a married man with earned income of £50,000 and no other reliefs or allowances is as follows (amounts have been revalued at 1987-88 prices):

1980-81	2,115
1981-82	1,839

1987-88	2,277

Credit Growth

51. Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for the rate of credit growth over the last four years.

Mr. Lilley: The growth in consumer credit over the last four financial years is as follows:

	Rate of growth (per cent.)
1983-84	20
1984-85	16
1985-86	17

Source: CSO Financial Statistics table 9.3.

79. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of outstanding consumer credit is accounted for by credit card lending by banks.

Mr. Lilley: Credit on bank credit cards including its interest-free component accounts for 15 per cent. of all consumer credit outstanding and about 3 per cent. of personal sector debt.

Pay

52. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of pay rise for the average employee would be compatible with full compensation for price increases over the last year.

71. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of pay rise for the average employee would be compatible with full compensation for price increases over the last year.

80. Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of pay rise for the average employee would be compatible with full compensation for price increases over the last year.

Mr. Brooke: The pay rise that would compensate fully for price increases over the last year would be about 4 per cent. However, when changes in income tax are taken into account, the pay rise needed would be only about 2½ per cent.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

53. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to review the systems of mortgage interest tax relief; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The level of mortgage interest relief has to be fixed each year and will be considered in framing the Budget proposals.

92. Mr. Sherwby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 373, he will analyse the weight of responses for and against the Green Paper proposals on personal taxation which led him to conclude that there was insufficient support for the approach advocated in the Green Paper on the treatment of mortgage interest tax relief for married and unmarried couples; what other proposals in this regard have been put to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I think my hon. Friend's question arises from a misunderstanding. A proposal to link mortgage interest tax relief to the residence in borrower(s) was made in the context of th independent taxation with transferable outlined in the Green Paper. My answer of 2 referred to overall support for the Green Pap to the tax treatment of married couples as a specifically to mortgage interest relief. The have made it clear that we consider it import tax penalties on marriage should be removed

Private Borrowing

56. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chan Exchequer if he will make a statement on private borrowing over the last year.

Mr. Lilley: In the financial year 1986-87, b the private sector amounted to £43 billion.

69. Mr. Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest outlook for inflation.

76. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest outlook for inflation.

Mr. Lilley: As forecast in the Autumn Statement the RPI is expected to increase by 4½ per cent. over the year to the fourth quarter of 1988.

International Finance Ministers

75. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he is next due to meet the Finance Ministers of the other major industrialised countries.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith).

European Monetary System

78. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent review he has undertaken of the Government's policy towards membership of the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The matter is kept under review.

Balance of Payments

82. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the United Kingdom balance of payments figure for 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement forecast was for a current deficit of £2½ billion in 1987 and £3¼ billion in 1988.

88. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications for the management of the economy of the current balance of payments.

Mr. Major: Present and prospective United Kingdom current account deficits are relatively small as a percentage of GDP and reflect the fast growth of the United Kingdom economy relative to other major countries. The United Kingdom also has a very strong net overseas assets position. As such, the current account position should not pose any major problems. Policy will continue to safeguard against any unsustainable developments.

Money Supply

91. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure for M3, calculated on a yearly basis.

Mr. Lilley: The annual growth rate of M3 to November 1987 was 21·3 per cent.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated cost to the Service of treating road accident victims available. However, the figure for the pre has been estimated at £124 million in E

NHS (Administrative Staff)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the percentage change in the number of administrative staff in the National Health Service in England since 1979.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in the Official Report in tabular form the number of managers and administrators employed in the National Health Service since 1979; and if he will indicate the percentage increase or decrease each year.

Mr. Newton: The number of whole-time equivalent administrative and clerical staff, including general managers, employed in England in the September of each year between 1979 and 1986 was as follows:

Year	Staff in post	Percentage increase over previous year
1979	103,000	—
1980	105,400	2·4
1981	108,800	3·2
1982	108,800	less than 0·1
1983	110,000	1·1
1984	110,300	0·3
1985	111,000	0·7
1986	111,400	0·3

The percentage increase over the period was 8·1.

The numbers are independently rounded to the nearest 100, but the percentages have been calculated on the basis of unrounded figures.

Health Care (North West)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his priorities for health care in the area covered by the North Western regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: Health care priorities are set by individual health authorities in the light of national and regional policies taking into account local circumstances.

Priorities for the North Western region are outlined in the region's short-term programme for 1987-88, a copy of which is in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what, pursuant to his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 688, is the exact number of patients in the United Kingdom, who received blood infected with AIDS virus, if these patients got the virus from one or more batches of contaminated blood; if they were told the result of the infection; over what period of time were these people infected; when was the last indication of an infected blood transfusion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The very small chance of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection arising from a blood transfusion in the United Kingdom was further reduced from August 1983 when potential donors in high-risk groups were asked not to give blood. Screening of all donations for antibodies to HIV began in October 1985; there have been no reports of HIV infection arising from transfusions given in England and Wales after that date.

The exact number of patients in the United Ki who have received blood infected with HIV is unl In general, infected patients would be identified they became ill later. At the end of 1987, 41 cases infection associated with blood transfusions given United Kingdom before October 1985 had been r to the communicable disease surveillance centr figure includes the eight cases of AIDS to which I r in my reply on 17 December 1987 at column 688.

Because blood from different donors is not pool batches, an infected donation would have affecte one recipient.

NHS (Savings)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services by how much general managers in the Health Service in England have been requested their short-term programmes to achieve a saving on their previously submitted programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Regional health authorities have not yet submitted their short-term programmes for 1988-89. We have given them more time in which to do so, so that they can take account of both the extra resources for that year which my right hon. Friend announced on 3 November and the implications for their 1988-89 plans of the additional resources for 1987-88 which I announced in my statement to the House on 16 December.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimate of the first three years' savings resulting from the April changes in housing benefits in Scotland.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information for Scotland alone is not available.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the level of Government spending on the National Health Service, expressed per household, in 1979 and in each year since then at (i) current prices, (ii) 1979 prices and (iii) 1987 prices.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

Government spending on the NHS expressed per household (Great Britain)

1978-79	384·85	384·85	748·74

Mr. Newton: Authorities are expe them, including savings achieved through cost improvement programmes. Allocations to regions do not include any specific "earmarked" provision for pay costs; decisions on the allocation of funds between manpower costs and other expenditure are a matter for health authorities. However, the Government, in considering reports from the review bodies, take account of their financial effects. Additional funds were provided in both 1986-87 and 1987-88.

In 1987-88, the additional £262 million provided for health authorities in England covered 95 per cent. of the cost of the review body awards over and above general inflation; in 1986-87 92 per cent. of that cost was covered in this way.

Mr. J. F. Yeatman

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to send the decision on war disability pension to Mr. J. F. Yeatman of Wembury, Plymouth, reference MI/824D0, following his application for a medical re-examination in January 1987 and his medical re-examination on 29 July 1987, the findings of which examination have still not been communicated to Mr. Yeatman; and if he will make a statement as to the reasons for the delay in this matter.

Mr. Portillo: I regret the delay in this case. It is mainly due to a backlog in dealing with claims to war pension because of a significant increase in the number of claims in 1986 and 1987, coupled with the need to obtain further evidence about Mr. Yeatman's medical history following his medical examination in July 1987. A decision will be sent to Mr. Yeatman within the next few days.

Census

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what consultations he will be holding on the nature of the questions to be contained in the 1991 census of population; and when he expects this consultation to take place;

(2) whether he will consider including a question in the 1991 census of population in order to ascertain the number of Welsh-speakers living outside Wales.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) on 2 November 1987, at column 573. Consultations on the content of the 1991 census are taking place currently. The arrangements are described in "Census Newsletter No. 2", a copy of which is in the Library.

A question in order to ascertain the number of Welsh-speakers living outside Wales is being considered, as are many other suggestions.

However, no decisions have yet been taken on the content of the census. Proposals will be published as a White Paper later this year.

Community Medicine

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish the report of the committee of inquiry into the future development of the public health function and community medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I have today published the report of the inquiry set up by my predecessor to consider the future development of the public health function in En required by its terms of reference, the report co on the control of communicable disease and t public health doctors within the framework management in the NHS and also examines issues of the public health function. It suggest which surveillance of the health of the populat be improved, a greater emphasis on the prev illness and premature death achieved, and the eff of health services better evaluated. The Gover grateful for the work of the chairman and meml inquiry. We shall be studying their recommen detail as a matter of urgency and hope to make statement on implementation in the near futur

Cancer Screening

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State Services what estimate he has made of th expanding the cervical smear test programme that all results are available within one week for over 16 years of age at least once every three

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 December 1987]: The Department's cancer screening evaluation unit has estimated that the additional cost in England and Wales of a change from five-yearly to three-yearly screening for all women aged 20 to 64 would, assuming 100 per cent. acceptance of screening, be somewhat over £22 million per annum.

The additional cost of a change from three-yearly screening beginning at age 20 to three-yearly screening beginning at age 17 would, assuming 100 per cent. acceptance of screening, be about £4 million per annum.

Ensuring that all results were available within one week would require considerable over-capacity in laboratories in order that they could cope with fluctuations in demand. The further cost that would be required has not been calculated, since maintaining such over-capacity would not seem to be the best use of resources.

The national policy is to screen women aged 20 to 64 ever five years. Epidemiological studies indicate that women screened in line with this policy are 84 per cent. less likely than unscreened women to develop invasive cervical cancer. I am advised that our efforts should be directed at increasing uptake, since increasing the proportion of women being screened in line with this policy will have a greater impact on death rates than increasing the frequency of screening.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1983 and for the latest year available the total number of hospital beds for each of the following services, broken down by district health authorities (a) general medical, (b) general surgical, (c) non-psychiatric acute, (d) geriatric, (e) maternity, (f) mental illness, (g) mentally handicapped and (h) total.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 December 1987]: The information the hon. Member seeks has now been placed in the Library.

THE ARTS

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was his Department's total expenditure on the arts in England and in Wales during the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. Richard Luce: My Department's total expenditure on the arts in the financial year 1986-87 was £285.7 million, largely in the form of grants in aid to arts bodies. Of the grant in aid of £135.6 million to the Arts Council for Great Britain, £7.6 million was provided for the Welsh Arts Council. Responsibility for the provision of grants in aid to the National Museum of Wales and the National Library of Wales rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students with special educational needs regularly attend courses run by colleges of further and higher education in England and in each of the English counties.

Mr. Jackson: A survey by the National Bureau for Handicapped Students was commissioned in 1985. Its report "Catching-Up?" and DES statistical bulletin 7/87 summarise the results and are in the Library of the House. Figures are not provided for individual counties, but about 44,000 students with special educational needs were attending various courses run by public sector institutions of further and higher education in England. Of these, 17,600 were on mainstream college courses or courses specifically provided for students with special educational needs, 12,500 were enrolled at another institution but attended a college for part of the week, and 13,400 were attending outreach courses run by college staff at other centres. Some of the data are to be updated annually.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Brooke: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. Specific guidance on reporting alleged sexual harassment is included in "Women in the Treasury; a guide to personnel management policies" which has been issued to all Treasury staff. There have been four complaints reported in the past five years; in the two proven cases, formal written warnings were issued.

Manor of Northstead

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Exchequer of the Manor of Northstead in each year since 1980.

Mr. Lawson: Nothing. The stewardship of the Manor of Northstead, like that of the Chiltern Hundreds, is a nominal office of profit under the Crown; no salary actually attaches.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated total cost of the Central Office of Information in 1987-88; and what it was in 1978-79 and 1982-83.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The estimated total running costs of the COI in 1987-88 and comparable actual costs for 1978-79 and 1982-83 are as follows:

£ million

Year	Cash prices	Constant 1987-88 prices
1978-79	10·7	21·5
1982-83	17·6	22·0
1987-88 (estimated)	19·0	19·0

At constant 1987-88 prices the total expenditure for the COI in 1978-79 was £71·4 million, in 1982-83 was £60·5 million, and in 1987-88 is estimated to be £141 million.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of Central Office of Information work put out to private consultants and agencies in 1987-88; and what it was in 1978-79 and 1982-83.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The COI does not hold records of expenditure with consultancies and agencies in the form requested. In 1987-88 the department estimates that it will spend £104·5 million on goods and services with the private sector as a whole. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

BP Shares

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to meet the Kuwaiti Government or the Kuwaiti Investment Office in order to discuss the Kuwaiti Investment Office's shareholding in British Petroleum plc.

Mr. Lawson: It is not my normal practice to disclose details of possible discussions with other Governments or their agencies.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Development Administration (East Kilbride)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the actual or estimated costs of office rentals for the Overseas Development Administration's accommodation in East Kilbride in each of the last three years, the current year, and in each of the next three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The annual rental cost per square metre of the Overseas Development Administration's office accommodation for its East Kilbride headquarters is as follows:

Actuals
1984-85	37·92
1985-86	39·44
1986-87	70·59
1987-88	73·06
Estimated
1988-89	75·98
1989-90	78·64
1990-91	81·00

Overseas Development Administration Headquarters

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Overseas Development Administration has for accommodation for its London headquarters when it eventually leaves Eland house.

Mr. Chris Patten: The matter is being kept under review by officials of my Department and the Property Services Agency.

Overseas Development Administration (Accommodation)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the actual or estimated costs of office rentals for the Overseas Development Administration's accommodation in London in each of the last three years, the current year and in each of the next three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The annual rental cost per square metre of the Overseas Development Administration's London headquarters—excluding its scientific units—is as follows:

Actuals
1984-85	156·20
1985-86	164·45
1986-87	149·97
1987-88	172·20
Estimated
1988-89	179·09
1989-90	185·36
1990-91	190·92

The charges are those paid to the Property Services Agency under property repayment services arrangements.

Overseas Development Administration (Dispersal)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what would be the estimated net annual recurrent cost savings if the London-based Overseas Development Administration jobs were dispersed to the Glasgow-East Kilbride area.

Mr. Chris Patten: The main recurrent saving from moving the Overseas Development Administration London-based posts to East Kilbride would be on accommodation costs and would be approximately £1·9 million a year at January 1988 prices. Other recurrent savings, for example on London weighting, would probably be broadly offset by the additional recurrent costs of relocation, including travel.

This estimate takes no account of unquantifiable efficiency losses arising from the separation of such a significant element of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office from the remainder of that office. Nor does it take account of the capital and other non-recurrent costs of relocation, or of costs which would accrue to other Government Departments and public bodies.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will place in the Library copies or summaries of the reviews and studies that the Overseas Development Administration has made into further dispersal of its work to East Kilbride since the initial dispersal exercise in 1981.

Mr. Chris Patten: The matter has been kept under review on a continuing basis since 1981, as part of the wider exercise to ensure that the Government met their commitment to disperse to the west of Scotland functions providing at that time 2,050 jobs, and as part of a regular programme of internal Overseas Development Administration management reviews. The conclusion has always been that there were no further major blocks of work which could be dispersed without unacceptable loss of efficiency, although minor changes have been made. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs told the House on 3 November 1987, I re-examined the question last year as a result of representations from the Overseas Development Administration's local trade union sides in London and East Kilbride, but concluded that there was no case for a further major dispersal programme.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the number of Overseas Development Administration posts dispersed to East Kilbride as a result of the reviews and studies which the Administration has carried out since the initial dispersal exercise in 1981.

Mr. Chris Patten: One hundred and sixty-seven posts in the Crown Agents pensions division were dispersed to East Kilbride in 1982. The Crown Agents pensions division was incorporated in the Overseas Development Administration's pensions department on 1 December 1987. Three posts dealing with arrangements for joint funding of projects with non-governmental organisations were transferred to East Kilbride from London in 1983. It was decided last year that consultancies department (10 posts based in London) should form part of overseas manpower department (based in East Kilbride). The implications of this for the structure of the department and location of jobs are currently being examined.

In addition we have nine staff in new posts created in East Kilbride since 1981 in specialist areas such as information technology and internal audit.

CIVIL SERVICE

Staff Appraisal

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what representations he has received from civil servants on the new staff appraisal system in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: No representations have been received. However, the recently completed evaluation of the new staff appraisal system has shown that the system has been well received by civil servants, who are especially pleased with its openness.

PRIME MINISTER

Property Services Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to remove from the Property Services Agency its current responsibilities in defence work either (a) in full or (b) in part; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The responsibilities of the Property Services Agency are among the matters kept under review as part of the Government's efforts to improve efficiency and enhance value for money in the provision of Government accommodation. In the event of changes in those responsibilities, an announcement would be made at the appropriate time.

Nuclear Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her answer of 7 December 1987, Official Report, column 9, whether she will convert the comparison she provided in terms of estimated fire power or throw weight intensity and provide comparable figures for NATO as a whole.

The Prime Minister: It is not known what quantities and types of missiles the Soviet Union would retain to meet a 50 per cent. cut in strategic systems. Furthermore, information on missile throw weight and warhead yield is classified.

Africa (Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost of her visit to Kenya and Nigeria; what was her method of travel and who was the carrier; and how many civil servants accompanied her.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) at columns 352-53. I travelled by Royal Air Force VC10.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the charge to journalists who travelled with her to Africa in official transport.

The Prime Minister: Journalists who travelled with me to Africa were charged £1,000. This sum was based on commercial rates.

Government Decisions (Lawyers)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library the memorandum to Government Departments about the inclusion of lawyers in key Government policy decisions.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to place documents dealing with internal Civil Service management procedures in the Library.

State Security

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration has been given to prosecuting under the Official Secrets Act those individuals who sought to induce Peter Wright to disclose information from MI5 files concerning Lord Wilson; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Any such matter would be for the prosecuting authorities.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if she has caused inquiries to be made into the identity of individuals who sought to induce Peter Wright to disclose information from MI5 files concerning Lord Wilson; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters at issue in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case while those proceedings continue.

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to ensure that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton), has complied with the rules governing ministerial conduct, with particular reference to the divestment of financial interests, in so far as they relate to his dealings with the Housing (Scotland) Bill; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have been advised of the facts and am satisfied that no breach of the rules governing ministerial conduct has occurred.

Conduct of Ministers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library the rules regarding the conduct of Ministers, with specific reference to their financial and other interests.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to make Cabinet documents public or to release them to Parliament. So far as Ministers' financial interests are concerned, I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 26 November 1987 to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) at column 261.

DEFENCE

Army Equipment Exhibition

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 13 November 1987, Official Report, column 333-34, why the British Army equipment exhibition, scheduled to be held at Aldershot from 27 June to 1 July, will not be open to the public.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British Army equipment exhibition is designed for professional and technical experts, not for the general public.

Surplus Property

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses and flats owned by his Department are surplus to requirement; in how many cases the Property Services Agency has been instructed to sell such properties; and how many properties remain unsold (a) more than four months, (b) more than eight months and (c) more than 12 months after the Property Services Agency was instructed to sell them.

Mr. Freeman: At 30 November 1987, the most recent date for which statistics are available, a total of 2,397 houses and flats had been declared surplus to MOD's requirements and were still owned by the Ministry of Defence. Of these, PSA had been instructed to sell 844 and a further 384 were in the process of sale through the discounted sales scheme which offers houses (but not flats) to servicemen at a discount of 30 per cent. The remaining 1,169 properties were still being processed by the PL(Lands) division at the Ministry of Defence as part of the normal process prior to sale. Each year PL(Lands) processes about 2,000 properties.

I regret that the information required to identify the number of the properties remaining unsold after four, eight and 12 months is not available to the PSA and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Military Flying

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn of 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 452, he will place copies of the standing instructions relating to military flying in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: No. The document in question, the "United Kingdom Military Low Flying Handbook," is classified.

Ship Disposals

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what grounds he decided to dispose of HMS Chrysanthemum and HMS President, and what consultations he undertook prior to reaching that decision;

(2) what publicity he gave to his decisions to dispose of HMS Chrysanthemum and HMS President; by what means their prospective sale was publicised; and how many tenders were received for each vessel;

(3) how many tenders he received for the sale of HMS Chrysanthemum and HMS President, respectively, and what was the price received for each.

Mr. Sainsbury: HM ships Chrysanthemum and President currently house the London division royal naval reserve. It was decided to dispose of them, as the headquarters is due to move to new shore accommodation next month and no alternative use within the Royal Navy had been identified.

Normal disposal procedures were followed. A number of representations concerning their possible future use after disposal were received from organisations outside the Ministry of Defence.

The sale of HM ships President and Chrysanthem was advertised in Lloyd's List on 17-18 July 1986 addition, invitations to tender were invited fro standard panel of ship repairers-breakers. A total o inquiries were received, following which three tenders submitted for each vessel. As a result the sale price ag with the highest bidder covering both ships is £100,000.

RNAD Coulport

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Def (1) pursuant to the answer given on 8 December 1 Official Report, column 142, how many jobs will be each year as the facilities progress towards the elimina of Polaris and the installation of Trident;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 8 December 1987, Of Report, column 142, how many jobs he anticipates c be generated by the alternative forms of employ under consideration for workers at RNAD Coulport; if he will make a statement;

(3) pursuant to the answer on 8 December 1987, Of Report, column 142, what types of alternative employ are actively being considered for those workers presently service the Polaris missiles at RNAD Coul and who will be affected by the demanning involved i changeover to Trident; and what steps have been tak research the feasibility of these alternative jobs.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the an I gave on 8 December at column 142. The phasing o Polaris is currently the subject of detailed planning w MOD. Until this work is completed, it is not possib be specific about the timing of any resultant job loss RNAD Coulport. Assessments of how many new job likely to be created at the depot are similarly depe upon the outcome of this work, which, because c complexity, will not be concluded for some conside time. The investigation into any other possible em ment will similarly take a considerable time to comp

Vacant Properties

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for De how many empty houses and flats were owned b Department on the latest available date; and how were owned on the same date in each of the past years.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics showing the number of e service houses and flats and the number of empty owned civilian houses and flats are held separately.

As at 30 November 1987 (the latest date for w figures are available) the total number of service h and flats vacant was 15,801. Statistics showing the nu of empty service houses and flats throughout the last years are only available for each year as at 31 July. information is:

	Number
31 July 1980	19,400
31 July 1981	14,850
31 July 1982	13,200
31 July 1983	14,670
31 July 1984	14,527
31 July 1985	14,235
31 July 1986	14,381
31 July 1987	15,529

The number of MOD civilian houses and flats vacant on 31 March 1987 (the latest date for which these figures are available) was 353. Figures for the previous seven years are shown below:

	Number
31 March 1980	313
31 March 1981	421
31 March 1982	334
31 March 1983	678

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thefts

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council, how many items have been reported as stolen from the (a) offices, (b) corridors, (c) family room, (d) Library and (e) refreshment rooms of the Commons section of the Palace of Westminster in 1986 and 1987 to the most recent practicable date; and how many items have been recovered for each period.

Mr. Wakeham: Cases of theft from areas in the House of Commons which were reported to the head of security were as follows:

Offices	10	4
Corridors	1	Nil
Families' Room	Nil	2
Library	Nil	Nil
Refreshment Rooms	5	2

One item, stolen in 1987 has been recovered, but investigations into the remaining cases are continuing.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken through the Council of Ministers to condemn police repression in Romania.

Mr. Mellor: Romania's observance of its human rights commitments is unsatisfactory. My right hon. and learned Friend had a detailed discussion of this with the Romanian Foreign Minister, during his visit to London in November. Both the United Kingdom delegation and the European Community Presidency have referred to these issues frequently at the Vienna CSCE meeting. We shall continue, with our Community partners, to draw attention to the need for Romania to respect human rights.

Human Rights

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Zimbabwe, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None. We are concerned at human rights violations wherever they occur. While there continue to be occasional reports of ill treatment of prisoners, we have noted a recent general improvement in the human rights situation in Zimbabwe as reflected in the Amnesty report itself, particularly the release of large numbers of opposition detainees. Significantly the African Association on Human and People's Rights in Development was established in the presence of a Zimbabwe Minister in Harare on 31 August 1987.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Zambia regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Zambia, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The importance we attach to respect for human rights is well-known to the Zambians and is regularly expressed at the United Nations, and other international fora.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Uganda regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Uganda, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Amnesty International's 1987 report noted a "significant" improvement in respect for human rights in Uganda. The Government of Uganda are publicly committed to respect for human rights. We have regular contacts with them.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has made to the Government of Nigeria regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Nigeria, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has made to the Government of Ghana regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Ghana, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to monitor closely the human rights situation in west Africa as elsewhere and regularly make clear in appropriate fora our view that human rights must be respected in accordance with internationally agreed standards.

In respect of the 1987 Amnesty International report, no representations have been made to the Governments of Ghana or Nigeria. In general, the human rights situation in these countries has improved over recent years.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of India regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in India, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. We have noted the contents of Amnesty International's 1987 report. We regularly make clear our views on the need for all governments to respect human rights.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Bangladesh regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Bangladesh, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have noted the contents of the 1987 Amnesty International report. We regularly make clear our views on the need for all governments to respect human rights and have on several occasions raised with the Bangladesh Government at the highest levels the concern felt in this country for human rights in Bangladesh.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya regarding the affront to civilised values revealed in the recent report by Amnesty International on the abuse of human rights in Kenya, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Kenya's human rights record has been good since independence. In the context of the Amnesty International report, President Moi has given a number of public undertakings that human rights will continue to be respected. In his speech at the official banquet for my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on the 5 January he said,

"Our law is clear on the question of protection of human rights . . . we cannot betray our struggle for Independence by denying our people the very same rights we fought for so hard".

We have made our view clear on this issue.

Council of Social Affairs Ministers

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what have been the main decisions of the European Community Council of Social Affairs Ministers in the last five years.

Mr. Cope: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the six-monthly White Papers on developments in the European Community, which have been laid before Parliament and debated in the House of Commons. For the decisions of the Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers from June 1983 to June 1987, the references are set out in the table.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs wha Department's policy on sexual harassment whether guidance on reporting complaints has b to all members of staff; how many complaints reported in the past five years; and what di action has been taken.

Mr. Eggar: Civil Service policy on sexual h is set out in the programme of action opportunities for women in the Civil Service v published by the Cabinet Office (Manage Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment a not tolerated and may be dealt with as a di matter through the usual diplomatic service or h Service complaints procedure.

Guidance on reporting complaints has be available to all staff in the diplomatic and aid wi have been no official complaints in the past fiv the diplomatic wing. In the aid wing, one resulted in the offender's being reprimanded.

Afghanistan

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to what discussions have taken place to ensure that representative sections of the Mujahideen will participate in the peace proposals for Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: It is clear that the peace process cannot succeed without participation by the Mujahideen. The European Council statement of 5 December 1987 called on the Soviet Union to recognise that the participation of the Afghan resistance is essential to a comprehensive political settlement.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics concerning the timing of withdrawal of Soviet troops stationed in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly raise these issues with the Soviet Government, most recently on 7 December when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister expressed to Mr. Gorbachev the hope that there would be a Soviet withdrawal in 1988.

Kenya (Detentions without Trial)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has made, or intends to make, to the Government of Kenya on the arrest in May 1986 and again in July 1986 and the subsequent detention without trial of Dr. George Katema Mkangi;

(2) what representations he has made, or intends to make, to the Government of Kenya on the arrest in March 1986 and subsequent detention without trial of Francis Kariuki Gathitu;

(3) what representations he has made, or will make, to the Government of Kenya on the arrest in July 1986 and again in October 1986 and the subsequent detention without trial of Wanyiri Kihoro;

(4) what representations he has made or will make to the Government of Kenya on the arrest in May 1986 and again in July 1986 and the subsequent detention without trial of David Mukuru Ng'ang'a.

Mrs. Chalker: Kenya's overall human rights record has been good since independence. The Kenyan authorities are well aware of our view on the importance of maintaining this record and our concern over prolonged detention without trial. We raise such cases with them on appropriate occasions.

Peter Karanja

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, or will make, to the Government of Kenya on the seven-hour interrogation on 11 January of Judge Marvin Frankel and Dr. Robert Kirschner, both international observers at the inquest into the death in custody of Peter Karanja.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to raise this matter with the Government of Kenya.

Mr. Ozker Ozgur (Libel Damages)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the implied threat to the legitimate activities of a legal opposition party and those who oppose the integration of northern Cyprus into mainland Turkey, he will make an official protest to the Turkish Government over the award of £100,000 damages against Mr. Ozker Ozgur, the leader of the Republican Turkish Party in Cyprus, for an alleged libel of Mr. Rauf Denktash.

Mrs. Chalker: It would not be appropriate for us to make representations over a civil case of this kind. Nor do we believe that the Government of Turkey are involved in this matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Call Signs

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for what reasons the indentities of the holders of radio call signs are secret; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The identities of civil radio licensees are not classified, but many users of radio such as the police and security firms have very good reasons for not wanting to make unauthorised reception of their transmissions easier. There are also commercial reasons for many other users not wishing to have their call signs made available. Radio amateurs are specifically asked upon issue of their licence whether they wish to have their call sign details published; I respect their decisions.

All licence details kept on computer are subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Economic Prospects

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make a statement on the economic prospects for the north-west.

Mr. Atkins: I refer to the Autumn Statement given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 3 November 1987 Official Report, columns 783-86, when he forecast that for the United Kingdom as a whole there was likely to be a continuation of steady growth, low inflation and falling unemployment in 1988. I would expect the economy in the north-west to share in this increasing prosperity. Unemployment in the region is already falling steadily and there is much evidence of rising investment and output from an increasingly competitive industrial base. I am confident that, thanks to the sound fiscal policies and measures to promote enterprise adopted by the Government, the economy of the north-west now has better prospects for sustained growth than for many years. I am also sure that the enterprise initiative which my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 12 January, Official Report columns 145-47, will give an added impetus to economic growth in the north-west by allowing the talents and energies of companies and people in the region to be harnessed even more effectively than in the past.

Courtaulds

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total of grants paid by his Department to Courtaulds in respect of its Belmont factory since its inception: when the last grant payment was made; if, in view of the closure of the factory, Courtaulds will be repaying grant; what advance notice was given to his Department of the closure of the factory: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Details of assistance paid to individual companies are published in "British Business" in accordance with established procedures. Assistance paid to Courtaulds in respect of its Belmont factory has been mainly by way of regional selective assistance, most of which was paid in 1975 and 1976. No assistance has been paid since 1986. The question of any repayment of grant is a matter for consideration by my Department in negotiation with the company. My Department was notified of the proposed closure the day before the press announcement on 11 December. While the closure is, of course, regrettable, it is a matter for the commercial judgment of the company.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the levels of regional development grant to private licensed mines and opencast mines in the counties of Durham and Northumberland in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: Mining is not a qualifying activity for regional development grant.

Corby (Advanced Manufacturing Projects)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the total payments made of support for advanced manufacturing project planning and implementation in each year since 1980 within the Corby travel-to-work area.

Mr. Atkins: The following payments have been made under the support for advanced manufacturing project planning and implementation studies scheme within the Corby travel-to-work area:

Year	£

Regional Aid

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the measures outlined in his publication "DTI—the department for Enterprise" (Cm 278) will be applicable to areas which do not at present have either regional or assisted area status.

Mr. Atkins: Many of the measures outlined in "DTI — the department for Enterprise" (Cm 278), apply throughout Great Britain; such measures include those on competition policy, and improving business and education links. Innovation programmes, including the new collaborative research initiatives in superconductivity and information technology, apply throughout the country, with the exception of the new innovation g firms which will be available only in the areas.

Within this framework, my Department will continue to encourage collaboration in research and development including by means of the international photovoltaic energy project established as a result of the Versailles (1982) and Williamsburg (1983) economic summits, participation in European Community-funded research, development and demonstration programmes, and the development of international standards, all of which will contribute to the ability of United Kingdom firms to compete effectively in overseas markets.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures of the support given by the Department of Trade and Industry and any other Government Departments towards the development of photovoltaics during the past five years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 January 1988]: Over the past five years Government Departments have granted financial assistance of £3,320,000 for the development of photovoltaic devices and systems.

ENERGY

NUM Elections

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what facilities British Coal will give during the next National Union of Mineworkers elections in particular in the Nottingham area of British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the management of the British Coal Corporation and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick), Official Report, 16 December 1987, column 518, if he has any plans to publish previous annual production figures for plutonium from electricity from electricity board safeguarded reactors for the period May 1979 to 31 March 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no plans to publish this information as it could be produced only at disproportionate cost. It is our intention that from now on information on plutonium produced at Britain's civil nuclear power stations will be published annually.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 26 November 1987, column 279, on nuclear safeguards, if he will give the period judged by his Department that would not incur disproportionate cost; and if he will publish the information in the format previously requested for the period from May 1979 to 31 March 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Each year safeguards inspectors from Euratom and-or the International Atomic Energy Agency make frequent visits to United Kingdom civil nuclear facilities.

British Coal, Nottingham

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the numbers of work employed in British Coal workshops and garages in Nottinghamshire coalfield area for the years 1979 until present, inclusive;

(2) if he will list the numbers and categories of work employed by British Coal in the Nottinghamshire area the years from 1979 until the present, inclusive.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British C Corporation and I am asking the chairman to write to hon. Member.

Reprocessed Fuel

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of St for Energy (1) on what basis the United Kingdom Ato Energy Authority contracted to reprocess fuel from Central Electricity Generating Board and the South Scotland Electricity Board in terms of fixed fuel volum duration of contract and linkage to lifetime of nucl power stations;

(2) whether the original contracts between the Uni Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and the Cent Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotla Electricity Board were concluded on an individual po station basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA has no contra with the CEGB and SSEB to reprocess nuclear fuel. reprocessing contracts between the authority and boards which existed before the creation of BNFL w transferred to the company.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of St for Energy (1) whether the contracts between Brit Nuclear Fuels plc and the Central Electricity Generat Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board reprocessing are fixed price contracts; and if he will m a statement;

(2) whether the contracts between British Nuclear Fu plc and the Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board provide for conting costs to cover the additional costs arising out improvements in waste technology; and if he will mak statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The terms under which busines conducted between BNFL and the United Kingd generating boards are a commercial matter between parties involved.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of St for Energy what is the cost to date of the thermal ox reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Recorded expenditure to date the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield is in order of £700 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of St for Energy what proportions the Sellafield thermal ox reprocessing plant Thorp base load is expected to provided for by overseas business from Japan.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Some 38 per cent. of the Th base load of 6,000 tonnes is expected to be provided by business from Japan.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the outcome of Her Majesty's Government's action over "Spycatcher" in the New Zealand courts.

The Attorney-General: The proceedings before the New Zealand Court of Appeal are part-heard and stand adjourned during the court's long vacation in New Zealand.

Prosecutions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act since 1979 have not been proceeded with due to lack of evidence.

The Attorney-General: Separate records are not kept of prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act which are not proceeded with due to lack of evidence, and the information could not be collated without incurring disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Barlinnie Prison

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of working days lost by prison officers at Barlinnie prison during the last year due to stress-related illnesses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NHS (Administrators)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to reduce the number of administrators in the National Health Service in Scotland below the level pertaining in 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We keep tight control of the proportion of total health board revenue which is applied to management and administration; since 1979, it has fallen from 5·5 per cent. to 4·5 per cent. Many administrative staff work directly in support of clinical staff and make an important contribution to patient care. In addition, effective managers make a vital contribution to the efficiency of the Health Service.

Women Civil Servants

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of civil servants at grade 5 level and above in his Department is female.

Mr. Rifkind: The proportion in my departments, excluding the prison service, is 6 per cent.

Breach of Confidence

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what importance he attaches to the early implementation of the recommendatio Commission for reform of the law gove confidence.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a special financial allocation to Clwyd county council to enable it to recruit more social workers.

Mr. Grist: The total amount of rate support grant made available for 1988-89, and the principles underlying its distribution between authorities, are published in the Welsh rate support grant report 1988-89. The allocations were approved by the House on 15 December, and there is no scope for extra allocations.

It is for individual authorities to determine spending priorities for their areas. However, in setting current expenditure provision for Wales for 1988-89, an increase of £9·9 million or 7·1 per cent. was allowed for personal social services (including port health).

Trainee Nurses

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of trainees entering nursing for the state registered nurse and registered general nurse course in Wales for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. The Department holds information only on the number of people in training at any one time. Information on the number in training in September in each year is given in the following table:

Mr. Peter Walker: There have been no offers of regional selective assistance since 1985-86 against which a first payment has been made in the travel-to-work areas of Holyhead, Pwllheli and Porthmadog and Ffestiniog. In the Bangor and Caernarfon TTWA, there have been no such offers of less than £5,000. Details of those for £5,000 or more are set out in the table.

In the case of regional development grant, details of offers in the Holyhead TTWA against which a first payment has been made are given in the table for the period 1 April 1985 to 31 December 1987 as a whole. In order to protect confidentiality on individual projects which do not meet the standard criteria for publication, the information is not broken down into financial quarters.

I envisage more regional development grant during 1988-89 and thereafter an increase in demand for regional selective assistance in the area.

Disabled and Visually Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department has issued to planning authorities in Wales concerning the needs of the disabled and visually handicapped in planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Separate guidance to planning authorities on the provision of access for the disabled is given in development control policy note No. 16 "Access for the Disabled" and in Welsh Office circular 21/82 "Disabled Persons Act 1981".

Students (Special Educational Needs)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students with special educational needs regularly attend courses run by colleges of further and higher education in Wales and in each of the Welsh counties.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Artificial Limb and Appliance Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he hopes to announce the results of his Department's consultation process on the consultative document on the future of the artificial limb and appliance service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Our decision to confirm the preferred option, set out in the consultation document, was announced on 26 November 1987; management responsibility will be vested in the Welsh health Common Services Authority from 1 April 1988. For north Wales our proposals in respect of the limb service remain as set out in Welsh health circular 87/11.

Horne Committee

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implementation in Wales of the recommendations of the Horne committee.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Transport and confirm that such legislation would apply equally in Wales.

Disabled Students

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is considering commissioning a survey of disabled students in higher and further education in Wales similar to the survey commissioned on the situation in England by the Department of Education and Science and published in 1987.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is not intended to com survey on this subject in Wales, but plans developed to collect information on students w educational needs at Welsh institutions of fu higher education in the public sector annually, ing in academic year 1988-89.

Meningitis

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary o Wales what steps he is taking to prevent, contai outbreaks of meningitis in Wales; and if he w statement.

Mr. Grist: Facilities for treating pati meningitis exist in all district general hospitals are well-established procedures for contact traci provision of prophylactic antibiotic treatment. I to advice that the Chief Medical Officer issue 1987, the consultant regional epidemiologist ha the literature and has recently provided professional guidance to all specialists in c medicine in Wales. Further professional guida issued shortly.

Speed of treatment is crucial in dealing wit meningococcol meningitis and this can be determinant of the outcome. It is important, that the symptoms and signs are known to a Department will be making available urgently a suitable information leaflet.

ENVIRONMENT

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of Sta Environment whether he proposes an imm tapered cut-off of benefits when the enterprise z comes to an end; and if he will make a statem

Mr. Trippier: When the period for which designated as an enterprise zone comes to a financial benefits arising from enterprise zone cease immediately.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary o the Environment when he hopes to anno conclusions of the study of provision of carava gipsies under the Caravan Sites Act 1986: and make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the repl hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the M Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) on 6 last at column 856.

Hostels

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are his estimates of the effects of the abolition of the hostel deficit grant on the occupancy of hostels which have been in receipt of the grant;

(2) what are his estimates of the effects of the proposed abolition of the hostel deficit grant on the cash flow position of small voluntary groups running hostels;

(3) what are his estimates of the effects of the proposed abolition of the hostel deficit grant on the financial position of voluntary organisations responsible for the management of special needs housing and hostels;

(4) what plans he has for consulting voluntary organisations directly responsible for the management of special needs, housing and hostels over the proposed abolition of the hostel deficit grant;

(5) what transitional arrangements are planned following the proposed abolition of the hostel deficit grant.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has no plans to abolish hostel deficit grant. The Housing Bill will enable payments of such grant to continue as a form of revenue support for registered housing associations.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations will be held on redesigning the hostel finance system and reassessing proposed board and lodging ceilings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We intend to issue a consultation paper on possible future arrangements for the funding of hostels run by registered housing associations. The paper will be widely distributed and the views of interested organisations and individuals will be welcome.

Board and lodging payment levels are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Ridley: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service, which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through departmental complaints procedures. Guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff. No central record of complaints was kept until mid-1986. Since then there have been four complaints which have been fully investigated. It is not the Department's practice to publish the disciplinary action taken in individual cases.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1987

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to bring into force the remaining sections of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: We aim to make a further commencement order in March 1988 for parts II, III and IV (dealing respectively with the appointment by the court of managers, the compulsory acquisition of the landlord's interest in certain circumstances and the variation of leases) and to bring the remaining provisions into force as soon as possible thereafter.

Nature Reserves (County Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions he is making to privatise Castle Eden Dene, Hawthorn Dene and other nature reserves in the county of Durham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has asked the Nature Conservancy Council to consider whether there is scope for national nature reserves to be held in private ownership under appropriate conservation safeguards. The council's advice is expected later this year.

Hawthorn Dene site of special scientific interest is already in private ownership. I understand that part of the site is managed by a local conservation trust, but it is not designated as a national nature reserve.

Recycled Grant, Hertfordshire

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out a table showing the amount of rate support grant-recycling received in 1987-88 by Hertfordshire county council and each district council in Hertfordshire; and whether that recycled grant was spent.

Mr. Chope: There was no recyling in the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement.

Rating Reform

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish, for every London borough, metropolitan district and non-metropolitan district, the proportion of income which would be taken by community charge in 1987-88 consistent with his figures of 17 November 1987 for community charges with no safety net for a married couple whose joint gross income was (a) £4,000, (b) £5,000, (c) £7,500, (d) £10,000, (e) £15,000, (f) £20,000, (g) £30,000, (h) £50,000, and (i) £100,000, on the assumption in each case that the couple was not entitled to any social security support;

(2) if he will publish, for every London borough, metropolitan district and non-metropolitan district, the proportion of income which would be taken by community charge in 1987-88 consistent with his figures of 17 November 1987 for community charges with no safety net, for a single person with a gross income of (a) £3,000, (b) £4,000, (c) £5,000, (d) £7,500, (e) £10,000, (f) £15,000, (g) £20,000, (h) £30,000, (i) £50,000, and (j) £100,000, on the assumption in each case that the individual was not entitled to any social security support.

Mr. Howard: I am writing to my hon. Friend.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees of the Property

Services Agency (full-time equivalents) are engaged in selling real property (leasehold or freehold) owned by Government Departments.

Mr. Chope: PSA controls the disposal programme estimated to bring in £124 million in 1987-88 for all surplus MOD and Government civil estate property. A central disposals unit of eight professional estates staff handles major MOD cases. Other disposals work is the responsibility of regional estates staff as part of their management activities. The time spent on disposals represents the equivalent of about 45 of these staff. Actual marketing of property is conducted by appointed agents.

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list those clients other than Government Departments, for whom the Property Services Agency carried out work during the year ended 31 December 1987.

Mr. Chope: Following is a list of organisations other than Government Departments which paid in the year ending 31 December 1987 for works and estates services provided by PSA. Services for most of these clients were incidental to PSA's normal operations and the payments were small.

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were employed by the Property Services Agency on 31 December 1987 and on the last day of each of the preceding eight years.

Mr. Chope On 31 December 1987 25,743 non-industrial and industrial staff were employed by the Property Services Agency (including staff in the Crown Suppliers and engaged on work for the United States forces). I regret that it is not possible, in the time available, to provide staff numbers for the last day of each of the preceding eight years. The numbers employed on 1 April in those years, however, were:—

	Number
1979	40,095
1980	36,626
1981	34,763
1982	31,512
1983	30,077
1984	28,747
1985	27,779

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to reduce the numbers employed by the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope From 1 April 1988 the number employed by the agency will depend on changes in the workload for client Departments and the money voted for resource costs, of which manpower costs are a part. The agency will continue to seek opportunities to reduce staff by contracting out more work to the private sector where that would result in better value for money.

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees of the Property Services Agency have been prosecuted for fraud, theft or corruption during each of the past eight years; how many of those have been convicted; and how many have been disciplined but not prosecuted for such offences.

Mr. Chope The information requested (in respect of both non-industrial and industrial staff) is as follows:

(1) Year	(2) Number of Officers Prosecuted	(3) Number of Officers Convicted	(4) Number of Officers Disciplined but not Prosecuted
1980	5	5	6
1981	1	1	6
1982	11	10	8
1983	2	2	10
1984	5	5	9
1985	6	4	19
1986	5	3	4
1987	3	3	9
1988	1	1	—

Notes:
1. The year in column 1 is that in which action on the cases was completed. There are six outstanding cases where officers have been charged but the prosecutions are not completed.
2. Column 4 includes a number of minor cases where the offence involved travel and subsistence claims or abuses of working hours rules etc.

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to eliminate fraud, theft and corruption in the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: The Wardale report, published in 1983 drew attention to a number of weaknesses in the agency's defences against fraud and corruption. In 1984 there were allegations of major contractual irregularities in certain PSA London district works offices which culminated in the recent conviction of a number of PSA officials and contractors at the Central Criminal Court. Further trials relating to those allegations are pending.

In the period since 1984 the agency has taken a number of steps to combat both contractual and other forms of fraud, theft and corruption. In the contractual field detailed contract audits have been carried out across the whole of the agency's organisation and new procedures, including computerised records of all tenders, have been set up in key areas. Systematic and regular monitoring and inspections now take place in all district works offices. A special unit has been established to investigate suspected cases of fraud, theft and corruption and to undertake random inspections of individual PSA offices. A restructuring of the agency's regional organisation has included the strengthening of management control of district works offices.

By these various means I am sure that the agency has improved its defences against fraud, theft and corruption, but continued vigilance is essential and will be maintained.

Sale of Property

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of how many houses and flats which Property Services Agency has received instructions from Government Departments to sell contracts for sale have not yet been exchanged; and how many of those houses and flats remain unsold more than (a) four months, (b) eight months and (c) 12 months after instructions to sell were received by the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: As at 31 December, 43 dwellings on the Government civil estate accepted for disposal by the Property Services Agency had not yet reached an exchange of contracts. The breakdown of this figure is:

	Number
With PSA for less than 4 months	3
With PSA for more than 4 months but less than 8 months	17
With PSA for more than 8 months but less than 12 months	3
With PSA for more than 12 months	20

Information about dwellings on the defence estate is being provided separately by the Ministry of Defence.

Water Authorities (Sale of Land)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether water authorities are required by him to sell freehold or leasehold land which is surplus to operational requirements; and how much surplus land has been sold by each of the nine water authorities in each of the past eight years.

Mr. Moynihan Yes. The sales of unused or underused land in each year from the land register in acres are as follows. Disaggregated information is not available before 1984.

	1981-82 (inclusive)	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Anglian Water	270	221	10	178	74	7
Northumbrian Water			3	17	3	15
North West Water			14	25	1	10
Severn Trent Water			3	nil	27	nil
Southern Water			4	nil	nil	nil
South West Water			2	21	10	21
Thames Water			7	44	nil	65
Wessex Water			6	nil	10	nil
Yorkshire Water			nil	12	1	nil

Water Authorities (Surplus Land)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of land suplus to operational requirements are owned, whether freehold or leasehold, by each of the nine water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: The acreage of unused or underused land on the land register held by each English water authority at 31 December 1987 was:

	Acres
Anglian Water	242
Northumbrian Water	126
North West Water	390
Severn Trent Water	185
Southern Water	344
South West Water	22
Thames Water	542
Wessex Water	9
Yorkshire Water	422

Sir Christopher Wren (Museum)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to initiate or provide funds for a museum to commemorate the life and work of Sir Christopher Wren; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no plans to set up such a museum, and am not aware of proposals from others to do so.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all members of staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. Guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff.

Three formal complaints have been reported centrally to personnel division in the last five years; all were investigated and disciplinary action was taken as appropriate.

Pesticides

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific steps he is taking to make sure that farmers and agricultural workers are aware of the new controls on the use of pesticides, as from 1 January.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has distributed some 200,000 copies to date of the leaflet "Pesticides—Guide to the New Controls", which will continue to be made available at suitable agricultural shows and events. This will be supplemented before this year's spraying season with a further publication drawing particular attention to the measures coming into force in both 1988 and 1989. We plan to publish at about the same time a revised list of centres providing training appropriate to certification requirements for pesticides users. We will also be publishing a new draft of a code of practice for the agricultural and horticultural industry.

The Ministry's publicity efforts are not being carried out in isolation. The Agricultural Training Board and the proficieny tests councils are giving prominence to the training requirements and many sections of the industry are helping to get the message across.

Citrus Fruits (Chemical Spraying)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce the labelling of EEC citrus fruit coming into the United Kingdom which has been sprayed with the chemicals thiabendazol or ortophenilphenol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 January 1988]: Strict controls on the levels on which these chemicals may be used as preservatives on fruit are laid down in the regulations following advice from independent experts. There is no requirement in the food labelling regulations that such fruit should be labelled and I have no plans at present to alter that situation.

EMPLOYMENT

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Nicholls: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. The DE group's policy was agreed on this basis. It was issued to all staff in December 1984 with guidance on the reporting and handling of complaints. We have monitored this policy since July 1985 and in the 18 months to December 1986 (the last date for which figures are available) 31 cases have been reported. Appropriate action has been taken in all cases. Disciplinary penalties imposed have ranged from a written warning to a transfer at the offending officer's own expense.

Community Programme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the effect of the community programme in competing with private building companies for work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Following representations from the building industry in 1986, the Manpower Services Commission agreed procedures for ensuring that existing jobs and activities are not put at risk by community programme objects.

Labour Statistics

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the number of persons out of work and claiming benefit in each parliamentary constituency in (a) August 1984 and (b) April 1987 and the percentage charge revealed by these figures for each constituency.

Mr. Lee: I am sending my hon. Friend the information requested which is also available in the Library.

Local Enterprise Agencies (Corby)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the total payments made under the programme of assistance to local enterprise agencies in the Corby development area in each year since 1980.

Mr. Cope: None. No agency in the Corby development area has applied for a local enterprise agency grant, nor for approval under the terms of section 48(4) of the Finance Act 1982.

Settle to Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects the joint report for the Manpower Services Commission-Jarvis plc study into job creation and promotion along the Settle to Carlisle railway corridor to be received; whether it will be circulated to all interested parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The final report of the feasibility study is expected at the end of January. Ministers and those with an interest will be sent a copy.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the joint report of the Manpower Services Commission-Jarvis plc study into job creation and promotion along the Settle to Carlisle railway corridor; whether copies will be made available for all the local authorities assisting in financing the local se along the Settle to Carlisle railway; and if he will m statement.

Mr. Lee: Copies will be made available for comme local authorities, and I shall arrange for copies to be p in the Library.

Disabled Workers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State Employment what information he has on the perce of disabled workers employed in (a) the public secto (b) the private sector.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to the reply 3 December c. 600]: I regret that there was an error in line 4 c original text and the figure 8 per cent. should read 0 cent. The correct text should read as follows:

"The only information available is about the exte which employers covered by the quota scheme meet obligation under that scheme. On 1 June 1986, 0·8 per of public sector employees, and 1 per cent. of private employees, were registered disabled."

Fit for Work Scheme

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State Employment how many employers in (a) the public and (b) the private sector have gained the Manp Services Commission's Fit for Work award in each of the award to 1986.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the reply giv my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secreta State on Wednesday 2 December, Official Report col 600-1

The Fit for Work award is now a Departme Employment responsibility adminstered by the em ment service.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State Employment if he will make a statement on the awards in the Manpower Services Commission's F Work scheme.

Mr. Lee: The Fit for Work award scheme is Department of Employment responsibility adminis by the employment service. The national reception f 1987 award winners took place at Lancaster house December 1987. 100 awards have been made in 1987 the names of the 100 winners were announced on that

Unemployment Benefit Claims

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State Employment if he will publish up-to-date figues sho (a) the total number of new benefit claims unemployed people since the beginning of 1987, (b) many of these claims resulted in a benefit award, breakdown of the difference in the two figures showi numbers deemed unavailable for work, those de voluntarily unemployed, withdrawn claims and any reasons and (4) the number of appeals against b decisions, distinguishing between different type decision, together with the results of such appeals.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 7 December 1987]: I been asked to reply.

In the first 10 months of 1987 some 4·1 million c to unemployment benefit were made. It is estimate 40 per cent. of all new claims result in payment of unemployment benefit only, 10 per cent. in payment of both unemployment benefit and supplementary allowance and 35 per cent. in payment of supplementary allowance only. The remaining 15 per cent. do not attract any benefit but a large proportion of these claims result in an award of credits.

Of claims not attracting unemployment benefit, about 5 per cent. are disallowed unemployment benefit on the grounds of unavailability for work, 30 per cent. are disallowed on the basis that the claimant became unemployed voluntarily and 65 per cent. for other reasons, such as the receipt of a payment in lieu of notice, dismissal for misconduct or delayed claim.

The latest available figures for appeals are for the quarter ending 31 March 1987:

Reason for disallowance

	Non-availability and limited availability for work	Voluntarily unemployed	Other
Number of appeals heard	716	1,002	3,161
Number decided in appellant's favour	251	426	976

Ante-natal Provision (Crewe and Nantwich)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures have been taken in the Crewe and Nantwich health district to ensure that the ante-natal provision complies with the recommendations of the report "Maternity Care in Action" of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee.

Mrs. Currie: The Maternity Services Advisory Committee's report provides health authorities with a guide to good practice to be used to improve the quality of maternity care. It is for individual health authorities to examine with all concerned the way ante natal care is provided locally and the hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the Crewe health authority for the information she seeks.

Consultants' Reports (Lothian and the Borders)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time it takes in the Lothian and the Borders health board areas for a full medical consultant's report to come if it is called for in making an assessment of a person's eligibility for industrial disablement benefit.

Mr. Scott: This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Charities

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will break down how the £15 million to be donated to charities following the adjustment to benefits announced on 18 November was arrived at.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: The amount announced on 18 December of £10 million to £15 million to be donated to charities was an initial estimate. We now expect that around £14·5 million will be available. About half of this represents the underspend on social security expenditure after the special payments have been made, and the remainder underspend on public sector pensions.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants will receive no increase in their benefit following the adjustment being made due to the error in the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that about 4·5 million people who receive a social security benefit that is affected by the error in the retail prices index will not be included in the February special payments exercise.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social services what would have been the additional cost of adjusting all benefits following the errors in the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: As I announced in my statement to the House on 18 December, we estimate that £109 million will have been underspent as a result of the error in the calculation of the retail prices index. This is equal to the sum which will be disbursed in the form of special payments to social security beneficiaries and donations to charities. Administrative costs would have been considerably higher if we had attempted to calculate and pay each individual loss.

Child and Family Allowances

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing for each year since 1958 the combined value of child tax allowance after clawback and family allowance or child benefit expressed in November 1987 prices for the first, second and third child in standard rate tax paying families.

Mr. Scott: Comparison of values at dates other than upratings can be misleading. The figures up to the last general benefit uprating date of April 1987 are given in the table. They will be updated when the movement in the retail price index over the 12 months to April 1988 is known. Until the mid-1960s, the value of support, including child tax allowances, was substantially more for families paying standard rate income tax than for families on average earnings.

NHS (Restrictive Practices)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to reduce restrictive practices within the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: We always seek to ensure the most effective and efficient working practices within the National Health Service to secure the best possible service to patients.

Nurse Training

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of trainees in England entering nursing for the state registered nurse registered general nurse course for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Newton: The information is:

Social Fund

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of S Social Services whether he proposes to make additional grants from the social fund in res community care needs.

Mr. Scott: Community care grants are intended certain priority groups who are receiving income meet exceptional expenses. The social fund is not of weekly maintenance and help will be provided of lump sum payments. At present we do not pro alter these arrangements.

Personal Allowances and Premiums

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of S Social Services when he hopes to announce the l personal allowances and premiums operating fro

Mr. Scott: The rates are set out in the Income (General) Regulations 1987 and the Housing (General) Regulations 1987 which were made November1987.

As I made clear in my reply to my hon. Fri Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 3 November columns 705-6, these rates are the same as the p rates announced on 27 October 1987.

Housing Benefits

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of S Social Services whether he intends to place an up on housing benefit in respect of rents.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member consultation paper (a copy of which is in the l issued jointly by the Department and the Depart the Environment in October 1987 on the housing implications of the Government's proposals for deregulation of new private sector lettings. This paper proposes a number of measures to ensure that, with an increasing proportion of rents in future not subject to statutory rent control, rents which attract support from the Exchequer through housing benefit are not unreasonable. These measures include the setting of limits on benefit to be awarded on the most expensive privately rented properties in each local authority area. The intention is to prevent abuse and only a small proportion of accommodation in any area is likely to be covered by this arrangement.

Correspondence

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now reply to the letter written to him by the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 23 October 1987 about Mr. Kenneth Davies, of 34 Union street, Birkenhead.

Mr. Portillo: My noble Friend wrote to the hon. Member on 30 November 1987 requesting information on his constituent, Mr. Kenneth Davies, to enable him to trace Mr. Davies' papers.

Hospital Waiting List (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current hospital waiting list in Bradford for (a) urgent cases, (b) urgent cases waiting more than one month, (c) non-urgent cases and (d) non-urgent cases waiting more than one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The latest information available centrally is given in the table.

Health Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to regional health authorities' allocations to district health authorities of the extra funds announced on 16 December 1987.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Allocations to district health authorities are a matter for the regional health authorities, and we do not yet have detailed information about their decisions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crown Properties (Fire Inspections)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fire inspectors are in post whose duties include the inspection of Crown properties in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: There are currently two officers who are designated by Her Majesty's chief inspector to inspect Crown premises.

Prisons (Private Sector Involvement)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any contingency plans to involve the private sector in the running of prisons, in the event of a strike by prison officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would not be sensible to give details of our contingency plans to maintain prisons and to prevent serious disorder in the event of industrial action by staff.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A women prisoners there were in Her Majesty's prison Durham in December 1987; and how many strip searches were made on these prisoners in that month, indicating strip searches before and after consultation with legal advisers, after visits and after cell changes, wing searches and cell searches, and listing reasons for searches and illegal contraband or smuggled items found.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During December, there were three category A women prisoners in Durham prison. The number of occasions on which each was strip-searched during the month is shown in the table:

	Inmate A	Inmate B	Inmate C
After legal visits	—	—	—
After other visits	2	5	3
At the time of cell changes, and wing and cell searches	3	2	2

No authorised article was found on any of the three women. But, as the hon. Member is aware, strip-searching is a routine security measure to which all inmates—male and female—are subject and its justification lies not only in the fact that staff do discover items (such as drugs, syringes, plastic knives sharpened into daggers, and scissors) which they would not otherwise find, but in the deterrent effect which such searching undoubtedly has.

Rifle and Pistol Clubs

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the conditions for the approval of rifle and pistol clubs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On the basis of inquiries made by the chief officer of police for the area concerned my right hon. Friend has to be satisfied that:

i. safety certificate for the categories of firearm to be fired are in existence for the ranges to be used;
ii. the security arrangements for the storage of club firearms and ammunition are satisfactory;
iii. the application is being made by, or on behalf of, a bona fide club; and
iv. there are no other considerations that would make the club unsuitable for approval.

Police Manpower

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers and civilians have been recruited to date since his announcement of increases in May 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: 10,687 police officers were recruited to all forces in England and Wales including the Metropolitan police between the end of May 1986 and 31 October 1987, the latest date for which information is available, either to replace officers who retired or resigned or to enable forces to implement increases in establishment. In this period, the strength of the police service, excluding those who are on secondment, increased by 2,692 police officers, from 119,325 to 122,017. Information on civilian recruitment is not held centrally but the number of civilians rose by 1,704 from 39,621 to 41,325 in the same period.

Welsh Language

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on the production of civil protection material in the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The question of providing a Welsh language version of the public information on civil protection was carefully considered at the time it was produced, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. We are guided by the criteria of demand, expediency and expense recommended in the 1965 Hughes-Parry Report on the "Legal Status of the Welsh Language". In the light of those criteria, we were not persuaded that there was sufficient demand to justify the considerable costs which would have been involved in the production of a Welsh language version of this material.

Immigration

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications to adopt children from the Commonwealth have been received; how many were admitted to permanent residence in the United Kingdom since the most recent change in the relevant legislation; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) how many applications for admission for permanent residence have been made for adopted children from the Indian sub-continent, and how many have been granted, since the most recent change in the immigration rules.

Mr. Renton: Information is available centrally only on the numbers of children granted settlement in the United Kingdom in 1986 on the basis of their adoption by a person already settled here. Of a total of 85 such children, 13 were nationals of the Indian sub-continent countries, 23 were Commonwealth citizens (including Bangladesh and India) and 62 were foreign nationals.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he received from hon. Members concerning immigration matters in each year from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Renton: The available information related to the number of immigration files created following representations by right hon. and hon. Members, and is as follows:

	Number
1983	11,456
1984	13,164
1985	16,024
1986	17,511
1987	11,856

Notes:
1. These figures include a number of letters dealing with general issues rather than individual cases.
2. Representations made on behalf of a single family m as more than one case where the immigration circumst than one member of the family are under considerati
3. Further representations made after reply has been se separately in these figures.
4. Representations received about the same case from right hon. Member or hon. Member are counted sep
5. These figures include representations on after entr as those arising from port refusals where stops on followed by written representations.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of S Home Department how many representati received in the last year urging that hon. Mem be stopped from making representations to immigration matters; and if he will list the n individuals or organisations who have representations in the last year.

Mr. Renton: None, but I refer the hon. M reply of 27 November to the hon. Member for (Mr. Battle) at columns 366-67.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of S Home Department if he will arrange for a suspects index held by immigration officers in the Library; how many names are included suspects index; under what categories are th and what are the definitions of each categor

Mr. Renton: I will write to the hon. Mem

Correspondence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of S Home Department what is the policy in his on acknowledging correspondence; and average time taken between correspondence b and acknowledgement being made.

Mr. Hurd: The Department deals with co as quickly as possible. Because of the dispar the correspondence received by divisions, an numbers of staff available, practice on ac correspondence necessarily varies. Details o time between receipt and acknowledgeme obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of S Home Department what is the average time taken by officials in his Department to addressed to his Department; what is the tot unopened letters now awaiting attent Department; and how long he anticipates it deal with the backlog.

Mr. Hurd: The information could be obt disproportionate cost, and would not be sig the amount of correspondence awaiting att considerably from day to day between divisio to the level of incoming work and the staff

The large number of applications for re British citizens received in the latter part of produced delays in dealing with correspondei to the immigration and nationality depar effort is being made to reduce, as quickly a the resultant backlog of work.

Departmental Houses and Flat

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State Department how many houses and flats c

Department are surplus to operational requirement; and how many have been empty for more than (a) four months, (b) eight months and (c) 12 months.

Mr. Hurd: Of nearly 8,000 dwellings owned by the Department, 218 are currently identified as surplus to operational requirements, 201 have been vacant for more than four (but less than 12) months and 11 for over 12 months. Six are still occupied. The Department is further reviewing its holding of dwellings.

Mr. Peter Wright (Pension)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations were received from Mr. Peter Wright before his retirement about his pension entitlement; what representations have been received from Mr. Peter Wright since his retirement about his pension entitlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: There are proper channels through which such representations may be made. I have no further statement.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for registration for British citizenship were received in his Department by 31 December 1987; what policy has been adopted to decide whether or not an application was received by 31 December 1987; if he will now extend the deadline by six months; and how many representations he has received urging the deadline to be extended.

Mr. Renton: We have an estimated 250,000 registration and naturalisation applications awaiting initial consideration. We cannot yet say how many of these are applications for registration. In practice, to take account of postal delays around Christmas, we are treating applications as having been made before the deadline if they had postmarks earlier than 1 January 1988, regardless of when they were delivered; or if they were delivered by post before 7 January provided the declaration on the form was completed by 31 December 1987. There is however no power to extend the 31 December time limit in respect of applications under section 8 of the British Nationality Act 1981 made on the grounds of marriage. The exercise of discretion to accept late applications made by Commonwealth citizens under section 7 of the Act must take account of the special circumstances of each individual case.

We have received representations about the deadline from 17 right hon. and hon. Members, three local authorities and five organisations.

Departmental Telephone System

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of installing a new telephone system in his Department, when the new system became operative; and when Ministers took steps to inform hon. Members of their new telephone numbers.

Mr. Hurd: The new system became operative on 11 January. The cost was about £785,000, including VAT. On 13 January, details of Ministers' new numbers were made available through Whips' offices. I am sorry this was not done sooner.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of S Northern Ireland what was the total number of who died in Northern Ireland as a result of violence in each of the past five calendar years.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 14 January 198 information is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Number of persons murdered by terrorists (also includes those murdered as a result of internal disputes)	65	53	48	55
Number of persons believed to be terrorists and assumed to have been killed by their own devices or weapons	1	—	1	—
Number of persons killed believed to be terrorists killed by the security forces	6	7	3	4
Total deaths associated with terrorist activity	72	60	52	59

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the trend in the number of deaths and injuries due to terrorist violence since 15 November 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 14 January 198 information is as follows:

	1985 16 November to 31 December Deaths	1986 1 January to 31 December Deaths	1987 1 January to 31 December Deaths
Number of persons murdered by terrorists (also includes those murdered as a result of internal disputes)	6	55	80

Total injuries[1]	86	1,450

[1] Information on injuries is not collected in a way which allows it to be categorised as for deaths above.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Accidents (Drink-Driving)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of road traffic accidents were related to drink-driving in 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that about one tenth of all injury accidents result from driving with excess alcohol in the blood. There were 247,854 injury accidents in 1986.

In 1985, 1,000 road users died in crashes and collisions where the driver or rider was over the legal limit, representing one fifth of all road deaths in 1985[2].

In 1985, 60 per cent. of drivers and riders who were killed in road accidents between 10 pm and 4 am had a blood alcohol level in excess of the legal limit, compared with 15 per cent. at other times of the day[3].

Bus Deregulation (Cheshire)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding the costs or savings to Cheshire county council in 1986-87 following bus deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Cheshire county council budgeted to spend £5·5 million on revenue support for passenger transport in 1986-87. Following deregulation, I understand that actual expenditure for that year was less than £3·5 million.

Thelwall Viaduct

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of major works to be undertaken on the Thelwall viaduct.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We announced on 5 January our plans to widen the M6 between the M56 and M62, including Thelwall viaduct, to dual four lanes with hardshoulders.

The £58 million scheme includes a new viaduct alongside the existing one for southbound traffic and rebuilding the existing structure for northbound traffic. Construction might start in about four years.

National Bus Company

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to permit sales of National Bus Company subsidiaries which significantly undervalue the book value of the assets concerned.

Mr. David Mitchell: Each Nation subsidiary has been widely marketed establishing through competitive bi valuation of the business as a going co

Traffic Flows (Kirkby Stephen)

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish up-to-date figures for traffic flows, including figures for heavy lorries, for the road passing through Kirkby Stephen between Tebay and Brough; and by how much they have increased in recent years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A685 is a local road for which Cumbria county council is the highway authority. The 1986 annual average daily traffic flows were about 2,900 vehicles to the east of Tebay and about 4,600 just north of Kirkby Stephen, both including approximately 11 per cent. goods vehicles. During the 1980s, flows have increased by about 4 per cent. per annum.

London City Airport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the withdrawal of the operators' licences to fly to and from the London City airport and Paris.

Mr. Channon: The Civil Aviation Authority provisionally suspended the operation of flights between London City airport and Paris on 18 December pending the outcome of an inquiry into the safety of these flights in south-east air space. The conclusions of the inquiry, which the CAA announced today, recommend three alternative routes to Paris, and the airline operators concerned have confirmed that they consider themselves competent to operate flights on those routes.

A13 (North Circular Road to Tower Bridge)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the A13 trunk road between the A406 north circular road and Tower bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A scheme to improve the A13 Newham way-A117 East Ham Manor way junction is in the national roads programme. An interim traffic management scheme there will open this spring.

Two studies are under way to identify other schemes. Consultants are expected to report very shortly on possible improvements to the A13 between Dagenham and Limehouse to relieve congestion and cater for increased traffic arising from regeneration of docklands. Stage II of the East London assessment study covers the western end of the A13.

Tyre Treads

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultations he proposes to hold with the police and motoring organisations concerning the current regulations on tyre treads and the EEC proposed directive thereon; what steps he is taking to assess the effectiveness of current regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require tyre tread depths on motor vehicles to be a minimum of 1·6 mm over the entire width of the tyre.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current regulations on tyre tread depths were made in 1983 and specify 1 mm across three quarters of the width of the tyre with visibl the remainder. The regulations were thoroughly two years ago in consultation with the police, the organisations and other interested parties. Th considered the evidence as regards enforceability safety and led to the conclusion that no further c the regulations were needed. The commissior produced new evidence on which it is necessary fresh consultation exercise.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of Transport how many motor vehicles in each c three years failed the MOT test because of unsa tyres.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many. The mo figures based on a 2 per cent. sample are as foll Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of Transport how many scheduled crossings have on the Woolwich ferry since 1 April 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many. Up to 13 about 25,000 crossings have been lost.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of Transport what discussions he has had with th borough of Greenwich about the future operati Woolwich ferry; and with what outcome.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department conti in regular contact with the London borough of G A substantial improvement in service should be if the package of measures arising from the ma review is agreed by the work force.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of Transport when he received the final repo consultants on the future operation of the Woolw and what action he has taken or intends to ta recommendations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As I told the hon. Mem October, Official Report, column 484, we rec consultant's final report last July. A package of based on the recommendations has been pu ferrymen and their representatives by the London of Greenwich. Negotiations are continuing.

Horne Committee

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for T if he will make a statement on the implementati recommendations of the Horne committee.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We attach great impo improving the arrangements for the carrying out by public utilities in highways and securing ap reinstatement immediately afterwards.

The Government's response to the Horn published in July 1986, accepted the great majo recommendations. We are pressing ahead with the detailed technical work required on many of the recommendations. We shall continue to seek a suitable opportunity to bring before Parliament proposals for primary legislation on the lines already announced.

Travis Brow, Stockport (Land Development)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the land at Travis Brow, Stockport, which was included in the compulsory purchase order for the M63, to be disposed of; and what delays have occurred to this disposal since the Minister with responsibility for roads and traffic wrote to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish in November 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We will dispose of this site as soon as possible after acquiring the two outstanding interests. Some progress has been made since November towards completing the acquisitions. We are considering arrangements for the sale.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Computers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding is given to the study of the psychology of the interface between computers and human operators, with a view to redesigning computers; and what representations he has received from Science and Engineering Research Council and Natural Environment Research Council on this topic.

Mr. Jackson: A variety of work is carried out on the human-computer interface, although not all of it is applicable to the redesigning of computers. The Science and Engineering Research Council has spent some £11·5 million on collaborative research into studies of the interface between computers and human operators over the five years of the Alvey programme. The Medical Research Council is supporting research on the psychology of the interface between computers and human operators, at its applied psychology unit and the MRC-ESRC social applied psychology unit. In 1986-87, the funding on this research was £0·51 million. The economic and social research council has supported research costing in total about £0·25 million over the last three years, largely in support of the cognitive science and information technology initiative. We have received no formal representations from these councils.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has given to the request from Dai Rees, secretary of the Medical Research Council, that the Medical Research Council budget should be increased from £140 million to £180 million.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not received a request from the Medical Research Council for such an increase in its budget.

Medical Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his assessment of the costs in real terms of the funding of medical research in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Jackson: The Government fund medical research through the science budget. The allocations—at 1987-88 constant prices—for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 are as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	131·3
1987-88	139·8

Additionally, there is funding through the UGC block grants to universities. Precise attribution to medical research is not possible, since universities' research activities cannot be clearly distinguished from other activities including teaching. The latest notional figures for medical research—1987-88 constant prices—are:

	£ million
1985-86	157·9
1986-87	161·6
1987-88	162·0

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the Medical Research Council Alpha programme he funded in 1987; and what percentage he hopes to fund in 1988.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council that, in the last award year 1986-87, 63 per cent. of alpha-rated project grant applications were awarded; it is for the council to decide what resources it wishes to allocate to grants in the award year 1987-88.

AIDS

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied with the level of funding into the spread of the human immuno deficiency virus in heterosexuals.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is supporting research on the spread of human immunodeficiency virus in heterosexuals. Funds for this research come in part from my Department and in part from the Health Departments. The MRC is planning additional work in this area for which it is seeking extra funds. In addition to allocations already announced, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has agreed to provide £700,000 in 1988-89 for the MRC's programme of research on the spread of HIV. The Economic and Social Research Council is additionally to launch a programme of research into the social and behavioural aspects of HIV; this programme will concentrate on heterosexual behaviour. United Kingdom researchers also collaborate with scientists working on the problem in other parts of the world.

CERN (Report)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the Abragam report on CERN; and what is the likely timing of key meetings during 1988.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 17 December 1987 at column 634. The Abragam report on CERN will be considered at the Council meetings on 23/24 June 1988 and 13/14 October 1988. Discussion will also take place at meetings of subordinate committees before and between these dates.

Ozone Hole

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give an assessment on the progress of (a) British, (b) international and (c) Falkland Island based research into the ozone hole.

Mr. Jackson: The following is the current position:

a. British Research

The seasonal ozone depletions in the Antarctic were first identified from regular measurements of ozone column amounts undertaken by the British Antarctic survey, now part of the Natural Environment Research Council. Measurements began in 1957. In 1987, with assistance from the Chemical Manufacturers Association (USA), and the Department of the Environment, the survey undertook a programme of ozone measurements using balloon borne instruments. Profiles of the ozone layer were obtained daily from the British research station 'Halley', on the Brunt ice shelf. Between altitudes of 14 and 18 km, a reduction of 97 per cent. in the ozone present took place between 15 August and 13 October 1987.

Apart from this BAS research, modelling studies of Antarctic ozone are being undertaken by the Meteorological Office, and by the Department of physical chemistry, university of Cambridge. Laboratory studies of reactions of the chlorine monoxide radical are being undertaken by the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell.

The Rutherford-Appleton Laboratory of the Science and Engineering Research Council has relevant collaborative projects with American institutions.

b. International Research

The United States has mounted three major investigations into the Antarctic ozone depletions. Ground-based measurements of the abundances of the various chemical constituents were under-taken at McMurdo station in 1986 and 1987. In August and September 1987, extensive measurements were made from two aircraft based at Punta Arenas, Chile, flying into and underneath the 'ozone hole'. Preliminary results indicate that chlorine compounds are largely responsible for the depletions. Discussion of the full results is planned for May 1988. Laboratory and theoretical studies are being undertaken at many research centres throughout the United States.

Field programmes are also being undertaken by New Zealand, Japan, West Germany and the USSR. Other nations have relevant laboratory or modelling programmes.

There have been several meetings devoted to discussion of the Antarctic ozone depletions, and all have been marked by a spirit of international co-operation.

Attention is now being given to the possibility of an 'ozone hole' over the Arctic and a research programme has recently been announced in West Germany.

c. Falkland Islands upper-air observations

The Meteorological Office makes routine radio-sonde ascents, in support of air operations. Since mid-1987 the data obtained has been made available to the global meteorological network. Research specific to the ozone problem is not undertaken.

Marine Sciences (Redundancies)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had from Hugh Fish, chairman of the Natural Environment Research Council on compulsory redundancies within two years in Natural Environment Research Council laboratories, related to the marine sciences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Fish wrote to my right hon. Friend on 4 September concerning, inter alia, the future funding of the Natural Environment Research Council. I understand that, at its next meeting on 21 January, the Natural Environment Research Council will consider priorities within its programmes, including marine science, and the staffing implications of those priorities. The Council hopes that any staff reductions can be achieved without recourse to compulsory redundancy.

Education Reform Bill

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children he expects to be eligible for a special education school under the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Dunn: It is for each LEA to determine its own policy in respect of children with special educational needs. Each LEA makes its own decisions on school placements for children with special educational needs in the light of the consultations which lead up to the statement of the school provision they use. My right hon. Friend does not expect any significant change in the numbers of children attending special schools as the result of the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many special education schools he estimates will exist once the Education Reform Bill has been fully implemented.

Mr. Dunn: The provision of special schools is not for my right hon. Friend; it is a matter for local determination by each individual LEA. My right hon. Friend sees no reason to believe that the number of special schools will change as a result of the implementation of the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many classroom teachers were consulted about the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: Copies of the consultation papers issued by the Department of Education and Science were sent to all the national teachers' organisations. In addition, copies were freely available from the Department. Many teachers were among the 20,000 respondents who have sent in comments.

GCSE

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much extra finance is being made available for implementing the general certificate of secondary education curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: For the start of the GCSE courses in September 1986, the Government provided directly for some £30 million expenditure on books, equipment and in-service training in England. Our expenditure plans allow for a further £115 million to be spent in the financial year 1987-88, and up to £104 million to be spent in 1988-89, on non-teaching costs and in-service training associated with the introduction of the GCSE. In addition, the Government have provided some £1 million in assistance to the GCSE examining groups in England in the years 1984-85 to 1987-88, mainly to help provide training for teachers and examiners.

Schoolteacher Vacancies

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schoolteacher vacancies have been unfilled for (i) six months or more or (ii) a year or more in each local education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information in the form requested is not available. The table shows the numbers of previously advertised vacancies for full-time permanent appointments to maintained secondary schools, still unfilled by permanent appointment at 15 January 1987.

Financial Delegation

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet received the report by management consultants on financial delegation to schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The report on "Local Management of Schools" by Coopers and Lybrand Associates is being published today. I welcome the report as an important document. It contains encouraging evidence of the benefits of financial delegation, and valuable advice on the practical steps needed to implement the Government's policies on financial delegation, as embodied in the Education Reform Bill now before the House. The report will be studied carefully by my Department, and deserves to be read by all those with an interest in this field.

I am sending copies to all local education authorities in England and to other interested bodies. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is doing likewise in Wales. I have placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

Higher Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the most recent figures for the number of young people going on into sixth forms or other further education establishments for (a) England and Wales, (b) the Inner London education authority, (c) Croydon, (d) Kingston upon Thames, (e) Brent and (f) Sheffield; and if he will give each as a total and as a percentage of the total year group for each area.

Mr. Dunn [holding reply 11 January 1988]: The number and percentage of 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time education at maintained secondary schools and furth education establishments in the academic year 1986-87 each specified local education authority and in Engla are given below. Pupils in independent schools have be excluded from the answer. Information for Wales is t responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary State for Wales.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

"Crockford's Clerical Directory"

Mr. Chapman: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what was the cost to the Church Commissioners of publishing Crockford's Clerical Directory for 1985-86; and what is the anticipated cost for the 90th edition, relating to 1987-88.

Mr. Alison: Production costs are shared by the Church Commissioners and the Central Board of Finance. The 1985-86 directory cost £82,000 and revenue from sales and advertising was £96,000. The cost of the 1987-88 edition is expected to be about £80,000 and sales should exceed this.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Corporation Tax

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of extending the 27 per cent. small companies rate of corporation tax to the first £100,000 of profits of every company or, as the case may be, group, so that on no profits does the marginal tax rate exceed the 35 per cent. standard rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Of the order of £70 million at the rates due for the 1987-88 financial year.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with respect to the small companies rate of corporation tax (a) when the £100,000 lower limit and £500,000 upper limit for marginal relief were last changed, (b) what the respective limits would be for 1988-89, on present forecasts of inflation, if they were indexed for inflation since the date they were last changed, and (c) what would be the cost of increasing the limits to those figures.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The limits were last changed 1983 — in respect of the financial year 1982-83. indexed in line with changes in the RPI, they wou become approximately £130,000 and £650,000 for 1988-8 The cost of indexation would be approximately £ million in a full year at current levels of company incom

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of t Exchequer what information he has as to the relationsh between income tax levels and tax yields in the Unit Kingdom and in other countries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The relationship between incon tax levels and tax yields is a complex one, and may affected by changes in the levels of employment, t distribution of income and the level of economic activi over a period of time. Figures for the level of taxes a income tax thresholds for the United Kingdom and number of other OECD countries are given in the annu publication by the Inland Revenue of "Internation comparisons of direct tax on employment income"; t yields are given in "Revenue statistics of OECD memb countries", which is published annually by OECD. Bo publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of t Exchequer what was the average income tax paid p household in 1979 and in 1986-87 in (a) current prices, ( 1979 prices and (c) 1987 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 Decemb 1987]: Information is available only for income ta liabilities of tax units, ie single people and married couple The figures for 1978-79 are from the survey of person incomes of that year; 1986-87 information is based on projection of the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes an is therefore provisional.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current yield from value added tax on standard rated supplies in the construction industry; and if he will estimate the net additional revenue in a full year from the imposition of value added tax at the standard rate on new construction other than housing.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that the yield from value added tax on building improvements and alterations will be around £1,250 million in 1987-88. It is estimated that the new additional revenue in a full year from the imposition of value added tax at the standard rate on new construction other than housing would be about £350 million at 1987-88 prices. Because of the uncertainties involved in estimating the effects of such a change on the construction sector, the estimate should be taken as no more than an indicator of the order of magnitude.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the additional revenue which would accrue to the Treasury in a full financial year if value added tax were levied (a) on industry and commerce on the supply of water and sewerage services, (b) on information services other than those intended directly for the public or for the production of zero-rated products, (c) on the construction of buildings for industrial and commercial use and in the community and civil engineering sectors and (d) on supplies of fuel and of protective boots and helmets in so far as they are not supplied to the final consumer at the current uniform value added tax rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 December 1987]: It is estimated that the net additional full year revenue at 1988-89 prices of imposing value added tax at the standard rate of 15 per cent. would be:

	£ millions
(a) Sewarage services and water for industry	negligible
(b) Information services other than those intended directly for the public or for the production of zero-rated products	negligible
(c) Construction of buildings for industrial and commercial use	350
(d) Fuel and Power to industry	25
(e) Protective clothing and footwear to employers	negligible

These estimates provide only a broad indicator of the likely order of magnitude.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will arrange to publish and place in the Library the relevant parts of the 1952 notes between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America which exempted maintenance and equipment contracts for United States forces in Britain from value added tax.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The 1952 exchange of notes to which the hon. Member refers was published as Command Paper No. 8497 in March of that year. A copy is in the Library.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the reform of forestry taxation policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As is customary at this time of year, my right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on a wide range of subjects.

Productivity

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much productivity has increased in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Major: In the third quarter of 1987, output per head in the whole economy was 19 per cent. higher than in 1979. In the three months to October 1987 manufacturing output per head was 41 per cent. higher than in 1979.

Cross-border Banking

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has received to date from the European Commission as to European Community proposals for cross-border banking activities and securities business; what the response of Her Majesty's Government has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I understand that the European Commission has adopted a proposal for a directive on banking to put to the Council of Ministers. The directive deals with the conditions on which a bank authorised in one member state would be able to set up in or provide a range of core banking services into another member state on the strength of its home country authorisation. There have been preliminary discussions in a Commission working group, which the United Kingdom attended, but we have not yet seen the final proposals. They will be put before Parliament in the normal way.

Job Creation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, further to his answer of 28 October 1987, he will provide his estimate of the short-run effect over a five-year period upon jobs created for the expenditure of £1 billion in (a) defence spending, (b) public transport,

(c) construction, (d) health and (e) education, based on the current Treasury model and current underlying assumptions.

Mr. Major: It has not been the practice to publish estimates of the economic effects of changes in public expenditure.

Payroll-Giving Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are now making charitable donations through the payroll-giving scheme.

Mr. Brooke: In most Departments, the necessary forms are in the process of being made available to staff, but the information asked for is not yet available.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what commitments and estimated costs Her Majesty's Government have incurred as a result of the signing of the memorandum of agreement to proceed with the Government data network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No commitments to the consortia bidding for the Government data network have been incurred by Her Majesty's Government as a result of the signing of the memorandum of agreement. A decision on whether or not to proceed to contract will be taken after tenders have been evaluated.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guarantees are provided for the security of confidential information (a) belonging to Government Departments and (b) held on individuals in the proposal for the Government data network to be managed privately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: It is not planned to transmit classified information across the proposed Government data network. Data will be protected against corruption and unauthorised access while in transit. User Departments are responsible for all their data, and would be responsible for providing any additional protection for sensitive information.

BP Shares

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on what day his Department made contact with the Kuwaiti Investment office to discuss purchases of BP shares;

(2) with which representatives of the Government of Kuwait and representatives of the Kuwaiti Investment offices his Department discussed the operation of BP share purchases.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, met the Kuwaiti authorities during the visit to Kuwait from 20 to 23 December 1987.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs officers are involved in duties at London City airport.

Mr. Lilley: There are 12 customs officers involved on duties at London City airport.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor o Exchequer what proposals he has to change the trea for capital gains tax purposes of losses incurred disposal of shares held in a personal equity plan.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It has always beer Government's intention that, provided a personal plan is kept in being for the minimum qualifying p of between one and two years, investments m switched from one qualifying share to another wi creating either a capital gains tax liability or an allo loss. However, the Inland Revenue has now received advice which suggests that, contrary to this inte losses from disposals of shares held in a plan m allowable for capital gains tax purposes.

The Government therefore intend to include a pro in the 1988 Finance Bill ensuring that a disposal of s in a personal equity plan which is kept in being fo minimum qualifying period cannot create an allo loss for capital gains tax purposes.

If enacted, the proposal will apply to any disposal on or after today of shares held in a personal equity

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor o Exchequer what was the cost to the Exchequer in ea the privatisation flotations undertaken by Her Maj Government since 1980 of the underwriting (a) i United Kingdom and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 Dece 1987]: The cost of underwriting in each of privatisation flotations and residual shares sales since is as follows:

£ m

Company name	Year	United Kingdom offer	Overseas offer
British Aerospace	1981	2·42	—
Cable and Wireless	1981	3·92	—

Notes:

1. Figures shown are exclusive of VAT.
2. Figures do not include underwriting costs for shares offer the company in the 1985 British Aerospace and 1985 Cable Wireless sales. These costs were wholly borne by the company.

In most of the privatisations and residual share sales c were shared with the company. Details of the cost sha agreements negotiated for each sale are not held centr

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the money spent on the advertising of privatisation sales, for each sale since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 December 1987]: The total expenditure on advertising for recent privatisation and residual share sales is as follows:

		£m
British Telecom	(1984)	11·7
Britoil	(1985)	3·1
Cable and Wireless	(1985)	3·1
British Aerospace	(1985)	1·8
British Gas	(1986)	11·5
British Airways	(1987)	5·8
Rolls Royce	(1987)	3·0
BAA	(1987)	8·5
British Petroleum	(1987)	23·1

Notes
(1) Advertising costs associated with these sales were shared with the companies concerned. Details of the cost sharing arrangements negotiated for each sale are not held centrally.
(2) Figures include expenditure on corporate advertising, offer for sale advertising and advertising agency fees.
(3) The BP figure is an estimate. Final costs to be confirmed.
(4) Advertising costs for earlier share sales are not held centrally.

Family Income and Allowances

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, on the same basis as the ready reckoner published in the Autumn Statement, the effect on a one-earner, two-child family of spending in 1988-89 the same sum on (a) a one penny cut in the basic rate of income tax, (b) raising income tax thresholds above their indexed levels and (c) raising child benefit, assuming (i) no change in income support rates and (ii) corresponding changes in income support rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The effects of the proposed changes on a one earner, two child family vary according to the level of income of the family. The table contains information based on direct revenue or expenditure cost in a full year at forecast 1988-89 levels for selected, specimen levels of earnings. Each of the measures would cost £1·4 billion in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income—ie, the full-year figure underlying the first-year cost of a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax, £1·25 billion, shown, in the Autumn Statement.

The income tax changes compared with the 1987-88 tax regime indexed to 1988-89 according to the statutory provisions under the same assumptions about price movements as were used in the Autumn Statement. The income tax calculations assume that all personal allowances and higher-rate thresholds would increase by the same percentage and disregard any changes in social security income-related benefits to which the family may be entitled. It has also been assumed that the only tax relief or allowance available to the married couple is the married man's allowance and that the wife has no earnings.

Income and Taxes

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each decile of persons, households or tax units (i) the average annual income and the amount thereof paid in (a) direct taxes, (b) indirect taxes and (c) household rates and (ii) the percentage of annual income such payments represent for each decile.

Mr. Major [holding answer, 13 January 1988]: The information requested is given in the table in respect of 1985, the latest year for which estimates are available. The unit of analysis is the household and gross income represents income from all sources.

Revenue Collection

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take to ensure that tax collection offices are adequately staffed to obviate second applications and final demand notices being sent to taxpayers in error.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 January 1988]: Tax collection offices are complemented according to the work they are required to do, and I have no reason to believe that these offices are inadequately staffed. Furthermore, there is no evidence to suggest that errors in the issue of applications for tax is a widespread problem, but if the hon Member has evidence to the contrary I will look into the matter.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) second application and (b) final demand notes for income tax payments have been sent out by the Inland Revenue in error during the last 12 months.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 January 1988]: Statistics on the number of second applications or final demand notes issued in error are not available.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representation he has received seeking the abolition of the married man's income tax allowance; and what response he has made.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 January 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer continues to receive a wide range of correspondence on this subject. Replies have referred to the Green Paper, "The Reform of Personal Taxation", which outlined a possible new system of independent taxation of husband and wife with a standard personal tax allowance transferrable between spouses, and to the fact that we are now exploring the possibility of a halfway house to the Green Paper approach.

Jobs Dispersal

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to commission a further report on the dispersal of Civil Service jobs, in the light of the improvements in communication, information technology and the transport network, since the Hardman report was first published.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 January 1988]: The programme of dispersal announced in 1979 is nearing completion. The Government are preparing and will announce in due course a policy to succeed it. This policy will reflect the factors mentioned by the hon. M the potential benefits to the Civil Service localities concerned of siting work in areas w supply conditions and costs are favourable.

EC (Payments)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the what was the net payment made to the EEC by Kingdom Government for 1987.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 15 January 198 that the outturn figure is not yet available.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the A he will publish in the Official Report the attend for 1987 reported by the national museums a in England for which he is responsible, broke the individual institutions but comprising t tions, with figures in each case of the percent or decrease on the attendance figures for whether, in the case of such museums or galleri for admission, he will in addition specify the tickets sold.

Mr. Luce: I will reply substantively to the h as soon as information on 1987 attendance fi national museums and galleries is available.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Ar to his answer of 14 December 1987, Offic column 376, whether (a) the sales of item national museums to which he refers took pla auction in the United Kingdom and (b) the the vendors of these items were specified in t sale catalogues.

Mr. Richard Luce: The information requ follows:

Institution	(a) Items sold by public auction in the United Kingdom	Identi specif s
British Museum	Yes
British Museum (Natural History)	No	N
National Maritime Museum	No	N
Victoria and Albert Museum	Yes

The British museum (natural history) sold a Victorian bound volumes of fern specimens

Zealand in December 1987. Due to the specialised nature of the collection, the volumes were offered to selected individuals known to have an interest in the subject.

The national maritime museums sold a duplicate chart of the Orkney Islands (c. 1946) to Thames Television in January 1987, and a microscope to the Whipple museum of the history of science, Oxford in December 1987. This item had been on loan to the museum for some time.

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will specify the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half year ended 31 December 1987 of individual works of art and muse objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfactio inheritance tax or capital transfer tax, together w information, where applicable, as to conditions or wis expressed in the matter of allocation by testators executors; whether he will list the works of art museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, w the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfactio inheritance tax or capital transfer tax; and whether a p notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libra covering the information given in his reply.

Mr. Luce: The information is as follows:

DEFENCE

Safariland Lodge, Lake Naivasha, Keny

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for what was the cost of the 50m extension to the jet Safariland lodge on Lake Naivasha, Kenya, soldiers of the First Battalion, the Royal H Fusiliers, during their stay in the area in Novemb and who paid.

Mr. Freeman: The materials were provided
Safariland lodge. The jetty was built by soldier
First Battalion, the Royal Highland Fusilie volunteered to undertake the task during one of t periods. No costs were incurred by defence votes

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for what was the cost of the dinner for the band of Battalion, the Royal Highland Fusiliers and their friends at the Safariland lodge on Lake Naivasha in Kenya on the weekend of 21 November 1987; and who paid.

Mr. Freeman: The dinner for the band of the First Battalion, the Royal Highland Fusiliers and two members of the unit responsible for administering the camp at Lake Naivasha was proposed by the Safariland lodge. No costs were incurred by defence votes.

First Battalion, Royal Highland Fusiliers (Kenya Visit)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit by the First Battalion, the Royal Highland Fusiliers to Kenya in November 1987; how long they stayed; what was the cost; and who paid.

Mr. Freeman: The battalion deployed to Kenya on a major overseas training exercise from 20 October 1987 to 3 December 1987. The in-country cost of the exercise was about £170,000 and was met from defence funds.

Trident

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 11 January, Official Report, column 69, when the arrangement came to an end whereby the purchase of the Trident missile system would be at an exchange rate of $1·50 to the pound sterling.

Mr. Sainsbury: The dollar cost in the Trident estimate announced to Parliament each year by my right hon. Friend is given at the exchange rate used in recosting the current defence long-term programme. The estimate of £9,265 million, announced in January 1987, was thus based on an exchange rate of $ 1·50 to £1 sterling. The cost of dollar expenditure in the United States is governed by the exchange rate prevailing at the time of puchase of those dollars.

Home Defence Exercises

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what role 3 Commando Brigade will play in the district home defence exercises to be held from September to November;

(2) what role 5 Airborne Brigade will play in the district home defence exercises to be held from September to November;

(3) what is the maximum number of (a) military personnel and (b) brigades due to participate in the district home defence exercises to be held from September to November;

(4) if United Kingdom-based infantry brigades taking part in the district home defence exercises to be held from September to November will participate in exercises in military districts other than their own.

Mr. Freeman: Of the four home defence brigades, three will participate in their own district exercises, while 5 Airborne Brigade will give some exercise support to South-east district and Wales. The aggregate number of troops participating in nine separate exercises at various times over a nine week period is aproximately 60,000. No district will have more than 6,500 troops in the field in any one day.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of S
(1) if the wartime headquarters of the commanders-in-chief committee will be the district home defence exercises to September to November;

(2) if the wartime headquarters of land forces will be activated during th defence exercises to be held from Septemb

SSIXS Equipment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of S how many United Kingdom-owned and U operated SSIXS shore terminals in Britai installed and (b) are planned.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of United K and operated RN SSIXS satellite commun have been installed ashore; the need f

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of St pursuant to his reply to the hon.
Clackmannan on 7 December 1987, column 88, what weapon systems other th submarines have been fitted with SSIXS

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Membe given on 11 January 1988 at column 64.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of St whether Royal Navy Trident submarines w

Defence Contracts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 26 November 1987, Official Report, column 281, he will give the names of the companies under investigation for alleged fraud in connection with defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. It would be inappropriate to provide this information whilst police inquiries are continuing.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will itemise all the estimated costs to be incurred by his Department in relation to the British Army equipment exhibition from 26 June to 1 July in Aldershot.

Mr. Sainsbury: All additional costs incurred in relation to the British Army equipment exhibition are recovered from the companies participating in it.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel will be on duty at the next British Army equipment exhibition in Aldershot.

Mr. Sainsbury: Some 750 military personnel will be on duty in support of the British Army equipment exhibition 1988.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any firepower and mobility demonstrations are planned in conjunction with the next British Army equipment exhibition at Aldershot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In conjunction with the 1988 British Army equipment exhibition, there will be mobility demonstrations but no firepower demonstrations.

British Nuclear Test Programme (Report)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he received the National Radiological Protection Board's report on those members of Her Majesty's Forces who were the victims of the British nuclear test programme; and when he expects it to be published.

Mr. Sainsbury: I expect to receive the final report of the NRPB into the mortality and cancer incidence in the United Kingdom participants in the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon tests and experimental programmes very shortly. I understand that the NRPB intends to publish the report towards the end of the month.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Simon Armstrong

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons Simon Armstrong, general manager, has asked to resign from the Falkland Islands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: As the Falkland Islands Development Corporation has already explained, Mr. Armstrong has asked to be transferred from the Falkland Islands because of an irreconcilable conflict of personalities within the local administration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Recycled Paper

32. Mr. Janner: To ask the Lord President Council if he has any proposals for measures to i the quantity of recycled paper used in the House.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. and learned Me the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southw Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 12 November last a when I indicated that the Accommodatio Administration Sub-Committee will be reconside use of recycled paper in the House in the near fu

Mineral Waters

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Lord Presiden Council (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the waters sold by the Refreshment Department a British owned, fully meet the requirements of the Mineral Water Regulation 1985 and conform to E Community directive No. 80/778; and if he will statement;

(2) what information he has as to which of the mineral waters it is proposed to sell in the House meet the requirements of EC directive No. 80/778 he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The Catering Sub-Committee i to decide which mineral waters are in future to be p for sale in the House; and I am sure that in reac conclusions it will take account of the requiremen regulations and the EC directive.

Scottish Standing Committee

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Lord Preside Council what information he has as to the nu occasions since 1958 on which hon. and rig Members representing constituencies outside S have been nominated to serve on the First or Scottish Standing Committee.

Mr. Wakeham: Members representing consti outside Scotland have been nominated to the Second Scottish Standing Committees on the fo occasions:

Session	Number of times
1958-59	1
1959-60	15

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Reports

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Public A Commission how many reports the Public A Commission has presented to the House; and i make a statement.

Sir Peter Hordern: Since it was first established the Public Accounts Commission has presente reports pursuant to section 2(3) of the National A

National Audit Office

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he receives a copy of the National Audit Office's annual programme of work; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Peter Hordern: The National Audit Office's programme of economy, efficiency and effectiveness reports and investigations is submitted to the Committee of Public Accounts, which advises the Commission on the National Audit Office's estimates. The Commission also considers the National Audit Office's corporate plan.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms (Police Use)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been killed or injured by police using firearms in each year since 1979; and how many of those had neither been convicted of any offence, nor were being pursued by the police in connection with any alleged offence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is as follows:

Year	Injuries	Deaths
1979	—	1
1980	4	1
1981	1	—
1982	3	—
1983	3	—
1986	1	—
TOTAL	25	8

Of these, three persons who were injured, and two persons who were killed, were not being pursued by the police in connection with any alleged offence. The information relating to the number of those injured or killed who had not been convicted of any offence could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Firearms

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in response to his recent White Paper on "Firearms Control".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the White Paper was published we have received about 900 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and about 1,500 from members of the public, secretaries of rifle and pistol clubs, shooting organisations, and a number of other bodies. They have raised a variety of points on our proposals.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the possible effects of his proposals in the Firearms (Amendment) Bill on British participation in international shooting events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only international shooting events in which British participation will be affected by the Bill are practical shooting events involving the use of full bore self-loading rifles. We have received representations from shooting organisations opposing the change concerned, but my right hon. Friend is not persuaded that the limited sporting use of these weapons justifies their continued possession by private individuals.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the basis for his estimate that the manpower effects of the Firearms (Amendment) Bill will be 80, mainly civilian, additional personnel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is our rough assessment after consulting the police of the additional police resources required to administer the provisions of the Firearms (Amendment) Bill, mainly in relation to changes in the shotgun controls. This represents 60 civilian staff for England and Wales, and 20 for Scotland.

Political Asylum

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applicants awaiting a decision on their application for political asylum were released into the community during 1987; and if he will list the country of origin of those released;

(2) how many applicants awaiting a decision on their application for political asylum have been released to sponsors or others living in Hayes and Harlington during 1987; and if he will list their countries of origin.

Mr. Renton: Information is not readily available in the form requested. However, during 1987 some 1,615 persons applied for asylum on arrival at Heathrow, Dover and Gatwick. Their principal countries of origin were:

	Number
Sri Lanka	577
Iran	284
Uganda	161

During 1987, 449 asylum applications were detained for periods of more than 14 days. On 31 December 1987, 59 remained in detention. Information relating to the whereabouts of those granted temporary admission is not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Affairs (1) if he has any plans to amend the Gaming Act 1968 so as to restrict access to amusement arcades or centres to persons over the age of 16 years;

(2) if he has any plans to give local authorities greater controls over the proliferation and operation of amusement arcades and centres;

(3) if he has yet received a report of his research unit on young people's addiction to amusement machines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report on the review of legislation pertaining to amusement machines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The unit is preparing a report taking account of the results of research which we have now received. The question of legislation is among those which we shall consider when we have completed our assessment of the findings.

Female Prison Officers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the male prison establishments to which his Department has invited female officers to move.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In May 1977 female prison officers were invited to apply for posts at the male prison listed in column A for deployment to Crown courts to receive female offenders surrendering to bail. In November 1987 female prison officers were invited to apply for posts at the male establishments listed in column B for deployment to Crown courts as above, on searching duties and on additional tasks which do not impinge upon consideration of privacy and decency.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have served prison sentences of less than one week at Winson Green prison, Birmingham, since August 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the records held centrally, about 25 persons were initially received into Birmingham prison in the period 1 September to 30 November 1987 to serve sentences of less than one week.

Shirley Ann Bovell

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will answer the letter dated 15 November 1985 addressed to his right hon. and learned Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury on the subject of the admission to England of Shirley Ann Bovell, a citizen of Trinidad and Tobago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the relevant papers have been mislaid. I am writing to the hon. Member about this and his letter of 11 January in order that the matter may now be resolved as quickly as possible.

Oakham Police Station

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now give a date for authorising the Leicestershire police authority to start the construction of a new police station in Oakham.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We hope to be able to give approval in November for work on the new Oakham police station to start in 1991-92.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the work on finding effective, enforceable and reasonable provision to replace section 2 of the Official Secrets Act to be complete.

Mr. John Patten: As my right hon. Friend announced on 15 January, at columns 581-587, he hopes to lay before Parliament in June a White Paper setting out proposals for the reform of section 2.

Deportations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases the courts have given leave to move for judicial review of any decision to depot an individual from the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I regret that this information is not available.

Gaming Machines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he now has any plans to introduce legislation to control the proliferation of gaming machines and similar devices in shopping centres and to protect young people from them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We shall make our views known as soon as we have assessed the findings of the research which we have recently had done on this subject.

Firearm Certificates

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time for the issue and renewal of firearm certificates by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that for renewals a reminder notice to certificate holders is issued 10 weeks before the date of expiry, and that the necessary administrative procedures are normally carried out within this time.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each police authority the average length of time for the issue and renewal of firearm certificates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes (Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of neighbourhood watch schemes in the county of Durham and in particular within the sub-divisions of Seaham and Peterlee.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that there are now 149 such schemes in the county of Durham with 12 in the sub-division of Peterlee and six in the sub-division of Seaham.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers are involved in duties at London City airport.

Mr. Renton: Currently one chief immigration officer and six immigration officers.

Remands in Custody

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been remanded in custody awaiting trial for more than six months; and what percentage this is of the total number of people remanded in custody in each of the years from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is of the estimated length of time spent by the population of untried prisoners on 30 June since the first remand in custody, but it includes any intervening time spent on bail. These figures are published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales"—table 2(c) of the latest volume, 1986, Cm. 210—copies of which are in the Library. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Dogs

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has considered funding a public education programme for the purpose of highlighting the need for good dog care.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government applaud the work done by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and by other animal welfare organisations, in promoting a responsible attitude towards animals and pet ownership. In areas where they have been appointed dog wardens can assist in promoting responsible dog ownership. We have no plans, however, to extend the use of public money for these purposes.

PRIME MINISTER

LINK Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations the Cabinet Office have had from the Medical Research Council for the LINK programme, to develop ties between academia and industry, in particular with a view to establishing co-operation between pharmaceutical companies and universities to investigate new forms of drug delivery; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office has not received any representations from the Medical Research Council concerning the LINK programme.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list by name all non-departmental public bodies in existence on 1 June 1979 and those in existence on 31 December 1987.

The Prime Minister: Appendix A to the report on non-departmental public bodies (Cmnd. 7797) published in January 1980 lists by name 2,112 non-departmental public bodies in existence in September 1979. A list of the 1,643 bodies in existence on 1 April 1987 is to be found in "Public Bodies 1987", publication of which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office, on 2 December 1987, at column 575. Information relating to the dates requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Crown Prerogative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the exercise of the prerogative rights of the Crown in relation to the conduct of Government employees.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if any actions in exercise of a prerogative right of the Crown have been taken since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Innumerable actions in exercise of prerogative power have been taken since 1979; these range from the signature of treaties to the grant of the royal pardon.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received concerning exercise of prerogative rights of the Crown in respect of actions which could otherwise be subject to criminal proceedings.

The Prime Minister: None so far as I am aware.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will introduce legislation to permit a servant of the Crown to carry out a criminal act in the exercise of a prerogative right of the Crown.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals she has for precisely defining the conditions under which the powers are exercisable under prerogatives of the Crown.

The Prime Minister: None.

Regional Policy

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister how the announced changes in regional policy in "DTI—the Department for Enterprise" will affect future total Government regional spending in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland.

The Prime Minister: The White Paper "DTI—the Department for Enterprise" (Cm. 278) indicates that the changes in regional policy do not reduce the planned level of spending on regional industrial measures. Specific information on Departments' expenditure plans for the next three years will be set out in the public expenditure White Paper to be published on 20 January.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Secretaries of State for Scotland and the Environment in relation to their responsibilities for the Nature Conservancy Council; and if she will list the precise responsibilities of each of those Ministers in relation to the control and management of national nature reserves in Scotland and in England, respectively.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Members for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), and for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 13 January 1988 at column 281. My right hon. Friend carries out these responsibilities in consultation and co-operation with his ministerial colleagues, including my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Hugh Gaitskell

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister whether, pursuant to her answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 270, she is prepared to arrange for the file on Mr. Hugh Gaitskell, dating from 1957, to be made available for inspection on Privy Councillor terms; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As a matter of normal practice, I do not propose to confirm or to deny whether briefings on Privy Councillor terms are envisaged or have taken place, even in those cases where no such briefing is planned or has occurred.

British Politicians (Files)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 270, what is her policy towards holding files in her office on British politicians; what information she has as to when this practice started; how many such files there are of this nature; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No such policy is needed. As part of normal office procedure, files are opened on any subject arising in the course of public business for papers which may be received or generated on that subject. Such files form part of the public record and are considered for release at the appropriate time under the rules laid down.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the United Kingdom's relations with Turkey of the human rights situation in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: We believe that considerable progress has been made in recent years towards the restoration of human rights and democracy in Turkey. Our relations with Turkey, which is an important NATO ally, are excellent. We take every appropriate opportunity to raise the subject of human rights with the Turks. We welcome the announcement on 7 January that Turkey would sign the European convention for the prevention of torture.

Bahrain

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Bahrain authorities about allegations of torture, ill-treatment of political prisoners and other human rights abuses in the light of the 1987 Amnesty International report, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Her Majesty's ambassador in Bahrain has made representations at senior levels to the Bahraini authorities who are in no doubt about our views on torture and abuse of human rights. They are also aware of the legitimate interest taken by Amnesty International in these matters. A team from Amnesty International visited Bahrain in April and June 1987. They were well received and have entered into a dialogue with the Government of Bahrain.

British Consulates (Loans)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conveniently available figures in (a) one year terms and (b) percentage terms he has available to him, demonstrating the amounts of money lent by British consulates to British citizens abroad which have not been repaid as promised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Figures for the amount of money lent to British nationals in distress abroad, and the amounts repaid, for the years 1975-87 are shown in the table.

Repayment is often made by instalments over a period of months or years and does not necessarily relate to the year when expenditure occurred. Under a new scheme introduced on 1 January 1987 for on-the-spot small advances from public funds, £9,851 was lent in 1987 by British Consulates. Only £3,480 has so far been repaid.

The continuing reduction in the amount of public money lent and the number of persons assisted reflects a general policy of self-help and the application of stricter criteria to British nationals requesting public funds for repatriation or financial assistance. They are required to demonstrate genuine destitution and a lack of other available sources of funds.

Mordecai Vanunu

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if on his recent visit to Israel the Minister of State the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) specifically raised with the Foreign Minister Israel the current trial of Mordecai Vanunu and his disappearance from the United Kingdom in 1986, the issue of nuclear weapons deployment in the region or the reported claims of Israeli nuclear weapon capability.

Mr. Mellor: My discussions with Mr. Peres were confidential.

Zambia (Personal Remittances)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made since 20 July 1987 in his contacts with the Government of Zambia regarding blocked personal remittances lawfully due to British subjects formerly resident in Zambia, but now living in the United Kingdom; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I both raised the subject of blocked funds with Prime Minister Musokotwane of Zambia when he visited Britain in September. He regretted the situation and stated that individual cases of hardship would be considered. Mrs. Mavis Muyunda, Zambian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, reiterated this assurance to me in November last.

Indonesia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will list all the official delegations and Government-sponsored individuals and parties from Indonesia who visited the United Kingdom during 1987, stating in each case the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Eggar: The principal visits in 1987 were as follows:

February

Dr. Radius Prawiro, Minister of Finance; to open the new offices of Bank Negara (State Bank) in London.

March

Delegation from the Indonesian House of Representatives; to visit Parliament.

Professor Marsono Taroepratjeko, Vice-Rector of th Institute of Technology in Bandung; for discussions wit United Kingdom academics.

Professor Dr. Mohammed Adna, Vice-Rector of th University of Gaja Mahadah in Jogjakarta; to develop link with Universities.

May

Mr. Bamban Kesowo, Head of Legal Section of th Cabinet Secretariat; to discuss copyright matters.

Mr. Rahradi Ramelan, Deputy Chairman, BPPT (Agency for Assessment and Application of Technology); to discuss science and technology with officials and companies.

Professor Dr. Harsja Bactiar, Head of Office of Educational and Cultural Planning, Ministry of Education and Culture; for familiarisation.

July

Dr. B. J. Habibie, Minister of Research and Technology; for discussions with Ministers, and with United Kingdom companies involved in aircraft manufacture, shipping and heavy engineering.

Mr. Sulema Wiriadidaja, Technical Director of P T PAL (Indonesian Shipbuilding Organisation); for discussions with United Kingdom companies.

November

Chief of Staff of Indonesian Army, General Tri Sutrisno; for discussions with the Chief of the General Staff.

Professor Molejono, Rector of the University of Diponegoro at Samarang; to visit Universities.

Professor Amran Halim, Rector of University of Stiwijaya; to visit United Kingdom Universities.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the occasions during 1987 when United Kingdom Government or military officials visited Indonesia, stating in each case the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Eggar: The principal visits in 1987 were as follows:

April

Mr. W. E. Mason, Deputy Under-Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture; to discuss food policy and regulations.

May

Vice-Chief of Defence Staff; for discussions on defence matters, as part of a South-East Asian tour.

September

Lord Glenarthur, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs; for discussions with the Indonesian Government.

October

Mr. Christopher Patten MP, Minister for Overseas Development; for discussions on the United Kingdom aid programme.

Mr. Tim Sainsbury MP, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement; for discussions on defence equipment matters.

November

United Kingdom delegation to the Anglo-Indonesian joint working group on economic co-operation.

Afghanistan

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will be officially represented at the negotiations over the future of Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: The only formal negotiations are the proximity talks which take place at Geneva under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary General's personal representative. They involve the Kabul regime and the Government of Pakistan. The United Kingdom is not represented.

Dr. Jack Mapanje

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Government of Malawi about the fate of Dr. Jack Mapanje of the English department of the University of Malawi.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no standing to intervene directly, since Dr. Mapanje is a Malawi citizen. The Malawian Government are however well aware of our views on detention without trial.

Mr. Albert Flearmoy

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the fate of Mr. Albert Flearmoy, British citizen, arrested in New York last autumn.

Mr. Eggar: Following his arrest in New York on 21 April 1986, Mr. Flearmoy was charged with 17 others in connection with the illegal sale of arms to Iran. He was released on bail on 24 November 1986. He subsequently returned to the United Kingdom where, as far as we know, he remains.

European Commission (United Kingdom Staff)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many United Kingdom nationals are employed in the European Commission's national offices in other Community countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Three United Kingdom citizens are employed in press and information offices of the European Community Commission in European Community states other than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jorgen Hansen

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the European Commission the implications for its policy on the appointment of staff to senior positions in its national offices of the appointment of Mr. Jorgen Hansen to a post in its Welsh office; what is Mr. Hansen's salary; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no reason to raise the appointment of the new head of the European Community Commission's press and information office in Wales with the Commission. Such appointments are an internal matter for the Commission. The salary will be £1,998 per month.

Wildlife Conservation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many officials in Hong Kong are employed to inspect local restaurants to ensure that endangered species of animals are not served as food;

(2) if, pursuant to the reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 285, he will give details of the 14 seizures made in 1987 by the authorities in Hong Kong, following inspections at local restaurants;

(3) if, pursuant to the reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 285, he will give details of the 136 seizures made in 1987 by the authorities in Hong Kong of illegally imported animals and plants;

(4) if, pursuant to the reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 285, he will explain why only 80 restaurants were visited in Hong Kong during 1987.

Mr. Eggar: We are making inquiries of the Hong Kong Government and I will reply as soon as possible.

Youth Exchange Schemes

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the total budget for youth exchanges between Britain and Europe; and if he will make a statement on the effect on this total of contributing to the Youth for Europe scheme;

(2) how many people are covered by youth exchange programmes between Britain and Europe; how many schemes there are; how many of these are administered by the British Council; within the total how many places relate to each of Scotland, Northern Ireland and the North of England; and how many places relate to each of (a) the disabled, and (b) ethnic minorities.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available. I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many youth exchange places there are between Britain and Comecon countries.

Mr. Eggar: Britain's Government-sponsored youth exchanges are demand-led by British youth organisations. There are, therefore, no set number of places allocated each year. In 1986-87, a total of 1,902 young people were funded by Her Majesty's Government, to take part in exchanges with Comecon countries. The total grant amounted to £90,418.

ENERGY

Home Insulation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates have been made by his Department with regard to the proportion of public expenditure designed to encourage home insulation which is technically assessed as deadweight.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In public expenditure terms, my energy efficiency office's main scheme to promote insulation in the home is the community insulation projects, for which total Government funding, in 1987-88 is estimated at some £45 million. The projects provide a free or low-cost basic insulation service for low-income households. An independent academic study commissioned by the Department in 1985 found "no evidence of the free rider effect".

Private Coal Mining

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals to help to expand the private coal mining industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As I explained during the debate on the coalfield communities on 20 Novembe 1987 at columns 1362-3, the Government are committed to the development of a prosperous private sector for coal and are considering whether to raise the statutory limits applied to the licensed sector. If it was decided to present such proposals to the House, legislation would take time, and in the meantime I have been discussing with Sir Robert Haslam the scope for greater flexibility and transparency within existing legislation.

Sizewell B

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what developments have taken place since April 1987 in the implementation of recommendation 13 of the Sizewell B report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Recommendations 13(a) and 13(c) were addressed in the decision letter issued by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) on 12 March 1987, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House. As regards recommendation 13(b), I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 16 December 1987 at column 516 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick).

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to ask the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to halt the development of Sizewell B pressurised water reactor pending the recruitment of a full complement of inspectors by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive that the present staffing level of the NII is sufficient to discharge its responsibilities for Sizewell. Following the recent campaign to recruit more nuclear inspectors, the staffing level is increasing and is expected to reach the agreed complement of 120 inspectors by 1 April 1988.

Heysham 2

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of S Energy whether he plans to ask the chairma Advisory Committee for the Safety of Installations and the director of Her Majesty's Installations Inspectorate to carry out an en review of the design and construction of the Electricity Generating Board Heysham 2 nuclear

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Health and Safety Exe nuclear installations inspectorate has, as part of its licensing process, been reviewing and inspecting th and construction of the CEGB's Heysham 2 nuclea Following the consent of the inspectorate, fuel h loaded into the reactors. Consent for power ra expected when the remaining safety assessments ha cleared. There are no plans for ACSNI to look int is essentially a routine licensing matter.

Fast Breeder Reactor (Lyons)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for what information he has about the closure since Ma of the fast breeder reactor at Creys-Malville, east of France; whether it has any implications for the Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The French Governmen announced that they have agreed, in principle Superphenix can be restarted subject to studies bein on how to load the reactor core without using th storage vessel. Discussions have confirmed that the no implications for the United Kingdom, sinc Dounreay prototype fast reactor does not posse design feature which caused the problem in Superp

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for E what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that s managers who assume the role of emergency cont during a serious incident at a nuclear installation sufficient time to carry out both their duty to resto plant to a safe condition and their functions in relati co-ordinating monitoring of a radioactivity, adv emergency services on the need for evacuation determining whether potassium iodate tablets shou distributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All major nuclear sites in United Kingdom have offsite co-ordination centres main purpose of which is to relieve the emerg controller at the site of the responsibility for advisin the need for offsite counter-measures. Such centres part of the site emergency plans, which are approve HM nuclear installations inspectorate, in whose pres they are regularly rehearsed.

Coal Firing Scheme, Corby

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State Energy what are the total payments made under the firing scheme in the Corby development area in each since 1980.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There have been no paym made under the coal firing scheme in the Co development area.

Pit Closures

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the pits closed by British Coal since 1 March 1985 and the date of closure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested is as follows:

Nuclear Installations

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the nuclear installations constructed within 100 miles of the western coastline of Great Britain; and if he will make a statement on their safety.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following civil nuclear installations are situated within 100 miles of the western coastline of Great Britain:

CEGB
- Hartlepool
- Heysham
- Berkeley
- Oldbury
- Hinkley Point
- Trawsfynydd
- Wylfa

SSEB
- Hunterston
- Torness

Amersham International
- Amersham
- Harwell
- Cardiff

UKAEA
- Dounreay
- The Harwell Laboratory
- Atomic Energy Establishment—Winfrith
- Windscale Nuclear Laboratories
- Springfields Nuclear Laboratories

BNF plc
- Sellafield
- Calder Hall
- Drigg
- Capenhurst
- Springfields
- Chapelcross

Other sites
- Rolls Royce and Associates Ltd.—Derby
- Rolls Royce Nuclear—Derby
- Vickers—Barrow
- Universities Research Reactor—Risley
- ICI—Billingham
- Scottish Universities Research and Reactor Centre—East Kilbride

These installations have an excellent safety record and reflect the rigorous standards of safety which are maintained.

Alternative Energy Sources

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy at what level of energy cost long-shot renewable energy technology becomes a viable prospect for the purposes of his Department.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The original aim of the Department's renewables research and development programme, which was initiated in 1974, was to assess the potential contribution that all the renewable technologies could make to United Kingdom energy supply. That objective was largely achieved by 1985, and the broad aims of the Department's programme now are to encourage the uptake of those renewable technologies that have been shown to be commercially attractive and to increase our understanding of the economics of those that are "promising but uncertain". Technologies which are now classed as "long-shot technologies" have in most cases already been the subject of considerable R and D investment during the first phase of our work in this area. They have been classed as "long-shot technologies" because on all reasonable expectations about future fuel prices and about the minimum likely cost of exploiting the energy source once the technology has been developed, they are not expected to make an economic contribution to our future energy supply—under a wide range of economic scenarios—and on the time scale considered (2030).

A watching brief is maintained on all the "long shots" and if, as a result of new ideas or new information, it is judged that a particular technology could possibly make an economic contribution it would be reclassified as "promising but uncertain". As yet, this has not happened. Regular reviews of both the economic and technical potential of all the renewable technologies are carried out as part of our programme. The latest of these reviews was carried out in 1987 as part of a comprehensive appraisal of United Kingdom energy research, development and demonstration. This appraisal was published as energy paper 54, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

Coal Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many workers are employed in (a) public and (b) private mines and opencast sites in the north-east area of British Coal;

(2) if he will list the names and locations and levels of productivity in (a) private and (b) public opencast and licensed mines in the north-east area of British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Comprehensive information in the form requested is not readily available. I will, however, ask the chairman of the British Coal Corporation to write to the hon. Member.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Parkinson: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedure.

Guidance on reporting complaints of sexual harassment has been issued to all staff in my Department.

One complaint has been reported in the past five years. This was substantiated and a formal reprimand was given to the offending officer.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in promoting combined heat and power schemes since the Energy Act 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since 1983, the Government have provided £750,000 towards the costs of further studies on major urban CHP schemes by consortia in Belfast, Edinburgh and Leicester. The Leicester consortium has published a report on its findings and has formed a company, Leicester Energy Limited, to take the work forward. Reports from Belfast and Edinburgh are expected shortly.

Under the Department's energy efficiency demonstration scheme, £3 million has been committed to the support of 22 industrial and commercial projects. My Department has also provided £102,000 under the energy efficiency survey scheme, which provides grants of up to a maximum of £10,000 towards 50 per cent. of the costs of employing independent consultants for feasibility studies of non-domestic CHP schemes.

Private Electricity Generation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the change in total output from private electricity generators in the United Kingd 1983; and whether his Department has m assessment of the likely changes in the future.

Mr. Michael Spicer: From 1983 to 1986, t output from private electricity generators in Grea increased from 12·8 terawatt hours to 13·7 terawa The Government intend to stimulate competit encourage private generation in privatising the el supply industry.

Electricity Meters

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of S Energy what progress is being made in replacing c prepayment electricity meters with token-operate by the electricity boards; and if he will make a sta

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the el supply industry. I have asked the chairman Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member information requested.

Fuel Disconnections

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of S Energy (1) what has been the percentage chang number of domestic households disconnected f payment of electricity bills in (a) the United Ki (b) Wales, (c) Scotland, (d) England, (e) each standard English regions and (f) Northern between 1979 and 1987;

(2) how many domestic households' electricity was disconnected for non-payment of electricity (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales, (c) Scotla Northern Ireland, (e) England and (f) each standard English regions during the last year fo figures are available; what are the corresponding for each year since 1979; and in each case what per of all domestic users these figures represent.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the ele supply industry. I have asked the chairman Electricity Council to write to the hon. Member w information requested in respect of England and Electricity disconnections in Scotland and N Ireland are matters for my right hon. and learned the Secretary of State for Scotland and my righ Friend the Secretary of State for Northern respectively.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for if he will list in the Official Report the dates statements made over the past six months by him Parliament on the past and future uses of civil plutonium; and if he will place a copy of the text such statement in the Library.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Neither I nor my right hon. the Secretary of State has made any special stateme this subject.

Media Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for what is his practice towards responding to stateme accusations made on television, radio or in the Pr those areas for which his Department has responsi

Mr. Parkinson: I consider carefully any statement that comes to my attention and make any appropriate response.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list any occasions since May 1979 when Ministers in his Department have made statements in Parliament, or answered parliamentary questions, arising from information on nuclear energy matters broadcast on television or radio, or published in the Press.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Statements made to the House have reflected important developments in Government policy, matters of interest expressed by Members or areas of obvious public concern.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average increase in the cost of electricity for domestic consumers, for each year since 1975, in (a) the Federal Republic of Germany, (b) France, (c) Italy, (d) Holland and (e) Sweden; and what are the figures for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The reply of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) on 18 November included information about increases in the average price of electricity for domestic consumers in the United Kingdom since 1974. I will ask the chairman of the Electricity Council to provide the further information the hon. Member seeks.

CEGB Sites (Access)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct the Central Electricity Generating Board to ensure access with prior permission by the public to its nuclear power station sites.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB already actively encourages visits by members of the public to all its nuclear power station sites.

NUM President (Election)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the facilities which British Coal is giving to the National Union of Mineworkers for the election of its president; and in which areas they are being provided.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the management of the British Coal Corporation, and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Miners' Welfares

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the closure of Hucknall and Linby miners' welfare, announced on 26 December 1987; and what is his policy on subsidising miners' welfares in Nottingham.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the trustees of the Hucknall and Linby miners' welfare.

Brae C Field, North Sea

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State Energy when he expects to authorise the development he Brae C field in the North Sea.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is not my practice to comm on the timing of any eventual approval of spec development plans being considered by my Departme

EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State Employment if he will list in the Official Report those are of his departmental responsibility which extend Scotland.

Mr. Fowler: Except as detailed here, all departmental responsibilities extend to Scotland. Scottish employment and training matters, I act consultation with my right hon. and learned Friend Secretary of State for Scotland who is responsible approving the plans of the Manpower Servic Commission for its programmes in Scotland and w answers questions on the operation of MSC a employment programmes in Scotland. My right hon. a learned Friend has ministerial responsibility for the sm firms service in Scotland and for tourism in Scotland.

Official Overseas Visits

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State f Employment what official overseas visits Ministers in h Department have made over the last five years.

Mr. Fowler: A total of 25 official overseas visits we made by Ministers in my Department during the perio January 1983 to December 1987, excluding short-ter visits made specifically to attend conferences held b international bodies, eg. EC, OECD, ILO.

Details are as follows:

Dates	Country visited
19 July-29 July 1983	Netherlands
23 September-28 September 1983	France
1 October-7 October 1983	United States of America
17 October-20 October 1983	Federal Republic of Germany and Germany
20 November-22 November 1983	Federal Republic of Germany
25 September-5 October 1984	Hong Kong and Japan
11 December-8 February 1984	France

15 November-20 November 1985	United States of America
11 December-15 December 1985	Hong Kong and China

Wages Council Regulations (Infringements)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State fo Employment how many companies were prosecuted fo infringement of Wages Council Regulations (a) in Clwyd and (b) in Wales in 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1986 there were no prosecutions in Wales for offences under wages council legislation. In 1987, one employer in Clwyd was prosecuted. There were no other prosecutions in Wales.

Deptford Skill Centre

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much accommodation is available at the Deptford skill centre; how much of this is currently in use for training activities; and how much is currently unused.

Mr. Cope: The accommodation at Deptford skill centre comprises 10,154 sq m. The training workshops total 8,478 sq m, of which 6,408 sq m are currently in use and 2,070 sq m are unused. The use of space varies with courses on offer at any particular time.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the courses currently offered at the Deptford skill centre, indicating the take-up on each.

Mr. Cope: As at 11 January, the latest date for which figures are available, the information requested was as follows:

Course	Places Available	Places Occupied
Bricklaying	28	26
Carpentry and Joinery	28	27
Group Electronics	36	30

There was no recruitment for a period of three weeks over Christmas; hence some shortfall between places available and places occupied.

Low Earnings

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) full-time males on adult rates, (b) full-time females on adult rates and (c) full-time employees on adult rates earned (i) £110 per week or less and (ii) £120 per week or less, in England and each of the standard English regions, during the last year for which figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Information on the distribution of earnings by regions is published, for males and females separately, in table 113 of part E of the annual reports of the new earnings survey, copies of which are available in the Library for the years requested including 1987. The same information is not available for all employees prior to 1984 but the data from 1984 onwards are as follows:

of dangerous staging; he will bring this work under the same controls as apply to scaffolding in the construction regulations.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The existing provision in the Health and Safety at Work Act and the Shipbuilding and Ship-Repairing Regulations 1960 adequately provide for hazards in shipyards arising from the use of staging.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that advice booklets on workplace hazards are made more widely available and at a cost working people can afford.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive actively seeks every opportunity to publicise its extensive range of publications and to keep prices low. It publishes many leaflets and other material on workplace hazards free of charge.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy, in providing fuller inspection of building sites, to pay particular attention to unsafe scaffolding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It has been, and will continue to be, the policy of the Health and Safety Executive to pay particular attention to unsafe scaffolding during the inspection of building sites.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that the Health and Safety Executive guidance note on hazardous substances be updated annually.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to the Health and Safety Executive's "Guidance Note EH40—Occupational Exposure Limits". This is already updated and published annually and there are no plans to change those arrangements.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he takes to monitor the extent to which employers carry out their statutory duty to have a regularly updated safety policy for their workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive examine employers' safety policies as an integral part of HSE's enforcement of health and safety legislation. When necessary, inspectors require employers to update safety policies.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he is taking any measures to deal with the problem of safety on building sites where lump labour is employed.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is currently giving priority to the control exercised by main contractors over all aspects of work carried out by sub-contractors, including labour-only sub-contractors.

Job Release

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the Government's expenditure on publicity for the job release scheme for each year in which it has existed;

(2) if he will list the number of new participants in the job release scheme for each year in which it has existed.

(3) if he will list the Government's total expenditure on the job release scheme for each year in which it has existed.

Mr. John Lee: I am afraid that the inform expenditure on publicity for the scheme is av at disproportionate cost. In addition some pub job release scheme is impossible to separate f action for jobs publicity. However, the i requested on new entrants and scheme costs i the tables.

SCOTLAND

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his plans to encourage wider access to further and higher education in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The White Paper "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114, April 1987) stated the Government's objective to increase participation rates in higher education and invited institutions to respond accordingly. We need to increase participation both by encouraging more young people school and gain entrance qualification education and by making it easier for the school early to progress to higher educatio further education system.

With the prospect of a marked decline ov years in the size of the under-21 age group education institutions in Scotland have beg increase participation by those without entrance qualifications for higher educa including mature students. Recent figures about 6,000 entrants a year, or about one total entrants to higher education in Scotl over 21.

My Department is encouraging closer between the further and the higher educ particularly directed at identifying best encouraging students capable of progressi education who may have left school wit entrance qualifications. The growing use o national certificate will help in this.

Progression from further to higher educ made easier by better articulated courses diploma and degree level, to allow credits to accumulated at one level and transferred a at the next. This will also make part-time st those in employment who wish to progress t It will also make it easier to for those who fa a course at a higher level to leave with som qualification at a lower level.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State what information he has on recent talks betwe of Scotland Electricity Board and th ambassador to the United Kingdom concerni for importing electrical power by cable from what consideration has been given by his De any such imports of Icelandic electricity.

Mr. Lang: I am aware that there has speculation about the possiblility of importi from Iceland by submarine cable, but I have no knowledge of any discussions with the Scottish electricity boards and I have received no firm proposals. However, I understand that the Icelandic Minister of Industry is planning to visit Scotland shortly and that the question of exporting electricity to the United Kingdom may be among the topics he wishes to explore.

Ibrox Park Stadium

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last made an official visit to a Glasgow Rangers football match at Ibrox park stadium; whether he has received any report from the Strathclyde police concerning crowd control arrangements at Ibrox park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has not been invited to the stadium. He has not received a report from Strathclyde police on crowd control arrangements there, nor does he see a need to ask for one.

Administration of Justice

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of reports submitted by the police to procurators fiscal were marked "no proceedings" by reason of resources not being available to deal with them within the judicial system, in each fiscaldom in Scotland in respect of each full year since 1984 and in 1987 up to the date for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reports submitted by the police to procurators fiscal were marked for no proceedings in each fiscaldom in Scotland in respect of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986 and to the most recently available date in 1987.

[1] District Courts were introduced on 16 May 1975, to replace the Justice of the Peace Courts and Burgh (or Police) Courts.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of reports submitted by the police to procurators fiscal were marked no proceedings in each fiscaldom in Scotland in each of the years 1984, 1985, and 1986 and to the most recently available date in 1987.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1987 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions but comprising their outstations, with figures for each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	1987	Percentage change since 1986
National galleries of Scotland	524,261	−1·02
National museums of Scotland	547,395	+17·26

The national galleries of Scotland comprise the National Gallery of Scotland, the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art and the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. The national museums of Scotland comprise the Royal Museum of Scotland buildings at Chambers street and Queen street, Edinburgh, the Scottish Agricultural Museum, the Scottish United Services Museum, the Museum of Flight and the Shambellie Museum of Costume.

Low Earnings

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) full-time males on adult rates, (b) full-time females on adult rates and (c) full-time employees on adult rates earned (i) £110 per week or less and (ii) £120 per week or less, in Scotland during the last year for which figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Estimates of the numbers of full-time employees on adult rates by the level of their earnings are not available. The table gives information about the distribution of gross weekly earnings for some full-time employees. The source is the "New Earnings Survey", which is conducted by the Department of Employment and covers a 1 per cent. sample of employees who are members of PAYE schemes. The corresponding figures for years prior to 1984 are not readily available. The percentages for male employees and for female employees are given in table 114 of the "New Earnings Survey" part E reports, available in the Library of the House.

Full-time employees on adult rates whose earnings for the survey pay-period were not affected by absence

	1985	26·8	34·4
	1987	18·3	24·6

Note: These figures are subject to sampling errors, and cannot be assumed to apply to all full-time employees because they do not cover, for example, private domestic servants, those who are not on adult rates, and those who are not members of PAYE schemes.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dairy farmers in Scotland do not produce milk up to their allocated quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the 1986-87 quota year 1,702 dairy farmers in Scotland produced less than their allocated quota, the majority falling short by less than 5 per cent.

Although producers are advised by the milk marketing board to maximise use of their quota, ultimately this is a matter for the individual. At the end of each quota year unused quota is utilised mainly to offset the supplementary levy liability of over-quota producers and thereby provides an important element of flexibility within the system. In the two years prior to 1986-87 the availability of unused quota ensured that no supplementary levy was paid by producers in Scotland.

Drink Offenders

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many offenders with drink problems were diverted from prosecution in the criminal justice system to such service as social work or psychiatric assistance or to a designated place or similar facility in 1985-86; and what steps are currently being taken to increase this number.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

Hypothermia

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in (a) the Dundee area and (b) the Tayside area in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 December 1987.

Rate Support Grant (Tayside)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate support grant paid to Tayside regional council in each of the financial years since 1978 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) rent terms expressed in 1986-87 prices; and what percentage of total spending in each year this represents.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is set out in the table.

Tayside

	RSG cash	RSG 1986-87 cost terms	Percentage of relevant expenditure
	£'000s	£'000s
1978-79	63,874	124,271	63
1979-80	74,105	123,358	63
1980-81	88,525	124,297	61
1981-82	96,813	123,801	59
1982-83	100,607	120,014	56
1983-84	106,211	121,127	56
1984-85	104,637	114,300	53
1985-86	112,401	115,788	54
1986-87	114,743	114,743	51
1987-88	124,784	119,697	51

Notes:

1. The figures for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 are final. Those for 1984-85 to 1987-88 will be varied following the next rate support grant order. The figures reflect selective and general abatement of grant, except that for 1987-88 no adjustment has been made for grant penalties since they will be restored for authorities which bring their expenditure down to guidelines on outturn.
2. The GDP deflator has been used to convert RSG to 1986-87 prices. The expenditure figures used in the final column are those for relevant expenditure including loan charges.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of rate support grant for education paid to Tayside regional council in each of the financial years since 1978, expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, expressed in 1986-87 prices; and what percentage of total spending in each year this represents.

Mr. Lang: Rate support grant is paid in support of a authority's income generally. It is not attributable to particular services.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what, at 1988 prices, has been the level of Government subvention to the Scottish Development Agency in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the table:

1976-77	29·7
1977-78	91·8
1978-79	107·3
1979-80	112·6
1980-81	117·0
1981-82	101·6
1982-83	125·5
1983-84	105·2
1984-85	90·0
1985-86	101·6
1987-88	94·9

As Government expenditure on the SDA is expressed in net terms, the figures are not illustrative of total agency resources over the years. This also partly explains the variations between years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Acrylic Yarn

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the import duty on Turkish high bulk acrylic yarn entering the United Kingdom; and what are the duties British spinners have to pay on exporting high bulk acrylic yarn to that country.

Mr. Alan Clark: Turkish high bulk acrylic yarn is imported into the United Kingdom free of all import duties.

All imports to Turkey are current subject to the following:

Municipal tax — 15 per cent. of applicable import duty
Customs charges (incl stamp tax) — 2 per cent. approximately of cif value
Stamp duty—8 per cent. of cif value
Import premium—6 per cent. of cif value
Wharf dues—5 per cent. of the sum of the cif value plus import duty, municipal tax and stamp tax on customs declarations.

In addition imports of acrylic yarn are liable to:

Import duty—10 per cent. of cif value
Housing fund contribution—US$ 100 per tonne.

World Trade (GATT)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to what percentage of world trade takes place within general agreement on tariffs and trade rules and what percentage outside them.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are 95 full contracting parties to GATT, including most of the world's major trading nations. Economists estimate that these countries account for somewhat more than 80 per cent. of the world trade in goods. By implication, about 20 per cent. of such trade involves countries outside the general agreement. While the United Kingdom is steadfast in its adherence to GATT rules many contracting parties are, regrettably, in breach both of the rules themselves and of the rollback and standstill commitments. Accordingly, the percentage of trade taking place on a genuinely open basis will be much smaller. A principal objective of the new Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations is to bring about a high level of conformity among the signatories to the gener agreement.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duch of Lancaster what is his Department's policy on sexu harassment at work; whether a guidance on reportin complaints has been issued to all staff; how man complaints have been reported in the past five years; an what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Maude: The Civil Service policy on sexu harassment, followed by my Department, is set out in th programme of action to achieve equal opportunities fo women in the Civil Service which was published by th Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) i 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civ Service procedures. A notice to all departmental staff ha been issued informing them of the Department's polic and of the procedures for making a formal complaint; an a reference to the notice is included in the Department' personnel management policy statement, an individua copy of which is held by every member of staff.

There have been three complaints reported in thi Department in the past five years. In two of the case inquiries uncovered insufficient evidence to support th bringing of disciplinary charges. In the third case, charge were brought, and the officer was found guilty reprimanded and posted to another office.

Registers of Shareholders

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy o Lancaster what proposals he has to ensure that register of shareholders clearly indicate the owners of companie and the extent of their ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Provision already exist for all those with interests in shares to disclose their interests when they reach 5 per cent. Companies also have powers under the Companies Act, 1985, to inquire into the ownership o interests in shares whatever the size of the holding. Disclosure made under these provisions must be recorded by companies in a register of interests in shares. I am not persuaded at present that there is a need to make major changes to these provisions. The Government intend, however, to issue a consultative document in order to seek views on whether improvements are possible.

Corby (Fibre Optics)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the total payments made of investment support for the fibre optics and opto-electronics industries in the Corby travel-to-work area in each year since 1980.

Mr. Butcher: No payments have been made.

Estate Agents Act 1979

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what, since its inception, has been the total cost of administering the Estate Agents Act 1979, together with the main headings of cost;

(2) what are the total numbers employed responsible for the administration of the Estate Agents Act 1979 since its inception;

(3) what have been the numbers in each year since its inception of banning orders and warnings in respect of the Estate Agents Act 1979.

Mr. Maude: The administration of the Estate Agents Act 1979 is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading and I have asked the director general to write to the hon. Member.

EEC (Imports from East Germany)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the value of goods and services imported into the European Economic Community from East Germany in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what was the value of goods and services imported into the European Economic Community from eastern bloc countries in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: Data on services transactions with Eastern Bloc countries are not available. Figures on visible trade are in the following table.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list what information he has on the value of goods and services imported into West Germany from East Germany;

(2) if he will list what information he has on the value of goods and services imported into West Germany from Eastern bloc countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Data on services are not available. Figures for visible trade are in the following table:

CEGB (Transmission System)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects punblication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the operation of the transmission system of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Maude: The report was published and announced to Parliament on 26 June 1987 at columns 7 to 8.

Landlords (Resale of Electricity)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Ducy of Lancaster what measures are being undertaken to eliminate dishonest practices in relation to the resale of electricty by landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I intend shortly to make regulations, under the Consumer Protection Act 1987, which will require landlords to give tenants itemised bills showng both the selling price and the statutory maximum price of electricity and gas resold. We shall be consulting interested parties on the details of the draft regulations.

National Girobank

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he is undertaking in relation to the future of Girobank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: We consult the Post Office on a systematic basis each year about the future of Girobank in the light of its corporate plan and take up particular issues from time to time with the chairman.

Departmental Corporate Image

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total cost of launching his Department's new corporate image; and how this breaks down between signs, stationery, vehicle logos and any other identifiable sub-categories of expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs gave to the Member for Sheffield, Central on 14 January to a similar question.

Radio (Abuse)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures is he taking to reduce the use of obscene or offensive language by users of citizens band, private mobile, marine and similar radio.

Mr. Butcher: I am concerned about the misuse of radio in this way. Users of radio especially open access services such as CB or services on shared-channels should know that they can cause offence and distress to others who may be listening. I am tabling before Parliament the Wireless Telegraphy (Content of Transmission) Regulations 1988, which will make it a specified offence under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts to use obscene, offensive or threatening language on radio. Authorised broadcasting is excluded because similar provisions are being contemplated in an extension to the Obscene Publications Act.

TRANSPORT

Drivers (Eye Tests)

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make regulations requiring periodic eye tests for all persons holding a driving licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Current legislation already places the responsibility on motorists to meet, at all times when driving, a standard of visual acuity equivalent to an ability to read a vehicle number plate from a distance of 75 ft for characters 3½ in high or 67 ft for characters 3⅛ in high. The number plate test is one that motorists can take for themselves at any time and can be readily used by the police for enforcement purposes. Motorists who have any doubts about their ability to satisfy the test should consult any optician for further advice.

Drivers are required to inform the DVLC if they become aware of an eyesight condition which affects their ability to drive. Some 60 such cases are referred to the centre each day for investigation; where necessary, arrangements are made for specialist eyesight examinations.

Research studies have not identified poor eyesight as a significant factor in accidents. There is no evidence to suggest that the present arrangements are failing to meet the requirements of road safety.

London Regional Transport

Underground (Train Doors)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, further to his answer of 7 December 1987, Official Report, column 64, about the opening of underground train doors while the train is in motion, the investigation by London Underground Limited to which he refers has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The investigation by London Underground Limited into one of the incidents has not yet been completed but they have already indicated that they have taken appropriate measures to prevent a recurrence of the two incidents on the Central line. New rolling-stock built for one-person operation has an interlock which prevents the doors from being inadvertently opened whilst the train is in motion. Similar provision has been incorporated where technically possible into rolling-stock which has been converted for one-person operation but LUL have been unable to find a reasonable or practical means of preventing the train doors of the other, older stock from being opened in error by train crews who, if they misoperate the doors, are dealt with under the disciplinary code.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of heavy goods vehicles weighed by (a) his Department and (b) local authorities in each of the last three years for which statistics are available were found to be overweight; what proportion of those resulted in prosecution; and what was the average fine.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following is the information.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to promote research into the effects on roads and road safety of the overloading of heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he proposes to take to encourage better heavy goods vehicles design so as to reduce wear and tear on the road system; and what estimate he has made of the scope for savings in road repairs by this means.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The TRRL's research programme includes work on the relationship between the design of heavy goods vehicles, their axle loads and the forces imposed on roads and bridges. It is too early to say what design changes this may lead to and what effect this may have on road maintenance expenditure. The incidence of lorry overloading and the effects on road wear been estimated. Research on lorry safety is aime improvements to the lorry in all conditions of load.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Trans whether he is satisfied with the effectiveness of exi enforcement procedures concerning the overloadin heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statemer

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Over 100,000 heavy goods vehicles will be ch weighed during the current year. Constant efforts being made to increase the effectiveness of the resou available for enforcement by the use of new technol

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Trans whether he is satisfied with the adequacy of exi penalties to deter heavy goods vehicles operators overloading their vehicles; and if he will make a staten

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

The level of fines imposed on drivers and operato overloaded heavy goods vehicles is a matter for the co taking into account the particular circumstances of case. The maximum fine provided by the law does n present constrain the courts from imposing an adeq penalty. Overloading convictions can also be taken account by the licensing authorities in deciding whet take action in respect of an operator's licence.

Weighbridges

Mr. Spencer Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State Transport how many dynamic weighbridges have installed by his Department; how many more are plan and when they will be installed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Fifty eight of the Departme weighbridge sites are equipped with dynamic axle weig and two with static weighbridges. Another 25 enforcen sites are planned for implementation over the next t years.

Onslow Village

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State Transport what representations he has received conc ing the rising volume of traffic noise for residents in Onslow village area, adjacent to the A3 at Guildford; w studies he has made of this increase in noise volume; what steps his Department plans to take to offset environmental noise pollution involved.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In addition to representation my right hon. Friend, two residents of Onslow village h written to the Department about traffic noise in the 12 months.

We are investigating the noise levels and the poss benefits of barriers at certain locations on this sectio the A3. It is too soon to say whether noise protectio feasible or can be justified.

Muroroa (Nuclear Weapons Testing)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transp what representations he has received from the Uni Kingdom merchant shipping industry about the risks fr radioactivity arising from nuclear weapons testing aro the Muroroa atoll; what advice his Department give shipping intending to navigate in adjacent waters; an he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No representations have been received from United Kingdom shipowners. Warnings to shipping about the risks from radioactivity arising from nuclear weapons' testing around the Mururoa atoll are contained in nautical publications Nos. 62 and 62s, "Pacific Island Pilot Volume III, 10th Edition 1982" and its "Supplement No. 2" respectively published by the Hydrographer of the Navy. Carriage of nautical publications by United Kingdom registered ships is mandatory under the Merchant Shipping (Carriage of Nautical Publications) Rules 1975.

In the event of risk from nuclear tests, following prior information from the French authorities, daily radio warnings, in English, are transmitted to shipping throughout the area by the New Zealand co-ordinator for Navarea XIV of the worldwide navigational warning service adopted by the International Maritime Organisation.

Heavy Lorries

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if in the light of the report of the National Audit Office on the regulation of heavy lorries, he will take steps to ensure that (a) everything possible is being done to encouage the use of lorry designs which have less adverse effects, (b) further studies are carried out in conjunction with the local authority associations to establish the full extent of the problem, (c) further research is carried out into whether enforcement procedures are effective and (d) steps are taken to increase the deterrent effect of penalities for overloading to include the suspension or revocation of the transport operator's licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the transcript of this Department's oral evidence to the Committee of Public Accounts (HC 170-(i)). It would not be appropriate for me to comment further until the Committee has made its report.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the public inquiry into the east London river crossing; and when he plans to publish his decision on its recommendations.

Mr. Channon: The inspector's report has just been received. It is not yet possible to say when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I will be able to publish our joint decision on this scheme.

London Regional Transport (Sale of Dwellings)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of dwellings built by London Transport, or its predecessors, for occupation by its employees, and, of that number, how many have been sold by London Regional Transport or its subsidiaries.

Mr. David Mitchell: When London Regional Transport was formed in June 1984, it inherited 950 residential units. Since then, 790 have been disposed of. Of the remaining 160, the sale of a further 17 is currently in hand. Information about the housing stock held by LRT's predecessors is not readily available, but it is t LRT that the number of acquisitions and between 1947 and 1984 was relatively small.

London Regional Transport (Bus Servi

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of Transport what is the appropriate route mile services operated under the aegis of London Transport which at current service levels (a) surplus of revenue over running costs, (b) requi from other services and (c) is currently subcon contract where the contractor is a recipient of

Mr. Mitchell: The latest information availa in LRT's annual business plan 1988-89:

(a) (b) LRT forecast that 169 million bus mile operated during 1987-88 on their local services wit London. 154 million bus miles are in respect operated by London Buses Ltd., which has a fore trading deficit of £125 million in 1987-88. It is not say what proportion of the services currently surplus of revenue over running costs.

(c) LRT forecast that by the end of 1987-88 equivalent of some 30 million bus miles will be ope contracts involving payments to the operator. Th contracts secured by London Buses Ltd. in tendering.

Humber Bridge Authority (Debt)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of Transport if he will make a statement about his d with the Humber Bridge Authority conce settlement of their debt.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I met representativ Humber bridge board on 18 November 1987 their proposals for dealing with the outstand They proposed that tolls, which were lower in than when the bridge opened, should be increase their value should be maintained in real ter future. I said that the Government would be p write off so much of the accumulated debt as reasonably be recovered from realistictolls. confirmed on 2 December that tolls would be with effect from 1 January 1988 to the maxima by the Humber Bridge Tolls Order 1979 Co Instrument 1980 (SI 1980 No. 1137) and that would also promote a new tolls order to aut further increases they had proposed.

The proportion of bridge debt to be written determined once the outcome of the proce making the Order is known. The amount will projection of income and expenditure prepare time.

Transport and Road Research Laborat

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of Transport if he will publish a list of the cur programme of the Transport and Road Laboratory in the area of enforcement of overlo excessive driving hours in the road freight indu

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport a Research Laboratory research programme enforcement of heavy goods vehicle weight r consists of the following projects:

On-board axle weighers
Assessment of new enforcement weighing techn
Assessment of weighpads for enforcement

Enforcement pre-selection
Monitoring the extent of overloading
Use of automatic methods to improve lorry management planning and enforcement.

There is no work on enforcement of the drivers' hours regulations in the current TRRL research programme.

Manchester Light Rapid Transport System

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has reached a decision on the financing of the proposed Greater Manchester light rapid transit system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now make a statement on the funding of Manchester's light rapid transit system.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have concluded that, on the basis of the assessments which have been made, private sector participation in the construction and operation of this proposed system could bring useful benefits and could best be achieved by inviting bids from private sector promoters to build and operate the system on the basis of a public sector contribution towards the capital cost. The system would however be owned by the Passenger Transport Executive. The next stage of a project on these lines would entail working up an invitation for tenders from the private sector and, subject to a satisfactory response to such an invitation, I can see no present reason why a grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968, at a level determined depending on the details of the proposal, should not be made available at the appropriate time. I am today so informing the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority and I shall keep the House informed of progress.

Pedal Cyclists

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to introduce on-the-spot fines for pedal-cyclist offences on the same basis as those applying to motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

We are reviewing the operation of the extended fixed penalty system, in consultation with other interested parties, and intend to consider, among other things, the range of offences that might be covered by the scheme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES & FOOD

Cereals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current amount of cereals in European Economic Community stores.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A note setting out the volume of intervention stocks in the European Community on the latest available dates, which includes figures for cereals, is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated monthly.

Milk Quota

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has to the transfer between counties in England and Wales of milk quota in each year since 1984.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Records of quota trans England and Wales are maintained by the Milk Mark Board on behalf of the Ministry. Data are kept on the of MMB regions rather than by county. The follo table shows net quota transfers between regions:

Non-Civil Servant Advisers

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agricul Fisheries and Food if he will list his non-civil se advisers, giving their present main employment and field of expertise.

Mr. MacGregor: I receive advice from Department's advisory non-departmental public b which are listed in "Public Bodies 1987". I consult a range of interests and experts as appropriate. I do retain at present any non-civil servant advisers. I shorly to be in a position to announce the appointme a special adviser within my Department.

Milk

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agricul Fisheries and Food if he will make further amendmen the Milk (Special Designation) Regulation to re universal pasteurisation of milk in England and Wale the light of the recent communicable disease re showing the comparative incidence of disease associ with milk and dairy products in England and Wale compared with Scotland.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sales of untreated milk already subject to strict controls. The incidence of borne disease associated with such sales is kept u review but I do not consider that these figures requi change in our existing policy, which seeks to achie balance between the health risks associated with untre milk and the need to preserve consumer choice.

Mineral Water

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Minister of Agricul Fisheries and Food if he plans to amend the Nat Mineral Water Regulations 1985 so as to bring them in with the standards set in European Community Direc No. 80/778.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Natural Mineral Wa Regulations 1985 implement Council Direc 80/777/EEC on the exploitation and marketing of nat mineral waters. It would not be appropriate to amend the regulations in the way suggested because officially recognised natural mineral waters are specifically excluded from the scope of Council Directive 80/778/EEC.

Fisheries Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates, since 18 December 1987, there have been meetings of the EEC Fisheries ministerial Council.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There have been no meetings of the EC Council of Fisheries Ministers since 18 December 1987.

Weil's Disease

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many rivers in the Chelmsford constituency are contaminated with Weil's disease.

(2) what action his Department is taking to minimise the dangers to human life caused by Weil's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Edwina Currie: I have been asked to reply.

I shall let my hon. Friend have replies as soon as possible.

WALES

Labour Statistics

9. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are unemployed in Clwyd and in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 10 December 1987 the numbers of unemployed claimants in Clwyd and in Wales were 19,117 and 146,119 respectively.

14. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 or the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 10 December 1987 the numbers of unemployed claimants in Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 7,909, 22,915 and 146,119 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

19. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons are unemployed in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 10 December 1987 there were 146,119 unemployed claimants in Wales, 27,427 fewer than a year earlier—a fall of 2·3 percentage points. During 1987 Wales experienced the biggest annual fall in unemployment since the second world war.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of employees in employment in Wales; and what is the corresponding figure for 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: There were 1,036,572 employees in employment in Wales in September 1979 and 874,900 in September 1987.

Tree Planting

Hospital Waiting Lists

11. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of S if he will give the latest waiting list figure treatment in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales.

Mr. Grist: At 31 March 1987 there wer waiting for in-patient treatment in hospitals equivalent figure for Wales was 41,396.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary
Wales if he will publish figures showing th people waiting for treatment in March 19 1987; and if he will break this down by authority and district health authority.

Mr. Grist: The information, which specialties, is given in the table:

District Health Authority	Waiting for treatment as an in-patient		Waiti patie
	March 1978	March 1987	M
Clwyd	3,571	4,959	4

I think, however, that the hon. Gentlen aware that by March 1979 the position as March 1978 had substantially deteriorate from 31 March 1978 to 31 March 1979, the patients on waiting lists increased from 35,

It is also very important in the context to recognise the degree to which the numb

1978 and 1987. In the 1977-78 financial ye patients were treated and 417,332 new out

435,621 and 508,984—increases of 27·2 pe per cent. respectively.

Education Expenditure

12. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary
Wales if he will make a statement on the l
Government spending on education in Wa

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In real terms,
Government spending on education has inc million in 1979-80 to £12 million in 1987-88. Spending by local education authorities has increased from £769 million to £862 million in the same period.

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) central Government and (b) local authority spending on education, including higher education expressed per household, for 1979 and for 1986-87 at (i) current prices, (ii) 1979 prices and (iii) 1987 prices.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The relevant information covering expenditure by the Department and by local authorities in Wales is as follows:

	1979-80 £	[1] 1986-87 £
Central Government expenditure per household in Wales
(i) cash	3·46	9·49
(ii) at 1979-80 prices	3·46	5·70
(iii) at 1987-88 prices	6·00	9·89
Local authority expenditure per household in Wales
(i) cash	572·85	917·89
(ii) at 1979-80 prices	572·85	551·29
(iii) at 1987-88 prices	994·12	956·88

Between 1979-80 and 1986-87 gross local authority expenditure actually increased by about 3 per cent., from £963·7 million to £990·7 million (at 1987-88 prices). The number of separate households in Wales has increased by some 7 per cent., from 969,400 in 1979 to 1,035,300 in 1986 due to larger numbers of young and elderly people living alone; over the same period the number of school pupils in Wales has fallen by some 13 per cent. and the amount spent per pupil has risen by 27 per cent.

Expenditure on the university of Wales falls outside my area of responsibility.

Consultant Referrals

13. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients resident in Wales have been referred by their consultants to a hospital in England for surgery and have subsequently been discharged home without the surgery being performed.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally. However, should the hon. Gentleman wish to write to me about any particular case I shall arrange for the necessary investigations to be made.

Health Authorities (Funding)

15. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to add to the published £46 million allocation in 1988 to Welsh health authorities in order to fund the nurses', and other pay awards and to reduce the capital burden carried by the Gwent area health authority.

Mr. Grist: The cash increases which I have announced for authorities in 1988-89, together with the resources available from cost improvements and income generation, should be sufficient to meet the current forecast of pay and price inflation next year and provide for further service development.

Rate Rebate

16. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of S Wales what is the latest estimate for the number o in receipt of 100 per cent. rate rebate in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: About 200,000.

Hospitals (Repairs)

17. Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State fo what is his assessment of the state of repair of hos South Wales.

Mr. Grist: District health authorities are responsible for keeping their hospitals in an ac state of repair. They are required to follow management guidance issued by the Welsh Off encouraged to spend a minimum of 7·5 per cent. total financial resources on the maintenance of pl buildings. Capital allocations to district health au for their discretionary use will rise by nearly 21 p next financial year compared to this year and thu greatly assist their programmes of estate maintena rationalisation.

Health Authorities

18. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary for Wales what meetings he has held during the p months with the chairmen of health authorities in and if he will make a statement on the outcome discussions.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I have Welsh health authorities chairmen's committee chairman of Gwynedd health authority during t two months. We have also had separate meetings w chairman of Mid Glamorgan health authority. meetings made a valuable contribution to the con dialogue between the Government and health aut in Wales.

Free Food

20. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of S Wales what representations he has received t distribution of food under the European Commun food distribution scheme in Wales; and if he will statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since the announcement January 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Mini Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, about the applica the United Kingdom of the European Communi food scheme, I have received no representations distribution of such food in Wales.

National Health Service

21. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for if he will make a statement on the state of the N Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: My recently announced pla further increases in expenditure next year will take spending in Wales to £1,173·1 million. That repre real terms increase of over 39 per cent. since 1978-79 means that expenditure upon the NHS in Wales sta record levels in both cash and real terms. This, to with the introduction of improved management arrangements are the drive for increased efficiency, has led to increased numbers of staff, major improvements in services and an increased emphasis on health promotion. Wales has an expanding health service and will continue to have one.

Rating Reform

22. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in support of the introduction of the poll tax in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: During the period of consultation on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" more than twice as many individuals who responded were in favour of the community charge as were against it.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

23. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Mr. Grist: The corporation has progress in respect of liaison with loca other public bodies, consultation on p approval of initial projects, negoti acquisitions, preliminary work to establi sive regeneration strategy and has c approved studies into the technical, environmental impact of a barrage acr

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate for each obstetric unit in Wales whether there is an in-service training programme for (a) trainee anaesthetists; (b) non-consultant anaesthetists; (c) midwives and (d) supporting staff.

Mr. Grist: Information on in-service training at each obstetric unit in Wales for the staff groups referred to is not held centrally. On a national basis, all anaesthetics posts established for junior medical staff in the training grades are designed to include appropriate training in neonatology and paediatric intensive care, and there is a statutory requirement for practising midwives to attend a refresher course every five years.

I understand that at the all-Wales level, the University of Wales college of medicine also provides courses for career grade non-consultant anaesthetists.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will indicate for each obstetric unit in Wales whether the anaesthetic equipment includes (a) anaesthetic machine, (b) difficult intubation kit, (c) a DC defibrillator, (d) anaesthetic gas scavenging facilities, (e) an automatic pulmonary ventilator with disconnect alarm and (f) refrigerator for the storage of drugs;

(2) if he will indicate for each obstetric unit in Wales whether there is (a) an ECG monitor with recorder, (b) an inspired oxygen concentration meter, (c) an automatic blood pressure measuring device, (d) an end tidal carbon dioxide meter, (e) a peripheral nerve stimulator, (f) apparatus for measuring central venous pressure, (g) pulse aximeter, (h) blood storage refrigerator, (i) pressure infusion bags, (j) a blood warming device, (k) blood filters, (l) neonatal resuscitation equipment that includes a temperature measuring device; and neonatal equipment for maintaining the temperature of the neonate;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of each obstetric unit for each area health authority in Wales; and if he will indicate for each unit (a) whether there is a designated consultant anaesthetist whose duties include the organisation of an obstetric anaesthetist service and ensuring that the health authority is fully aware of any deficiencies in this service, (b) whether there is a consultant anaesthetist on-call and readily available on a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week basis, (c) whether suitable facilities for the storage of blood exists, (d) whether a quantity of group O Rh-ve blood is held, (e) whether there exists a 24 hour on-request epidural service, (f) whether an anaesthetic audit is undertaken; and (g) whether the equipment required in the labour suite and the obstetric theatre include an emergency electricity supply.

Mr. Grist: These are matters of operational policy for the health authorities concerned and I suggest that the hon. Gentleman writes to the district general managers.

Staff Statistics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State fo he will give the percentage change in the n administrative staff in the National Health Wales since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Between September 1979 and S 1987 there was a 13·9 per cent. increase in the w equivalents of all administrative and clerical st NHS in Wales.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State whether he will publish in the Official R attendance figures for 1987 reported by the Museum of Wales, comprising its outstations, percentage increase or decrease on the attendan for 1986.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A total of 1,041,290 peo the National Museum of Wales during 1987, a of 46 per cent. on the attendance figures for 19

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of Wales if he will publish, by district health regional health authority and special health auth showing the average daily number of beds av 1979 and 1986 for all specialties and for acute s

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the ta

I remind the hon. Gentleman that bed nu themselves are no indicator of the level of health crucial indicator is the number of patients treat increased by 24 per cent. between 1979 and 19

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the outcome of the policy review undertaken on the Welsh language following the public consultation which concluded on 31 March 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) on 10 December at column 215.

Houses (Disrepair)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many homes in each district authority area in Wales are considered to be in a serious state of disrepair; what proportion of the total housing in each area they represent; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(2) how many homes in each district authority in Wales are considered to be unfit; what proportion of the total housing stock they represent in each area; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Reliable estimates of the number of dwellings considered to be unfit or in a serious state of disrepair in each local authority district will not be available until the publication of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey.

House Purchase

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes have been bought by the tenants of each of the housing associations in Wales in each year since the inception of right to buy legislation.

Mr. Grist: A total of 313 dwellings have been bought by housing association tenants since the inception of "right to buy". Details are given in the table. During the same period, about 2,400 additional sales took place under such schemes as co-ownership, improvement for sale, leasehold schemes for the elderly, home ownership schemes for tenants of charitable housing associations, and shared ownership schemes.

Care in the Community

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates his Department has made of the additional housing needs of handicapped and vulnerable people through the implementation of care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Such estimates are a matter for local determination by housing authorities, district health authorities and local authority social services departments working together and in collaboration with other interests such as housing associations and voluntary organisations, and the representatives of those needing housing.

Housing Corporation (Expenditure)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the Housing Corporation's total expenditure in Wales during 1986-87 and in each year since the Corporation's establishment, both at 1987 and actual prices.

Mr. Grist: Total expenditure by the Housing Corporation in Wales since 1974-75 (when it was established on its present basis) is given in the table:

	Expenditure	1987-88 prices
1974-75	3·2	11·6

A44 (Aberystwyth to Rhayader)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to improve the A44 trunk road between Aberystwyth and Rhayader in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Improvements are planned at Capel Bangor and the Llangurig junctions. Their timing will depend on the completion of statutory procedures and availability of financial resources.

Earnings

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) full-time males on adult rates, (b) full-time females on adult rates and (c) full-time employees on adult rates earned (1) £110 per week or less and (ii) £120 per week or less, in Wales during the last year for which figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information relating to male and female workers and all employees on adult rates for the years 1984 to 1987 is given in the table. Data for the period prior to 1984 are not available for all employees; but figures relating to male and female workers are published as table 114 of part E of the annual new earnings surveys, copies of which are available in the Library.

Patients (Conveyance)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department gives to health authorities in Wales concerning the conveyance of patients to and from hospital by public transport.

Mr. Grist: Guidance is provided in Welsh health circular (77)4. Some patients are able to have their travelling expenses paid. The procedure for this is explained in DHSS leaflet H11.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the lack of ambulance facilities to convey patients to and from hospitals in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: A few representations on behalf of patients not in medical need of ambulance transport but without easy access to public transport, were received from community health councils and local authorities in Gwynedd during the period of public consultation on the criteria proposed by Gwynedd health authority for the transport of non-emergency patients. Gwynedd health authority was aware of these representations and the ambulance service has reacted sympathetically to individual cases of difficulty.

Ambulances

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the number of ambulances operated per 1,000 inhabitants in each health authority area in Wales; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(2) what is the total number of ambulances operated by each of the Welsh health authorities; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent changes have been made in the provision of ambulance services for patients and hospitals in Gwynedd.

Mr. Grist: Gwynedd health authority is responsible for the provision of the ambulance service in Gwynedd. To improve the service to those in medical need the authority has recently published for the information of the public, doctors and hospitals, the criteria upon which the provision is based. A special financial allocation has been made to the authority to enable it to purchase five specialised ambulances for conveying patients from Gwynedd to hospitals in Liverpool for radiotherapy and limb fitting.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being undertaken by his Department to improve ambulance facilities in rural areas in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to assess the need for and manage the ambulance service in rural areas of Wales.

Housing Associations

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homes in each district authority area in Wales are owned by housing associations.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally at present. The Housing Corporation is working to establish a data base on housing association stock by district council area.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department lays down any guidelines to health authorities in Wales on the minimum requirements to be contained in consultation documents issued to the public on proposed hospital closures in their area; whether such documents are discussed with his Department before being published; and whether, in cases where such documents are found to be faulty, misleading or inadequate, he will insist on further consultation before coming to his own decision on proposed hospital closures.

Mr. Grist: Guidelines for the content of consultation documents in respect of proposed hospital closures are set out in Health Service planning paper 5, "Procedure for Consultation on the Closure and Change of Use of Health Buildings". I am placing a copy in the Library of the House. There is no requirement to discuss consultation documents with the Welsh Office before publication. If my right hon. Friend considered such a document to be faulty, misleading or inadequate in a way that might be prejudicial to proper consultation, it is likely that further consultation would be required.

Bridges (Safety)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reports he has received on the safety of bridges in Dyfed as a result of the October floods; what estimates have been made of the cost of repairing these bridges; and whether extra resources will be made available by his Department for this work.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received no detailed reports from Dyfed county council about bridge safety nor any estimates of repair costs. I remain prepared to consider any representation from the county council about particular problems arising from the flooding in October, as I indicated in my reply to the right hon. Gentleman on 12 November.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to remedy deficiencies in the pay and career structure of speech therapists in Wales.

Mr. Grist: A new pay and grading structure for speech therapists has been introduced with effect from 1 January 1988. The management side of the Scientific and Professional Staffs Council believes that this will bring considerable benefits to the speech therapy profession.

Member's Question

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now reply to the question tabled on 17 December 1987 for answer on 11 January by the hon. Member for Gower on Welsh Office circular 44/87.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on Thursday 14 January 1988.

Circular 44/87

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, in the light of the formal public circulation of his Department's circular 44/87 and its subsequent withdrawal, and of its submission as evidence by both parties in the public inquiry held at the Guildhall, Swansea, relating to proposed executive houses at Murton lane, Newton, Swansea, he will now formally recover jurisdiction and determine this inquiry; and if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the distribution of circular 44/87 and on its status.

Mr. Grist: As I have already explained to the hon. Gentleman my right hon. Friend sees no reason to recover jurisdiction from the appointed inspector. Copies of a document which appeared to be an updated version of circular 30/86 have been received by some local authorities. No further circular on this subject has been issued and circular 30/86 continues in force.

General Practitioners

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of general practitioners in (a) Torfaen, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales.

Mr. Grist: At October 1986, the latest date for which figures are readily available, the numbers of unrestricted principals were 45, 236 and 1,549 respectively.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fire Hydrants (Portaferry)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the last survey of fire hydrants in the Portaferry turnout area; what assessment he has made of (a) the adequacy of the number of fire hydrants in this rural area and (b) sufficiency of the existing two diameter water mains for fire hydrants; if he has any plans to improve either the water mains or number of fire hydrants in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: A survey of fire hydrant requirements in the Portaferry area is currently being conducted by the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland. The survey, which is expected to be completed by the middle of this year, will examine the adequacy of the number of existing hydrants and the sufficiency of existing water mains and will make recommendations.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Tower Hill hospital, Armagh city hospital, health and social services offices, the Mall, Armagh, and the Agriculture Department offices, The Mall, Armagh, are in possession of standing instructions for the flying of the Union flag on all appropriate dates; why the Union flag was not flown at these four public buildings on 25 December 1987; whether the flying of the Union flag in Armagh city has been discussed at the Anglo-Irish ministerial conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The requirement to fly the Union flag on those prescribed dates relevant to Northern Ireland applies only to central Government offices. There is no requirement therefore for it to be flown on Tower Hill hospital, Armagh city hospital and the Southern health and social services offices in the Mall in Armagh. Due to an oversight the Department of Agriculture Drainage Office in the Mall, Armagh, did not fly the Union flag on 25 December 1987. The Department has reminded its staff of the requirement.

As to the right hon. Gentleman's question about the Intergovernmental Conference, joint statements issued after each meeting, copies of which are placed in the Library, set out matters that have been discussed. We do not make public any further details of conference proceedings.

Pupils (Religious Denomination)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether each new pupil enrolling in a controlled secondary school is requested by the school principal to make known his religious denomination.

Dr. Mawhinney: Every school is required by law to keep a register containing, amongst other particulars, the religious denomination of each pupil.

Radioactivity (Monitoring)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the extent of radioactivity monitoring in the Irish sea; and if he will make a statement on the implications for fish stocks in the Irish sea of the construction of nuclear installations on the west coast of Great Britain.

Mr. Needham: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food carries out extensive monitoring for radioactivity in the aquatic environment around the British Isles including the Irish sea. The results are published annually and placed in the Library of the House. These sources show that radiological levels pose no risk to fish stocks.

Proposals for nuclear installations go through a stringent consent procedure before construction is authorised and the effect on fishstocks is an important factor in the decision. Radioactive discharges from nuclear installations are controlled by authorisation issued by the appropriate Government Departments. The effects of such discharges on the flora and fauna of the Irish sea are among the matters considered by the authorising Departments in establishing the permitted limits.

Traffic Flow (Carrickfergus)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to improve the traffic flow along the shore road between Carrickfergus and Whiteabbey, County Antrim.

Mr. Needham: Yes. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has proposals in its major works programme to improve the section of single carriageway from the entrance to the university of Ulster to Ravenhill.

Free EC Food

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements and support he will provide to assist the distribution of free EEC foods to the needy in Ulster in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The implementation of the new EC scheme for distributing surplus food to the most needy announced on 12 January 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will operate in Northern Ireland. Butter and beef will be available in response to specific applications received from charitable or non-profit-making organisations which meet appropriate conditions.

Quantities will be limited to amounts specifically authorised by the European Commission within the finance available. Designated organisations will be eligible to receive contributions within the terms of the EC regulation towards their administrative and transport costs. Commission rules also provide for arrangements to be made with individual processors for a proportion of product handled to be retained by the processor as payment.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1987 reported by the Ulster museum, comprising its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1986.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1987 267,700 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh county museum, a decrease of about 8 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1986.

Meningitis

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of meningitis there are currently in hospitals in Northern Ireland, what consultations he has had with health authorities in Great Britain about the present meningitis outbreaks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There were eight patients in hospitals in Northern Ireland suffering from meningitis on 13 January 1988. This figure can fluctuate daily. There is no known connection between any of the present cases. There has been no significant change recently in the incidence of the disease in the Province and there is no evidence to link any of the existing cases with the recent outbreaks in England and Wales. My officials have been maintaining close contact with their counterparts at the Department of Health in London on this matter and this will continue.

Matrimonial Proceedings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report those changes he is making in the Draft Matrimonial Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order following the representations he has received.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot at present add to the reply that I gave the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 3 December at column 692.

Elected Representatives

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the individual members of each delegation with which the Government met to canvass views before issuing their discussion paper, "Elected Representatives and the Democratic Process in Northern Ireland", identifying the political party, local council or other organisation, if any, from which each individual came.

Mr. Needham: The affiliations of the various delegations who met me were listed in my reply of 4 November to the hon. Member at column 791. It would not be appropriate to publish the names of the individual members of those delegations without their permission.

Correspondence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for his letter to the hon. Member for Bradford West, dated 11 January, to be published in the Official Report.

Mr. Stanley: Yes. My letter is below.

"In reply to your Questions:

> To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he expects the investigations or allegations against the Royal Ulster Constabulary, about which he last wrote to the honourable Member for Bradford West on 23rd June, to be concluded; and if he will make a statement.
> To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when Mr. Chan Hok Chun was deported from the United Kingdom how many times he was interviewed by police officers in relation to allegations made against Royal Ulster Constabulary officers and others in Belfast; and if Mr. Chan Hok Chun has been asked to supply any further information since he was deported.

I replied that I would write to you.

The RUC have informed me that Mr. Chan Hok Chun was deported to Hong Kong on 30 June 1987 and that he has not been asked to supply any further information since his deportation. With regard to the number of times Mr. Chan has been interviewed by police you will recall that Nick Scott told you on 6 April 1987 (Hansard Col. 115) that Mr. Chan had been interviewed by officers from the Royal Ulster Constabulary but that the extent, direction and control of that investigation and any subsequent proceedings are matters for the Chief Constable and the Director of Public Prosecutions. I understand the papers relating to the police investigation are with the Director of Public Prosecutions and a direction regarding charges is awaited. It is not therefore possible to say when the investigations into the allegations against the Royal Ulster Constabulary will be concluded. Any matters of internal police discipline arising from the investigations must await the outcome of any criminal proceedings."

Debt

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many state employees, or employees of state agencies, spent all or part of th in debt recovery under the Payments for Debt (Em Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971, in 1987

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 15 January 198 number of employees in Government Departme public bodies working on debt recovery und legislation is as follows:

DHSS (NI)
Northern Ireland Electricity	—40
Belfast Gas	—9 full-time equi
DOE (NI)	—120 with varying of involvement

Information on the number of employees of the N Ireland Housing Executive involved in this worl available and could only be obtained at dispropo cost.

Planning (Advertisements)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of S Northern Ireland how many occasions the Depart the Environment (NI) has invoked its powers unde 51 of the Planning (NI) Order 1972 in relation display of an advertisement in contravention Planning (Control of Advertisements) Registratio 1973.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 January 198 records available indicate that since 1974 62 sum have been issued.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Management

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State Environment if he will list the names and addr those organisations which have been given grant section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986, d the terms of reference of the grants and the geo area each organisation is expected to cover.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information the hon. M seeks is given in the table.

Homelessness

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list each scheme included in the Housing Corporation's 1987-88 approved development programme, which uses flexible housing association grant with private finance, to provide temporary accommodation for homeless families; how many units of accommodation each scheme will provide; when these units are likely to be available for letting; and which local authorities will have nomination rights to each scheme;

(2) if he will list, for each scheme included in the Housing Corporation's 1987-88 approved development programme which uses flexible housing association grant with private finance, to provide temporary hostel accommodation for homeless families (a) the estimated capital cost of the scheme, (b) the proportion of the scheme's estimated capital cost which will be met by flexible housing association grant, (c) the estimated revenue cost of the scheme in the first year, comprising repayment of capital, management, maintenance and an allowance for furnishing and (d) the average weekly rent which homeless families nominated to this accommodation are likely to be charged.

Mrs. Roe: The information is given in the table. The revenue costs do not include the cost of repaying capital, for which detailed figures are not available, but rents under this scheme are normally set at the levels necessary to cover borrowing costs and costs of future major repairs. The units are expected to become available for letting from April onwards.

Private Tenants (Right to Buy)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representation he has received seeking legislation under which tenants are given the right to buy houses and flats from their private landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We receive occasional letters from hon. Members and members of the public asking about a right to buy scheme for private tenants. We consider that such a right would be an infringement of rights over private assets and would discourage landlords from letting property. It is open to sitting tenants to negotiate sale with their landlords. We do not intend to legislate on this.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities will be allowed direct and open access to the central database facility for the purpose of radiation monitoring in an emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Local authorities with appropriate interrogation equipment will have access to regular information and advice bulletins prepared and distributed from the central database facility. In circumstances where they collect monitoring data, they will be able to enter it into the database providing that it has been collected and supplied according to specified procedures.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has as to the likely effects on average rateable values in each local authority in England if a general revaluation were to take place; and if he will publish in the Official Report the estimate for each English local authority, together with current average rateable values.

Mr. Howard: Forecasts of the effects of the non-domestic revaluation in 1990 by local authority area cannot be made until the necessary rental evidence has been collected and analysed by the Inland Revenue valuation office. We have no plans for a domestic revaluation before domestic rates are abolished in 1990. I therefore have made no estimate of the impact of such a revaluation at local level and do not intend to do so.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all Acts and regulations in which gross, net annual or rateable values are included as the basis for compensation; and if he will make a statement on the alternatives he proposes to introduce to deal with such compe claims following the introduction of the com charge.

Mr. Howard: The following Acts and regulatio been identified as containing provisions which use net annual or rateable values as the basis for deter compensation payments and which will be affected abolition of domestic rates. Proposals for alte measures for dealing with compensation for those s in list A were published on 23 December 1987 consultation paper on the use of rateable values in h and related legislation, copies of which I have place Library. We are considering suitable substitutes fo Acts and regulations shown in list B. Provision is m the Local Government Finance Bill to amend al provisions by order.

List A
Housing Act 1985 (c. 68).
Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 (c. 56).

List B
Land Compensation Act 1973 (c. 26).
Town and Country Planning Act 1971 (c. 78).
Brine Pumping (Compensation for Subsidence) Act 1 40).
Housing (Payments for Well Maintained Houses) Ord (SI 1973 No. 753).
Compensation (Defence) Notice of Claim Rules 1939 (1939 No. 1296).

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State f Environment what research he has made o implications for his policy on the poll tax of the st Professor Colin Hughes of the university of Edinbu the increase in house prices under a poll tax, a c which has been sent to him; and if he will m statement.

Mr. Howard: Professor Hughes has comment several occasions on the effect of abolishing domesti on house prices. It is not disputed that some incre house prices is likely. The Government's estimate effect is contained in annex E to the Green Paper "I for Local Government" (Cmnd 9714). While there i for alternative views on this matter, we find Pro Hughes' estimates to be implausibly large. They give cause to revise our own estimate which we believe re broadly correct.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State f Environment whether, under the proposed comm charge, once a jointly liable couple have been sepa joint debts will be carried over after separation reg of which was previously the main wage earner.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the an gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. C on 12 November 1987 at column 189.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy towards treating women's aid refuges as the sole or main residence of women residents for the period when they stay at the refuge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Most women staying in refuges do so for short periods and will remain mainly resident elsewhere. They will pay the personal community charge in respect of their main residence. Those women who have their sole or main residence in a refuge will pay the personal community charge in respect of their residence in the refuge. Women in both categories will be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. according to their circumstances. Those on low incomes will receive assistance through the income support system towards their 20 per cent. contribution.

I announced, in my answer on 2 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) that women living under threat of violence will be able to register for the community charge without making their names and addresses public.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to place in the Library copies of the papers of the community charge working group, its implementation sub-group, and any joint circulars to local authorities that may be produced by his Department on the implementation of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Ridley: Any necessary joint circulars to local authorities on the introduction of the community charge, as well as practice notes, prepared by the implementation sub-group will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the exemption of disabled people being cared for in the community and their carers from the payment of the community charge; what response he has made; and will he make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 14 January 1988]: We have had a number of representations about the liability of disabled people and volunteer carers for the community charge. We do not consider that an exemption would be justified. They will be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. and income support will be increased to help recipients pay the remaining 20 per cent. In addition, in recognition of their special needs, any income received by disabled people from allowances such as mobility and attendance allowances would be disregarded in calculating entitlement to rebate.

Search and Charge Procedures

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the progress so far achieved in persuading local authorities to computerise local search and charge procedures.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that at least two computing systems for local authority searches are at an advanced stage of development and at least one is now being tested by two local authorities. I hope that local authorities will give serious consideration to the installation of such systems which will help them to give an improved service to home buyers.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the average length of time taken by each local authority in England to answer local search inquiries.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not collected centrally. However, the local authority associations provided evidence on the matter to the Government's conveyancing committee, and the committee's second report, published in January 1985, gives details. A copy of that report is in the Library.

Rate Support Grant, Cumbria

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost to the Exchequer of the domestic resource equalisation component in the rate support grant settlement to the county of Cumbria in each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: Within the grant total, the effect of resource equalisation is to transfer money from areas of high rateable value to areas of low rateable value. There is no cost to the Exchequer.

North Sea Project

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the funding of the North sea project.

Mr. Colin Moynihan: The Government fund substantial programmes of research and monitoring by Government Departments and the research councils related to the North sea. The total level of such funding is of the order of £7 million annually, although because some of this work has relevance to the marine environment generally, it is difficult to give a precise figure for the North sea.

The recent second international conference on the protection of the North sea endorsed the need for the development of national and international programmes to enhance our understanding of possible threats to the North sea and to improve our ability to manage this unique resource. The conference also endorsed the need for a task force to carry forward this work, and the United Kingdom offered to host its first meeting early in 1988.

It is intended that the bulk of the United Kingdom's contribution to the scientific effort of the task force will be drawn from existing national programmes, including the NERC's North sea project. Some additional funding for the task force will, however, be necessary. My Department will shortly be bringing interested parties together to consider the setting-up of the task force.

Urban Regeneration Grants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent on urban regeneration grants to the latest convenient date; and how many projects were involved in the expenditure.

Mr. Trippier: Since urban regeneration grant was introduced, four offers of grant totalling £7·62 million have been made for projects in Manchester and Dudley. This grant is expected to attract £34·32 million of private investment into these areas. Approval in principle has been given to a project in Blackburn. Ten projects are under appraisal and a number of others are being discussed informally with the Department.

Dog Wardens

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make extra resources available in the next financial year to local authorities for the provision of dog warden schemes in their areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The rate support grant report (England) 1988-89 was approved by the House on 9 December. It is for local authorities themselves to decide on the provision of individual services in the light of this and their view of local needs and circumstances and having regard to statutory obligations.

Planning Appeal Decisions

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 11 January, Official Report, columns 78-9, he will give the locations of those planning appeal decisions made by him since 1980, contrary to the inspectors' recommendations.

Mr. Ridley: The table shows the local planning authorities within whose areas planning appeal decisions were made by the Secretary of State for the Environment contrary to the inspectors' recommendations, for each year from 1984, the earliest date from which information on an individual planning authority basis is available, to 30 September 1987.

Rented Property

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of S Environment if he will give the date, place a any ministerial statements prior to 11 June publicised the Government's policy towards local councils in the provision of dwellings fo out in the answer to the hon. Member for W on 18 December 1987, Official Report, colu if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The policy was clearly set out of the White paper "Housing: The G Proposals" (Cm 214) which was itself foresha Conservative Party document "The N Forward" published in May 1987.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of S Environment what has been the respo consultation paper on competition in the ma local authority sport and leisure facilities; a make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: A total of 352 response received to the consultation paper which invit by 11 December 1987. These are now being detail.

Barter Deals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary the Environment whether there are any prop the formal use of barter deals by local aut means of raising finance; and if he will make

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has m proposals.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by each urban development corporation from the formation of the London Docklands development corporation to the latest date available, by year.

Mr. Trippier: Information on expenditure is contained in each urban development corporation's annual report and accounts, copies of which are laid before the House. Reports by London Docklands DC and Merseyside DC cover the period from their formation to the end of the last full financial year (1986-87). The only other corporation to spend during that period was Trafford Park DC which came into operation on 10 February 1987 and spent £31,000 in 1986-87.

New Premises (London)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to acquiring new premises in central London for use by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency constantly has under review the accommodation needs of all Government departments in central London, including the Ministry of Defence. Its aim is to meet such needs as economically as possible. Where this requires the aquisition of new accommodation from the market, negotiations are always conducted on a strictly commercial, and therefore confidential basis.

Boxing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce the mandatory wearing of protective headwear for the sport of boxing.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have no plans to introduce the mandatory wearing of protective headwear for boxers. That is a matter for the governing bodies of boxing to consider.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to improve safety precautions for those taking part in the sport of boxing.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government have no such plans. British boxing is already subject to stringent medical safeguards. Any further safety precautions are for the amateur boxing associations and the British Boxing Board of Control to consider.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the most common permanent and temporary injuries sustained as a result of the sport of boxing.

Mr. Moynihan: The most common injuries sustained in amateur boxing are of a minor nature such as bruises, sprains and cuts. Major injuries include dislocations and fractures. In England in 1987 there were 117 minor and 10 major injuries out of some 30,000 competitors actively engaged in amateur boxing. The British Boxing Board of Control does not keep records on the incidence of injuries in professional boxing, but their advice is that major injuries are rare. All boxers, both amateur and professional, are required to undergo medical examinations before a bout.

Storm Damage

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he will make further funds available to Countryside Commission in the light of the net bids ma by local authorities in respect of tree damage sustained 16 October 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department is discussing with Countryside Commission the need for a long-te programme of tree planting.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he will carry over to 1988-89 any part the £25 million allocated by his Department in 1987-88 storm damage on 16 October 1987 and not paid out wit the current financial year.

Mr. Chope: No, but parliamentary approval will necessary be sought to adjust the main Estimates provisi for 1988-89 to enable grant to be paid on all eligi expenditure.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what is the closing date by which claims damages sustained on 16 October 1987 should submitted by local authorities and others to Department.

Mr. Chope: Initial claims must be with the Departm by 1 March 1988. Grant on 90 per cent. of eligi expenditure will be paid on the basis of those claims. Fi claims, on the basis of which grant on the remaining 10 cent. of eligible expenditure will be paid, must submitted via local authorities: auditors to Department by 31 December 1988.

Animal Virus Research Institute

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, pursuant to his reply of 13 January, Offic Report, column 280, if he will give the nature and quant of radioactive waste discharged from the Animal Vi Research Institute for the most convenient period and manner of disposal.

Mr. Moynihan: Records of radioactive waste discharg are not held by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution b they are kept at the Animal Virus Research Institute. Th are inspected by Her Majesty's inspectorate of polluti to check that the discharges are within authorised limi Waste liquids are discharged to the river Wey af treatment.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, pursuant to his reply of 13 January, Offic Report, column 280, in respect of each of the organisatio listed for each of the past five years (a) how much lo level radioactive waste has beeen discharged, (b) wha was, (c) how it was dispersed and (d) if any discharge b been outside authorised limits.

Mr. Moynihan: Records of discharges are not held Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, but they are k by each of the organisations concerned. They are inspect by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to ensure th discharges are within authorised limits. These reco show that there have been no discharges outside authorised limits. Waste liquids are discharged into near rivers after treatment.

Thames House

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to acquire the use of Thames house, Millbank; at what cost; and under what form of tenure.

Mr. Chope: Office buildings in this area of Westminster are always of potential interest to the Property Services Agency in the discharge of their responsibility for meeting the accommodation needs of Government Departments. Their aim is to meet accommodation needs as economically as possible. Where this requires the acquisition of new accommodation from the market, negotiations are always conducted on a strictly commercial, and therefore confidential, basis.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy for the future ownership and management of the national nature reserves at Achanarras Quarry, Beinn Eighe, Ben Lui, Blawhirn Moss, Braehead Moss, Cairngorms, Cairsmore of Fleet, Claish Moss, Corrieshalloch, Cragbank Wood, Creag Meagaidh, Dunnet Links, Glasdrum Wood, Glen Roy, Glen Tanar, Inverpolly, Loch Druidibeg, Loch Lomond, Loch Sunart Woodlands, Morton Lochs, Rannoch Moor, Rhum, Taynish and Tetsmuir Point, and for the future control of other national nature reserves in Scotland; and what consultations he has undertaken with Scottish interests on this subject.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 13 January to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) at column 281. I shall, of course, consult my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland about the outcome of the review of national nature reserves which is currently being undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been conducted into the long-term safety of high level liquid nuclear waste tanks at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Studies have been completed by BNF plc on the reliability of high active waste tanks. A paper on the subject was published at the fourth European reliability data conference. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

For the future the company plans to remove liquid waste from the tanks for vitrification. Construction of a vitrification plant is nearing completion.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what physical protection systems exist against possible terrorist attacks on the high level liquid waste tanks at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Such systems are in place. It would not be prudent to publish details.

Nuclear Safety

Racing (Drug Misuse)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary Environment (1) what information he number of cases of drug misuse involvin the racing industry since 1979;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to m offence to misuse restricted drugs, partic the horse and dog racing industries; and a statement;

(3) if he has received any request for horse and dog racing industries to help co of drugs on either race horses or dogs; an a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked do so as soon as possible.

Meadowhall Development, Sh

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretar
Environment why his Department has re million-£30 million urban regeneratio developers of the junction 34 — Meado
ment in east Sheffield.

Mr. Trippier: After careful appraisal w the project was viable without assistance.

Derelict Land (Corby)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secret the Environment (1) if he will list in the relation to the Corby district (a) the am land in the Corby district, identified in the survey of 1982, (b) the amount of derelict land which was identified as capable of justifying reclamation and (c) the amount of land in fact reclaimed since 1982;

(2) how much Government funding has been contributed to the Corby district council for derelict land reclamation in each year since 1980; and how many acres have been reclaimed in each year.

Mr. Trippier: The 1982 derelict land survey identified 218 hectares (538 acres) of derelict land in the district of Corby, of which 216 hectares (533 acres) justified reclamation. Some 90 hectares (222 acres) have been reclaimed since 1982.

Government resources have been allocated to Corby district council to allow expenditure on derelict land reclamation as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	0·5
1981-82	0·8
1982-83	3·1
1983-84	3·3
1984-85	3·5
1985-86	3·6
1987-88	3·7

Derelict land grant is payable to meet 100 per cent. of the eligible costs incurred by the Council on reclamation. Because of the continuous nature of land reclamation works in Corby, it is not possible to identify the area of derelict land reclaimed each year.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Psychotropic Drugs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual expenditure by the National Health Service on psychotropic drugs; and how many patients per year are prescribed such drugs.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available on the number of patients prescribed psychotropic drugs. The table shows the number and net ingredient cost of prescriptions in England in 1986 for hypnotics, sedatives and tranquillisers, and anti-depressants:

	Number of prescriptions (millions)	Net ingredient cost (£ million)
Hypnotics	13·2	20·0
Sedatives and tranquillisers	11·2	14·4
Anti-depressants	6·6	26·2
Anti-depressant and sedative-tranquilliser combinations	0·5	1·3
Total	31·6	61·9

Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will, during the lifetime of this Parliament, consider conducting a review of the contract system for employing consultants.

Mrs. Currie: We have no current plans to do so, but we do of course keep the system under review.

Trent RHA

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Services what appointments he has made to the regional health authority since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The Secretary of State has ma following new appointments to Trent RHA since 1980

Mr. Grist: I have been asked to reply.

These are matters of operational policy for the health authorities concerned and I suggest that the hon. Gentleman writes to the district general managers.

Merit Awards

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the membership of the group making merit awards for the Liverpool and Wirral district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: Distinction awards are granted by the Secretary of State on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards whose members are listed in the table. The ACDA is advised by two local award committees in each region, depending on the level of award. The names of the members of the current committees for the Mersey region, which includes both Liverpool and Wirral health authority are also listed.

Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd and Mr. Stephen Dorrell.

Question accordingly negatived.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House approves the Autumn Statement presented by Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer on 3rd November 1987; welcomes the prospect of continuing low inflation and steady growth as the basis for maintaining the trend of rising employment; and congratulates Her Majesty's Government on the continuing reduction in the share of national income pre-empted by public expenditure.

PETITION

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): I am grateful to have such an enormous audience to hear this important petition which I wish to present on behalf of 636 residents of the town of Tranent and the neighbouring area in my constituency.

The petition calls on the House to repeal the Scottish poll tax legislation. I cannot think of many issues which have united Scottish public opinion to the same extent as this. The House should take account of the deep sense of outrage that the tax is arousing in Scotland. Tranent is an area which would be severely penalised by the imposition of the poll tax. For example, a family of three adults in a three-apartment house in Lindores drive, who currently pay a rates bill of about £435 a year, would have to pay more than double that figure, £1,050, under the poll tax. Meanwhile, people living in far more prosperous areas would pay substantially less.

I wholeheartedly endorse the terms of the petition from the Belters of Tranent and I support their appeal to the House to repeal this pernicious and dangerous legislation, which is an affront to the principles of democracy and to the nation of Scotland.

To lie upon the Table.

Health Services (Maidstone)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

10.17 pm

Miss Ann Widdecombe (Maidstone): I do not wish to rehearse too much the background to the Health Service crisis which has so badly affected my constituency in the last six months, as that has already been done adequately through the diligence and eloquence of my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe), whom I see in his place and who raised the issue in the House a few weeks ago.

We have a brand new hospital in Maidstone. Last year there was an unprecedented rise in activity, so that we were treating about 30 per cent. more patients. That rise in activity was not predicted and could not reasonably have been so. That meant that the health authority was badly overrunning its budget.

The district health authority was already extremely efficient, because it had introduced privatisation measures, because it had cut waste and because it had already increased its throughput per patient bed; therefore, it had very little scope to find economies and savings to meet the additional strains upon the budget. It therefore reacted with ward closures. One major closure was in the brand new hospital. It also closed all physiotherapy facilities and threatened further ward closures.

I am very grateful to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health for the immediate help which he made available and for giving us money enough to reopen those wards. I am also very grateful to him for the additional money which enabled Maidstone to appoint a third orthopaedic surgeon and a fourth gynaecologist to cut some of our severest waiting lists.

But those measures are addressed to the immediate crisis and are designed to cope with immediate problems. It is more to the future that I want to look tonight, because I have to cope in the constituency both with a very heavy legacy of the past six months, which in itself is bound to affect the future, and with the major question that I know to be in the minds of my constituents, which is not so much whether the present crisis is over as what guarantees we have that we shall not be in this situation again this time next year if we continue to be efficient and to increase our activity.

The legacy I am left with is one of badly increased waiting lists. A cardiac patient came to my surgery last Saturday who needs a test to establish whether he needs major heart surgery. The test, never mind the operation, will not be available until October 1988. He has been offered various appointments at various hospitals within the South East Thames area, but October 1988 seems at the moment to be the best that can be offered.

Cataract patients write to me in desperation and say that they are prepared to go to Inverness. They do not have quite to go to Inverness, but the nearest I found recently was Glasgow, which is not too far from there. My office has been turned into an agency for finding places for operations.

In the immediate term, this is something that can be addressed and can be tackled. It is about the future that I am particularly concerned — not only the future funding but the future adminstration of the South East Thames regional health authority. There has been very little in the past to inspire confidence on the part of the people of Maidstone in some of the decisions taken by the authority.

First of all, we were the only hospital in the entire region which, when it opened, was not given additional money for running costs. Secondly, a purely regional decision, not one that has been taken by other regions and not one that has been decreed by central Government, to change from RAWP to ACORN has removed £1·2 million from Maidstone's future expectations. When we are just recovering from a major crisis, to find that £1·2 million has been taken off our future expectations does very little to give us hope and confidence.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent): Is my hon. Friend also aware that, in an apparently unique regional hospital authority decision, the hospital in Medway where students come gets no money at all towards paying the costs of those students? It appears to be the only regional authority in the country that has taken that decision.

Miss Widdecombe: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his intervention and that addition to this debate.

Furthermore, those concerned work on out-of-date statistics which work very badly to Maidstone's disadvantage, calculating our allocation and our entitlement on birth statistics and population flows that were obtaining six years ago.

When the crisis erupted in Maidstone in the summer, I immediately entered into negotiations with the South East Thames authority to find out what it could do for us. It promised us two things, or rather half-promised us two things. First, it said that it would look at its finances and see if there was any flexibility for loan or other arrangements; secondly, it said that it would try to improve the statistics, which was bound to work to Maidstone's advantage.

Several months after the receipt of that letter, neither of those half-promises had been implemented. It was not until I managed to see the Minister, in conjunction with my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent and my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley), that we finally got the extra money and help that we needed. According to a reply given to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn), the authority has a budget of £933 million—Maidstone needed less than £1 million to keep its wards open—but, if it cannot manage the cash flow better than that, it does not hold out much confidence for the future of the South-East Thames region.

The South East Thames regional health authority is a little remote. It is in Bexhill-on-Sea. It is quite an intrepid character who goes to Bexhill-on-Sea. Whether one goes by road or rail, one needs a great deal of time on one's hands. The health authority said that it moved to Bexhill-on-Sea because it was too expensive to stay in Croydon. It moved from Croydon to Bexhill-on-Sea, but it still has its empty, £600,000 premises in Croydon. For £600,000, we could have kept our wards open.

If it may be gathered from this that I am not wholly at one with the way in which the regional health authority operates, the fact remains that the authority does have the odd cross to bear. This is an urgent matter and I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to respond to certain points which could help the authority to help Maidstone.

I quoted from out-of-date statistics. The author consistent defence is that it does not decide which stati to use. It is simply not supplied centrally with up-to- figures. I wish to ask my hon. Friend whether it is pos to expedite the updating of those figures.

Secondly, there should be clear guidance to all regi health authorities to reward efficiency, because effic district authorities do not have the scope to econo when they are faced with financial difficulties. Ineffic authorities do, so there should be a reward w recognises efficiency. If we had that, we would have far fewer problems in Maidstone.

Thirdly, there is the underfunding of pay awards. not believe that it has been wrong for the Governmen have some underfunding of pay awards. Blank cheque not promote efficiency and the elimination of waste. S authorities have reached an efficiency ceiling, but not Before we believe that an efficiency ceiling has b reached in the South East Thames area, I have statistics which show Maidstone's performance to be above that of others. Some authorities are not perform to the expected standards, but presumably are still fun for the expected standard. When an efficiency ceilin reached, there is no longer the flexibility to react by elimination of waste. I appeal both to my hon. Friend Under-Secretary of State and to my right hon. Friend Minister for Health to consider the effects of un funding of pay awards on those areas which suffer thro the regional allocations and which have already reac their efficiency ceiling.

I do not feel particularly penal towards the South E Thames regional health authority, but I think it wo benefit the NHS as a whole if the regions were abolish However, we shall have enough of that in two weeks' t in another debate. I shall not ask my hon. Friend respond to that tonight because I am sure that she wo not wish to do so.

Finally, we need an overhaul of the NHS and a refo of its structure and system as well as of our level funding. In short, we must not roll from crisis to crisi

I have a letter from the South East Thames regio health authority chairman which suggests to me th although he can guarantee sufficient money — inde has already given sufficient money — to reopen wards this year, he is concerned about the economies t have been implemented for the future.

I am concerned about where my constituents will f themselves this time next year. Will they still be queu up at my surgery for me to find them operations Glasgow, or will they be able to rely on proper rewards efficiency, which is what my district health autho deserves and what is too little recognised throughout South East Thames area?

10.30 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Hea and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): I congratul my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (M Widdecombe) on obtaining the debate and once ag reiterating her concern about her local health authority, she has also done in six recent parliamentary questions, her contribution to the debate on the Health Serv during the debate on the Consolidated Fund Bill on December, at a meeting with other local Members Parliament with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health on 30 November and in much correspondence with Ministers, some of which I have still to respond to.

I also commend my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe), who is in his place tonight. I commend both my hon. Friends to their constituents for their energy, interest and concern. I take note of what my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone says about visitors to her constituency advice bureau and no doubt as a result of what she has said tonight she will have many more. In a few moments, I shall offer my hon. Friend some figures which may be new to her. I hope that, with her considerable experience of finance, she will find them interesting.

Maidstone district health authority's cash allocation for this year is over £32 million—a 8 per cent. chang over the previous year, which, in turn, was nearly 6 per cent. more than in 1985-86. Also in recent years, the capital allocation has been between £2·5 million and £3 million each year, even after the opening of the magnificent new district general hospital, which, as my hon. Friend knows, I recently visited.

My hon. Friend asked whether we could obtain more updated figures and I share her interest and concern on that. She probably knows about the Korner reforms, which mean that statistics will be more readily available this year when the new system comes on stream. I hope that if, as a result, there is any comment about the cost of administration, clerical and computer staff, she will still consider it a good idea.

My hon. Friend talked about the underfunding of pay awards. I am sure that she realises that no Government ever give a blank cheque on pay awards. Certainly we do not, and have no intention of so doing.

Miss Widdecombe: I and everybody else fully accept that the Government do not write blank cheques, but neither does the region nor the district. Somebody must pick up those pay awards, which I accept are agreed by the independent review body, not the Government. All that I am appealing for is that the shortfall should not be such that it makes inroads into funds that should be spent on patient care—[Interruption.]

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) says that we should give my hon. Friend a party card. I am not sure to which party he is referring.

My hon. Friend's point is well made and well taken. I merely put it to her that pay awards are not an alternative to service to patients. Paying our staff properly is part of our service to patients, particularly if it thereby ensures that we can keep the staff whom we want. Current discussions with the review bodies for the doctors, dentists and nurses will no doubt have their outcome in due course. However, I repeat that it would be a foolish Government who gave a blank cheque for pay awards in the middle of a pay negotiation. I am sure that my hon. Friend can find it in her heart to agree with something in that statement.

I hear what my hon. Friend says about the regional system. I am sure that she is aware that I shall not have a chance to respond to her debate on 26 January. However, I hope that she will recognise the recent valuable role of the regional health authority. Earlier this year, the region calculated that the total projected overspend among its districts would be over £9 million.

Those health authorities have a statutory duty to remain within their cash limits, as I have to remain within my budgets. So the region correctly stressed that to the districts, and emphasised that reductions in service had to be made only as a last resort. Most of the districts, like Maidstone, introduced further savings measures not affecting patient care, such as slowing down some service developments and instituting income generation schemes. The region, too, has implemented savings and has clearly taken note of my hon. Friend's previous remarks, because I understand that it will be reducing its expenditure in 1988-89 by £275,000. We expect it to keep to its budget just as much as anyone else in the area.

However, a number of districts had to make temporary service reductions. To help those districts, the regional health authority co-ordinated what it called a cash management exercise, whereby health authorities whose cash position is less critical this year assisted by contributing to a regional pool to help the other authorities, such as Maidstone, that were facing particular problems. At that stage in the autumn, the region was predicting that it would break even in this financial year.

Then we had the storm, and we have since allocated, as my hon. Friend knows, £8 million to the South East Thames health authority for the damage done. That is what it asked for, and what it got. We then found that there were further emergency measures, some of which my hon. Friend has referred to, to avoid overspending. But there was also the announcement on 16 December of about £75 million extra for the hospital and community health services in England for this financial year.

South East Thames asked the district to bid for additional money, which it could use in this financial year to meet immediate problems of the sort that have been described. Maidstone asked for an additional £191,000, which I can tonight confirm that it will receive. That will enable Maidstone to reopen, later this month, the temporarily closed general surgical ward at Maidstone district general hospital, which will then no longer be on amber alert. Eighteen temporarily closed beds at Kent county ophthalmic and aural hospital will also reopen shortly. An additional programme of joint replacement operations at the local private hospital will be undertaken, until another ward at the district general hospital can be commissioned to enable such operations to take place there.

Two wards that have been temporarily closed at Linton and Preston Hall hospitals might also have been reopened with the money, but they are having to be used to accommodate some patients from Maidstone hospital psychiatric wing, which had to be evacuated following extensive storm damage. I hope that my hon. Friend can accept that. In addition to the £191,000, Maidstone will get a further £135,000, which will go towards reducing its credit of balances and put the authority on a sounder financial footing for the coming year.

My hon. Friend is probably aware that we have been repeatedly advised by our financial advisers that if we delay paying our creditors for too long, all they do is put the prices up next year; so it is a sound, counter-inflationary measure to ensure that our health authorities have a reputation for paying on time. As a result, since my hon. Friend last raised the question with me, Maidstone district health authority has received an extra £326,000 for this financial year.

I fully accept that, after being able to reopen temporarily closed services with additional Government money, Maidstone does not want to be in the same position again next year or, indeed, in April of the coming year, when it may have to close some services again. It is for the regional health authority to decide on allocations to districts, and it will be doing that for 1988-89 on 21 January. That is the present system. I know that district and regional officers are discussing bridging finance from the region to help Maidstone get back on a sounder financial footing, but my hon. Friend will appreciate that, for the moment and for the foreseeable future, this is primarily a regional responsibility. However, I shall make sure that the region is aware of her views and those of my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent.

Dame Peggy Fenner (Medway): My hon. Friend will observe that many of my hon. Friends who serve and represent constituencies in the South East Thames region are sitting in this evening. We would emphasise that we all share the concern of my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) about what will happen in the next allocation. We hope that, even under the present system, my right hon. and hon. Friends will ensure that the South East Thames region takes account of the several deprived districts in its area.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend has made her point extremely well. I should also draw attention to the presence in the Chamber tonight of my hon. Friends the Members for Dover (Mr. Shaw), for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson), for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) and for Faversham (Mr. Moate), and to that of one or two Opposition Members who come from a long way away.

Mr. Allan Rogers (Rhondda) rose——

Mrs. Currie: No, forgive me, but I shall not give way because I do not have the time.

My hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone has drawn attention to the statistics that are based on performance indicators which, as she rightly says, come from the data for 1985-86 which, of course, are the latest information that I have. She is quite right that the authority has a high throughput. Indeed, it is one of the best in the country. I am talking mainly about Maidstone hospital. Although in fact it is not the best in South East Thames regional health authority—All Saints is the best—Maidstone is highly efficient and cost-effective.

The costs per case of Maidstone district health authority were £601 for 1985-86. I agree that that compares favourably with, for example, Brighton at £1,194 per case, Orpington at £1,074 per case or Lewisham at £1,257 per case. They are all similar hospitals—major district general hospitals with more than 250 beds. Among the 21 similar hospitals in the region, Maidstone ranked not first, but sixth in terms of cost per case. Kent and Canterbury and Eastbourne district general hospitals are cheaper. Although the difference is not great, it is worth putting it on record.

In terms of medical and dental costs per case, Maidstone DGH ranks not first but seventh in the regional health authority. The Royal Sussex county hospital, for example, spends much less on nursing per case and Greenwich district general hospital spends much less on medical staff per case. However, Maidstone has very good hotel and maintenance costs, which is amazing. I am curious to know why it costs nearly four times as much to run the ancillary services at Brighton general h at Maidstone. Perhaps our two splendid lady Mrs. Cumberlege and Mrs. Nelson, could get t that and share lessons.

I know that the regional health authority is its policy on cash allocations — [Interruptio disappointed in the hon. Member for Rhond usually interested in health matters. I also kno regional health authority——

Mr. Rogers rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is a tradition that hon. do not interrupt, especially from a sedentary during Adjournment debates.

Mr. Rogers: I was asking the Minister to gi

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Gentleman knows th restricted in Adjournment debates.

My hon. Friend knows that the region authority is reviewing its policy on cash alloc mental illness. It is essential that in all the d about the pressure on acute services, we do not of the need for services for those with mental mental illness or other groups who, perhaps always in a position to make much fuss. I have that Maidstone district health authority's fe other DHAs, which send large numbers of p Maidstone, are getting something good on the c be taken into account. I gather that the DHA s is between £300,000 and £400,000 out of pocket of treating out-of-district mental illness patien may be some discussion about the exact amou know that the region has taken that fact on bo

I also know that, following the region authority's meeting on 19 November, further wor done on bed usage at Maidstone and on whethe scope for increasing the use of day care and s accommodation. The district health authority ha shown considerable improvements on the day- but in ear, nose and throat treatment, 95 per patients are in-patients. I have no doubt th discussions the DHA will take account of facts su occupancy in ENT, for which there is a waiting li over 500 for non-urgent surgery and treatment. T is over 400 for opthalmology. The occupancy specialties has been below 50 per cent. for many the other hand, the gynaecology department tre than 20 per cent. of its patients as day cases relatively good occupancy rates and a tiny waiti make no judgment from those figures but hope regional health authority will consider them. I am with good will and the willingness to change so held practices, issues such as these can be resolv interests of patients, possibly without using a funds.

We have to make a point here about p Estimates of future patient numbers, on which much of our financial planning, are based partly history and demography, and partly on po patterns and changes. Whether or not they are out of date, I can assure my hon. Friend the Me Maidstone that every effort is made to take them account. We also base our financial planning planned growth of services such as an ac consultant or expected changes in practice.

In 1982-83, the growth of in-patient cases in Maidstone was 1·5 per cent. In the following years it was 4 per cent. and then 5 per cent. In the year after that, it seemed to have levelled off because there was a very small drop in activity for in-patients at about 1 per cent. What is then clear is that the 13 per cent. jump in in-patient cases in the following year took everybody by surprise. Indeed, nobody could have planned for that and known that it would happen. I do not think that anyone would have believed the people of Maidstone if they had said to us blithely that they expected an increase in numbers of in-patient cases of 13 per cent. in one year.

It is a tremendous tribute to all the staff concerned that they managed to cope with such an increase in demand. I do not believe that the regional health authority should be blamed for its failure to anticipate that sort of growth. I suspect that, even if it had anticipated it, other DHAs would have objected strongly to anything like a 13 per cent. increase being given to Maidstone in a year.

In relation to the cost of the region's accommodati I understand that if it had not moved in 1983, it wo have been faced by a rent review in Croydon, and the r would have cost about £1 million a year.

Miss Widdecombe: At least the authority would h got something for it.

Mrs. Currie: What the authority did was to buy existing premises at Bexhill and expenditure since has b much less than it would have had to pay at Croydo assure my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone that region has been active in trying to dispose of the remain of the lease and no doubt will do so shortly. However, have an extra £800,000 in revenue savings as a result of move, which has been spent on improving mental illn mental handicap and renal services. I hope that information is helpful to all my hon. Friends.

Question put and agreed to.

Orders of the Day

Protection of Official Information Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Speaker: Before I call the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), I must tell the House that many right hon. and hon. Members have said that they wish to take part in this important debate, including no fewer than eight Privy Councillors, and that is unusual for a Friday. I hope that hon. Members will make short speeches today, so that as many hon. Members as possible may be called.

9.35 am

Mr. Richard Shepherd (Aldridge-Brownhills): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

There has been much publicity in recent weeks about the nature of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911, and I guess that every hon. Member who has served in this House over a number of years will have witnessed its progress and its effect on our national and social life. It has been well reviewed over those years during our debates and its deficiencies have been commented upon very effectively. Therefore, I will not overly trouble the House with such observations, because I have no doubt that many hon. Members will be able to cite their own instances of the way in which it has affected our society.

Any reading of the legislation will show that hardly any Minister or former Minister has expressed any support for section 2 as it is written now. There is almost universal recognition that it must go and be replaced by narrower, better defined and better targeted legislation. In that spirit, the sponsors of the Bill have tried to gather together the threads of the intellectual ideas that have been assembled over the past 15 or 16 years to identify the issues with which we have to grapple in our proposed reforms of section 2.

The wide drawing of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 means that the release of every piece of official information could possibly lead to prosecution. That has laid an appalling pall over our national life and has had certain consequences. It has affected the standards of the press in a curious way. A newspaper may take a stance on an issue every time an investigative journalist examines and discusses the very nature of our society. By implication, he must touch on those issues that affect our daily lives which are generated by information. Therefore, there is a stand-off with respect to section 2.

That was well put by Mr. Chapman Pincher in his evidence to the Franks committee, in which he cited the instance of a leaking radioactive plant in the north of England. He said that, at the time, the story wa considerable scoop for him and he wanted to publish However, he was approached by the permanent secret to the Home Department and was blocked. His newspa decided that the possibility of a prosecution under sect 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911, for which there is defence if it involves official information, meant tha could not publish the story. I recount that exam because right hon. and hon. Members will be aware of very curious use of section 2 in its failure to m distinctions between matters that clearly involve natio security and the generality of information affecting ev area of life.

I begin with the proposition that, to have accountabil in a democratic process, Members of Parliament and electors who are equal to us as citizens must ha information to judge the instances and views to which can hold the Government to account. Against t background, and in that spirit, my right hon. and h Friends have proposed the measures in the Bill, that we discussing today.

I want to run through the points contained in the with close attention to the notes. Some of those are poi of considerable principle. Under section 2 of the Offic Secrets Act 1911, the unauthorised disclosure of a official information, significant or trivial, harmful to nation's fundamental interests or not, is a criminal offen The Franks report recommended, and succeedi Governments have agreed, that a more discriminati approach is needed with criminal sanctions applied o to disclosures of defined classes of information wh release would involve specific harm.

That was the basis of the Bill that the Governme introduced in 1979, and it is the basis of the present B We wish to distinguish between that information whi should lead to criminal prosecution, and gene information, which needs lesser disciplinary contro Without that distinction, we will not have a free socie

The Bill applies only to specified classes of protect information. Disclosures of other information would n be a criminal offence. That is not to say that su information would become freely available. Much of it w continue to require protection, but that protection wou not include the threat of prosecution.

The sanctions against improper disclosures are w understood in the Civil Service. A civil servant who do not show appropriate discretion in the handling information cannot expect promotion; one who negligent or deliberately leaks information may expe disciplinary proceedings and perhaps dismissal. T importance of those sanctions was stressed by the Fran Committee who, in paragraph 58 of its report, thoug them "of greater practical consequence" than Section 2

Information which is or has been held by a Crow servant or Government contractor by virtue of his offici position is protected if it falls into one of the class described in clause 1 of the Bill.

The clause protects information relating to defenc international relations, and security and intelligence who unauthorised disclosure would be likely to cause seriou injury to the interests of the nation or endanger the safe of a British citizen. The 1979 Bill that the Governme introduced in another place adopted a similar approac although the "serious injury" test was applied only to t first two of those categories. The Bill reflects the Fran report which recommended that, even in the fields security and intelligence, criminal law should apply only if unauthorised disclosure would cause serious injury to the interests of our country.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): Does paragraph (c) of clause 1(1) cover income tax inspectors who are currently under a lifetime vow of silence? If they are not advised to keep silent, they will have a field day with their memoirs, which would make recent disclosures look like chickenfeed.

Mr. Shepherd: I congratulate my hon. Friend on her elevation to "Dameship". I shall deal with her intervention as I go through the provisions of clause 1.

Information is also protected if it is likely to be useful in committing a crime, helping an escape from custody or otherwise impeding law enforcement.

Finally — I hope that this will answer my hon. Friend's question — certain personal information supplied to the Government, such as the details of someone's income declared to the Inland Revenue or information supplied by a person applying for social security, would also be protected. Those classes of protected information are based on those in the 1979 Bill, although they are narrower in certain respects. They do not include a separate class of offence relating to disclosures of information about telephone tapping, the interception of post, or communications received from other Governments.

However, disclosures of any such matters would be offences under the Bill if they were likely to result in serious injury to the nation's interests. No doubt we will come to the concept of serious injury during the course of the debate. It was dealt with in the Franks report and in the White Paper and is a concept well understood by right hon. and hon. Members.

Nor does the Bill include among its protected classes information received from or relating to companies and nationalised industries, as did the 1979 Bill. To do so would be to protect a vast amount of information on subjects such as nuclear and environmental pollution, food additives, pesticides, pharmaceuticals and consumer product safety. The fact that such information is covered by section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 is one reason why there is general resentment and much disquiet about section 2.

Certainly, some civil servants handle commercially sensitive information obtained from private concerns, but so, too, do local authority officials who have never been subject to section 2. Should an official improperly disclose a company's trade secrets, no doubt he or she would be open to an action for recovery of damages under common law, which might involve potentially enormous personal liability.

Under clause 2 a civil servant who intentionally or recklessly discloses information contrary to his official duty commits an offence punishable — as under the Official Secrets Act—by up to two years imprisonment. Clause 3 contains similar provisions in relation to Government contractors. Anyone who obtains protected information — that includes journalists and ordinary citizens such as hon. Members and their constituents— commits an offence under clause 4 if he intentionally discloses information, knowing it to be protected.

Under clause 5, a person who impr protected information contrary to his officia officially being asked to return it, commi However, the existing section 2 offence of m official information would no longer exist.

These provisions provide a considera against the improper disclosure or publicatio information. However, the Bill creates unif and that is an element that we consider to be contribution to the debate, on which we wou the Government's views.

Under clause 6 it would be a defence fo show that the information he was charged w had already become publicly available, w United Kingdom or elsewhere. That reflec basic premises of the measure — that on which are likely to cause actual harm s criminal penalties. That was the Governm some of those issues when the 1979 Bill was the House of Lords.

A disclosure that merely repeats informat already been provided would not be an o harm would have been done by the origin — the contention of closing the stable d horse has bolted. However, the person respo original disclosure would be liable to pros the Bill.

Clause 7 contains a defence for disclosu in the public interest, although I must stress carefully limited in several respects. First, available only on specific matters: crime, fr authority, neglect in the performance of an or other misconduct. It would not be availab who merely disagreed with Government poli that Government policy was not in the publ Britain, we settle such matters at a general el Government are entitled to maintain that t people, expressed through a general election, matters. Moreover, the misconduct would serious—sufficient to justify, in the public disclosure of information which should nor confidential.

Secondly, there would have to be reason for believing that such crime, fraud or misco Suspicion or conjecture would not do. The d be available only in circumstances in which, same evidence, any reasonable person woul reach similar conclusions.

Finally, in the case of a civil servant or contractor, although not in the case of a j defence would be available only if the perso had previously taken all reasonable steps misconduct to the attention of the appropria using established internal procedures, an failed. Disclosure could be justified only as first—resort.

The principle of a public interest defence not new. It is taken from the existing con confidence which has long held that a pers bound to respect an obligation of confi conceal serious wrongdoing. In a 1968 jud Denning held that the defence

"extends to any misconduct of such a nature th the public interest to be disclosed to others."

He went on to say:

"It should extend to crimes, frauds and misdeeds, both those actually committed as well as those in contemplation, provided always—this is essential—that the disclosure is justified in the public interest."

In 1981 the Law Commission made proposals for a new statutory law on confidence and the draft Breach of Confidence Bill which it published incorporated a statutory public interest defence. The Attorney-General's consent would be required for any prosecution in which serious injury to the nation's interests was alleged.

In any prosecution involving information about defence, international relations, security or intelligence, a certificate signed by the Minister would be required under clause 8. The certificate would show that at the time of the alleged offence the information was properly classified and that its disclosure was likely to cause serious injury to the interests of the nation or to endanger the safety of a citizen. If the defence wished to challenge the assertion that serious injury was involved, that would be done before the trial took place by referring the matter, under clause 9, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, whose decision on the matter would be conclusive. That is the only matter that would go before the Judicial Committee. The question of justification in the public interest or any other defence would be heard at the trial itself in the normal way.

It is curious that, as we have advanced through those years since 1911, charges under section 1—this Bill does not touch on section 1, which deals with crime, treachery, spying, espionage and so on—has been referred to a court of the land and tried in front of a jury of fellow citizens. That was considered appropriate in 1911. We have somehow retreated from the principle that we should be judged in matters of honour and integrity that affect our liberty by procedures other than by trial by jury of our fellow citizens. It is a matter of personal regret that the judgment of the sponsors was that that could not be met in the clause dealing with section 2, which involves much lesser offences. We have tried to look for a satisfactory route that would retain the confidence of the House and the confidence of the public beyond.

Clause 11 contains penalties for offences. These are identical to those in the 1979 Bill. We saw no reason to differ from the judgment of the Government. Of course, in the ordinary course of events, penalties or judgments can be altered to meet the requirements of the House as its perceptions alter. The Bill's provisions on classification are generally similar, although not identical, to those of the 1979 Bill. Ministers would be required, under clause 12, to classify documents whose unauthorised disclosure would be an offence involving serious injury to the national interest under this Bill. Regulations on the classification and marking of documents would be made under clause 13 and there would be an annual report to Parliament on the application of the regulations.

The second part of the Bill is different in intent. It contains two limited duties of publication. Under clause 15, Government Departments and certain other public authorities would be required to make available for inspection, copying and purchase the guidelines and rules they use in administering schemes affecting the benefits or penalties to which individuals may be entitled or subject. They may charge a fee to cover any administrative costs entailed. The object is to provide individuals with information about the rules under which they may be dealt with and allow them to satisfy themselves that they have been treated fairly. I must acknowledge that the Government are moving forward in that line and movement is appreciated by the public and colleagues on both sides of the House in that it easier for us to judge cases in the instance of i constituents.

Clause 16 requires Departments and auth make an annual report to Parliament on the s have taken to improve and increase public information within their control. The Bill however, impose a duty on them to take such the publication duty may provide a modest inc them to do so.

The remaining clauses deal with miscellaneou The definitions are, on the whole, based on the as are the provisions relating to acts done abroa schedule of repeals, which includes section 2 of th Secrets Act.

I have gone through that so that I have disch duty in trying to bring before the House t instances and clauses to which the Bill rel sponsors and I approached the matter bearing in it concerns every one of us as citizens and appropriate that these issues should be discusse Floor of the House. We do not take the absolu that the Bill has everything and has to sta However, we thought that it was an appropriate v a proper discussion of certain issues that deal relationship of the citizen to the state and the Commons to the Executive.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): M the hon. Gentleman back to the Ponting case? believe that the prosecution would have been su brought against Clive Ponting had this Bill been l at that time?

Mr. Shepherd: If the hon. Gentleman will fo I shall try to deflect requests to make a specific on legal matters that have come before a court. one of the reasons why section 2 has not been us Government is that they do not have confidence i that juries would take the same view as they d fairness, that has confronted Governments of When a jury of free English men and women are with an issue that does not involve national sec they are considering what may perhaps dishonourable conduct, which is essentially a dis matter and could be dealt with in other ways, t nervously on the possibility of finding a fello guilty, with the possible implication that someon to prison. That has caused great difficulties Governments. Juries now have difficulty in disce distinction between what is injurious to national and what is merely inconvenient to Governm bungling.

The former Secretary of State for Defence, hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Hes present. His repudiation of the charges on the Flo House was wholly convincing as to the Government, and I also thought that the identifi the principles of confidentiality and the duties servants within the internal disciplinary arrange Departments of State was convincing. Perhaps th instance when that route should have been However, I claim no great wisdom on the deta arguments that came before the House. I reiterat issue of national security was involved.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): Will the hon. Gentleman consider a situation where the dishonourable conduct may be less that of the civil servants than the behaviour of the politicians involved?

Mr. Shepherd: I am sorry, but I did not hear the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Dalyell: The dishonourable conduct may be less that of the civil servants than that of the politicians involved who may have misbehaved.

Mr. Shepherd: We all have our own views on specific cases. I have tried to identify the reasons why I do not want to make a judgment on a particular issue without having had sight of all the documents available within a court.

The sponsors were kind enough to see me though, and we are grateful for the advice of a wide range of outside individuals, including the press, and a whole series of organisations and citizens.

I want to identify the three matters of principle that we believe should be brought to the attention of the Houses of Parliament. The first is the question whether a Minister should be both judge and jury in an issue concerning a certificate. That goes to the heart of our sense of what is right and proper. When it was in opposition, the Conservative party's position was that that was inappropriate. Lord Havers, then Sir Michael Havers, speaking as the shadow Attorney-General, identified that as the one issue that would not be satisfactory to our party. I hold by that still. It is one of those ironies of history that when we introduced a Bill we omitted that safeguard and it brought about considerable criticism in the House of Lords and from the general press as to our intentions.

The fundamental principle is that, if one is to retain public confidence in the fact that a Minister has not simply found in someone's favour — surprise, surprise — one must show the public that good and solid citizens with experience in such matters have looked at the issue, and in that way validate the judgment of a Minister of the Crown. I do not think that that is an unreasonable contention. It goes to the heart of our relationships in those matters. If a man is facing the possible loss of his liberty, he should be able to challenge the basis of that contention.

I know that the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Rees), the then Home Secretary will be well able to tell us something about the doctrine of time and distance—that something of crucial interest to the nation in 1939 may have no validity today. Something of great injury to the state just two weeks ago may cause no injury today. The House should fully discuss this matter and I hope that the Home Secretary, when he at long last responds to these points, will say a few words about a principle which goes to the heart of any view of how we identify something which causes serious injury.

We now come to a more difficult concept, which has caused grave anxiety to myself and to some of my right hon. and hon. Friends—a doctrine which seems to be propounded through the courts, of a lifelong duty of confidentiality to the grave. The Bill reinforces the duty of confidentiality. It makes it clear to a civil servant that he will be dismissed, and possibly prosecuted, and, if so, that he may well face a criminal sentence and imprisonment of up to two years. Civil servants know where they stand. At present, because the law is so unspecific and because juries are failing to convict or accept the Government's views, there have been several cases—of whic an example—in which a jury has take from that of the Government.

I regret that the Government will be as they pursue this matter through the c the benefit of Mr. Justice Scott's vie considered specific issues and said tha information, the concept of public inter as is sometimes said. It is understood fa the courts. He challenged the con Armstrong, as portrayed before th instance is relevant in the present circum of a particular book—by asking, if a of the Crown conspire to destabilise a L Government, what would be our vie should be informed of that. Mr. Justice clear, that we can never enjoin anybody of confidentiality.

My own instincts and judgment of wh would be outraged if we so bound a servants are often loyal, committed understand the constraints under whi who fully honour their obligations to so they are honourable people. We are a confronted with something that goes t our democratic processes, which talks to of our democracy, that they should in reveal such information. I hold that t proposition.

That is why I hate the distinctio between class and form, as if there were about what the House of Commons consider. It goes to another theme of th believe that if the House can be waylaid that there are matters so confidentia terms of framework and the enunc principles, not the detail of the applica case—that a Minister of the Crown, not accountable to the people of this co a sense of our most fundamental extraordinary that anybody takes a contrary view. This is a Chamber in which contrary views are argued, and I have no doubt that I shall hear some from my hon. Friends and from Opposition Members. I believe strongly in the importance of our asserting ourselves in these matters. That is why this lifelong duty of confidentiality contradicts our ability to hold an Excutive or a Minister accountable.

When information is out, can there be a defence for citizens who pass it on? When a piece of information has become common knowledge, or is knowable, because it is no longer protected — when the horse has bolted, however regrettable and however disgraceful the conduct of the citizen responsible—what do we do? That is what we must all ask ourselves. That is what people outside and the press must ask themselves. There is a great folly in trying to deny citizens information that is commonplace. Are we saying that there is something so special about us as citizens that we must not know this information? The French, the Germans and the people 2 in across the Irish border may know this information. The United States may know this information. Citizens of this country may even have access to this information if they are rich enough to have purchased it from abroad. We can listen on the radio to broadcasts in English from Denmark and Sweden.

Mr. Norman Buchan (Paisley, South): Or from the Kremlin.

Mr. Shepherd: Are we to say that an embargo and an injunction on us forms our judgment on that information. It may have been absolutely criminal that that information escaped. It does not mean that the citizen who gave that piece of information should not be subjected to the rigours of the law. But, when the information is out, what do we do? I beg the Government to reflect seriously on that principle, because it has caused extraordinary difficulties for them.

I wish to go further. We must consider the relationship, because this affects the press deeply. I genuinely believe that the Government have a difficult case to convince the higher courts that a lifelong duty of confidentiality and enjoinment to the press that it may never repeat information, which goes to the heart of our democratic processes, will come to grief. By and large, our courts are regarded by most judiciaries in the English-speaking world with similar legislative instincts to our own as a conservative judiciary. The mere mention of the words "national security" tends to make them bend over in favour of a Government to accommodate a different course of action than is presently being pursued through injunctions.

I am also nervous that, if we do not take a step back and consider these issues reasonably, we shall end up in the European Court of Human Rights, and article 10 will be reinforced. I say that for two reasons. The press is an essential ingredient of freedom of discussion and holding the Government to account. By and large, we have a trivial and silly press. That is partly a reflection of the restraints placed upon it by section 2. It is important for individual citizens who are serious-minded to examine the contentions and proposals of the Government, which have come out into the open legitimately, but can be covered under section 2. It makes it too easy for Administrations to manipulate the information available to journalists and therefore has acted as a curb on a reasonable appraisal of legitimate information.

I shall cite a distinct difference in the pr speaking, the quality of our financial a reporting is wildly superior to that of our ge reporting. There is a reason for that. I shall will not endear me upstairs. We have ma press for too long. A hallelujah chorus rej Government handout that is put their way, though it were a masterful piece of journalism, and passes it off as though there in it. That practice has been reinforced ove [Laughter.] Opposition Members are laugh know that there have been moments when th have rushed to confide secrets—if I had an be stymied by an embargo — to that lit chorus, who have related it to their newspa

Over many years, the uncritical and slav of Government press handouts has done our injury. We see it on both sides of the H trivialised important issues beyond belief. W political issues are to be discussed in th challenge to the authority and accuracy of G of interest to citizens.

Section 2 relates to the control of inform hon. Member has encountered instances o which it has inhibited proper discussion. I some aspects that do not serve the interests o of Government. I was on the first Committee British Telecom. The proposition was th liberalising and creating a competitive telecommunications. One essential evaluatio judgment on it; an ability to improve a Bill creation of Mercury. It was cited as the n competitive framework, in which, hencefo Telecom would have to operate.

[Mr. Shepherd]

That was a State secret. It was embargoed as being commercially confidential to, supposedly, the second competitive force. It eventually leaked out in response to parliamentary questions, long after the events when it would have been important. We learned that Mercury's share of the market was to be restricted to 3 per cent. of British Telecom's revenue. There is no way in which one can construct an argument for competition on that basis. As a consequence, what emerged, in my judgment — others may make their own judgment — was a thoroughly bad Bill. It could have been better made, could have better served the interests of the consumer, and better served the Government's concept, to which I fully subscribe, that a competitive market place serves us better than does a monopoly which is regulated or otherwise.

In the context of the spheres in which they have expertise, all hon. Members have encountered such reluctance to make available knowledge that would serve citizens and enable the press to hold to account. If we are to have respect for our institutions, we need the best forms of information. If we can get that information, we can hold Governments to account. They are general themes. I invite the House to support me and to examine the Bill at a later stage.

10.15 am

Mr. Merlyn Rees (Morley and Leeds, South): I support the Bill. I compliment the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) on the way in which he presented our case. I shall remember what he said about the role of the House. Since I have returned to the Opposition Back Bench, I have often thought that, if we are treated like office boys, we shall behave like office boys. On the important topic of official secrets, section 2, we should be allowed to participate in the changes that must take place. They have been discussed for at least 30 years. Many of us can be blamed for the fact that we did not succeed. The issues are too complicated to be dealt with in the same way as, for example, an education Bill to bring in a national curriculum — it may not be well thought out, but the party of the day has won the election and will proceed with it.

Many of the issues in the Official Secrets Act 1911 are too complicated to be left to Ministers and to the meetings that take place in the Privy Council Office and the papers that come from them. The Government saw what happened to their Bill, which was different from the one that I hoped to have ready. Their Bill included clauses that civil servants had been pressing on me. The Government were new in office.

The Opposition want to participate in the reform of section 2. I suggest to my hon. Friend who introduced the Bill — I use that term deliberately — that, perhaps, this year, many of the issues that have been raised need to be thought out and teased out before they are translated into legislation. We can do that to the benefit of us all.

I have a few queries about the Bill, which I happily sponsor, but that is not surprising. I question some aspects of the Franks report. I was a member of the Franks committee, which was appointed by the then Prime Minister in 1972. As a former junior Minister at the pitch, I was pleased to spend a year or two with that great man, Lord Franks, as I was later to sit under his chairmanship of the committee on the Falklands war. He had a formidable mind, and both reports bear his imprint.

I also query some of the words that I used a few weeks after becoming Home Secretary. I hoped that there was one thing that I could do in that curious office — not much, as the Secretary of State knows. I hoped to reform the Official Secrets Act, but I did not do so. Perhaps I have learnt from the experience of the past few years. I hope that, even at this late stage, the Government will change their three-line Whip approach. There is a way in which the Bill, which I happily sponsor, can be used this year in advance of a White Paper. It would be a better White Paper if it were done in the light of discussions on the Floor of the House. There is a wealth of experience in the House.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): We are paying great attention to the right hon. Gentleman as he is a former Home Secretary. As the debate pans out, much will depend on the judgment that the House places on the Home Secretary. The right hon. Gentleman will appreciate that in former times we have been in Opposition, and he will recall the Agee and Hosenball case, when my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Whitelaw said:

"I believe that in the end, in cases like this we have to trust the judgment of the Home Secretary. I am prepared to do so because I believe that it is part of our constitution to trust the judgment of any Home Secretary in these circumstances . . . I cannot conceive that he would have taken this decision unless he had been totally convinced that it was in the interests of this country and its people".—[Official Report, 3 May 1977; Vol. 931, c. 407.]

Does the right hon. Gentleman believe that he and the Opposition should show the same courtesy and belief in the judgment of the Home Secretary today when he advises the House——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. I hope that interventions will be interventions and not speeches. Will the hon. Gentleman come to a conclusion?

Mr. Baldry: Does the right hon. Gentleman believe that he and the Opposition should show the same courtesy to the Home Secretary as was shown to the Labour Government by the Conservative party?

Mr. Rees: The hon. Gentleman is speaking about a quite different issue. I was not operating the Official Secrets Act. If it had concerned that Act it would have been taken out of my hands and would have been in the courts. We are talking about legislation. The Home Secretary is a lonely man or woman——

Mr. Baldry: The right hon. Gentleman is missing the point.

Mr. Rees: Agee and Hosenball related to the immigration laws. Daily, the Home Secretary is making decisions under the new immigration legislation, which is much the same in essence. He made a decision last week for example, that was reported in the newspapers, to deport someone under the same terms as I deported Agee and Hosenball. If the attitude of the hon. Gentleman is the way that we are to deal with the reform of the Official Secrets Act, no wonder it has been kept under the hat of the Government—it is irrelevant.

We should use the Bill for the benefit of the House and, eventually, for the benefit of the country.

It is interesting to note how attitudes have changed since the White Paper of the 1966-67 Wilson Government on information policy. The Franks committee took evidence from a wide group of people and officials, including the security services, about who will do the prosecuting, how prosecutions under the Act should take place, what is the duty of the citizen and who controls prosecutions. The main point—it is what I want to talk about today—concerns classification. It is on the basis of classification that any new law will have to operate.

I have had a quick look at chapter 2 of the Franks report. One of the main problems that the Law Officers and the Home Secretary face is that section 2 is a catch-all. I got into trouble when I was first Home Secretary, having come from the Northern Ireland Office, when I used the phrase, to describe my reform, "We are moving from the blunderbuss to the armalite." I meant that one was sharper with regard to targeting. Many people took a dislike to that analogy, but I believed it to be true. Section 2 of the Act catches everybody—all Crown servants, every civil servant and every Minister of the Crown.

When one reads the memoirs of eminent former Prime Ministers and others, one notes that the Official Secrets Act is broken all the time. They keep classified papers—there may be some present today who have done so—and in so doing they are breaking the law. Many of those papers concern aspects of national security. Many civil servants feel a little angry that they are treated in one way and politicians in another.

How does section 2 work? I remember being surprised when the Franks committee was taking evidence from senior civil servants. Despite the catch-all nature of section 2, in the report we said;

"Nevertheless governments regularly reveal a great deal of official information. These disclosures do not contravene section 2.

A Crown servant who discloses official information commits an offence under the section only if the information is disclosed to someone other than a person to whom he is authorised to communicate it, or a person to whom it is in the interest of the State his duty to communicate it."

"The Act does not explain the meaning of the quoted words."

We did not know what they were on about. We were told that people from the Treasury went to lunch every day in the City — those were the days of fixed exchange rates; a different world, maybe—and broke the Official Secrets Act. Why? It was because they were authorising themselves.

When a Minister leaves the Cabinet meeting — this goes on all the time—he says, "Yes, I told the old chap where I stand", or, nowadays, "Yes, I told her where I stand." They give information to what is now called, the hallelujah chorus, tell it what went on in Cabinent and give details of who said what to who. They are not breaking the Official Secrets Act because they are authorising themselves.

The Government are going up a blind alley about this new concept—it is not new because many civil servants have signed a document referring to a lifelong duty of confidentiality—because they are ignoring the question of authorisation. The information will not be locked up for ever. Thus, there is dispensation from lifelong confidentiality.

We decided that too often the Official Secrets Act was used to protect not the interests of the state or the country, but to protect the political interests of the Government of the day. This does not relate to section 1; this is not the spying clause arising from spying in the dockyards before the first world war. I should say to the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills that one part of clause 2 should be in clause 1. It is akin to the spying aspect of clause 1, and that can be considered in Committee.

So, because it is important to what we do to show the change that takes place, by the time that I announced legislation in November 1976, I said that the Government would move only to prosecute "secret and above". Below that, the matter would have to be dealt with by the discipline of the organisation. We decided, unlike the Franks Committee, that Cabinet documents should not be protected. The Franks report, based on the experience of Oliver Franks, felt that Cabinet documents, whatever was in them, should be protected by the Official Secrets Act. I wish that I had had more experience at that time because that was not the way to go. When I became Home Secretary I said that Cabinet documents would be protected only if the information in them was "secret or above". In other words, it was on the basis of classification.

We said that economic information would not be protected per se, as recommended in the Franks report.

I went to speak for Mr. Ponting, who deserved to be dealt with within the Department, but who certainly should not have be dealt with under the Official Secrets Act. The then Labour Attorney-General kept his distance, as I am sure the present one does, from Ministers. When he heard what I was to say he said, "Will you remind the House on the basis of the position in the 1950s when the House voted in principle against capital punishment and the death penalty was not used afterwards?"

Whatever the law was, after the vote in the House the Home Secretary would not allow people to be hanged. He intended to proceed with prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act on information classified as secret and above. We operated in that way for the next two or three years.

The question was: why did I not introduce legislation? There were two reasons, which show the benefit of this legislation. First, most of my colleagues on whom I depended wanted a Freedom of Information Bill attached to any such legislation. I saw no way of coming to the House with a reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act plus a Freedom of Information Bill showing how information should be made available and getting them through, not least because I did not think from our discussions that we were clear about what we meant. I wanted reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act providing for only "secret and above" and a Freedom of Information Bill later.

There could be an examination in Departments such as the Department of Education and Science—which have probably never seen a document marked "secret"—to find out how information could be made available, unencumbered by the question whether to make it available.

Secondly, it was the time of the Lib-Lab pact. I was not prepared to come to the House of Commons under the control of the Liberal party on important issues. Not many members of the Liberal party had any experience of Government — rather like today — of writing a constitution. [HON. MEMBERS: "What was the issue?"] The issue was that the Liberals did not know what they were talking about.

Mr. Alex Carlile (Montgomery) rose——

Mr. Rees: The hon. and learned Gentleman must allow me to continue. It was an important Bill which I would have had to take through the House. I remember my experiences when we used to sit with Liberals in a little room near the Chamber. When we were considering a Post Office Bill the Liberals said, "We shall not support the Bill if there are three worker directors instead of two", or something like that. Well, OK, I could afford to take a couple of winks while that was discussed. But I was not going to be controlled by the Liberals on official secrets. All I am saying is that we were a minority Government. It is a fact that the Liberals had no experience of Government. That is not meant to be basically offensive.

I proposed other changes in the White Paper. The issue is so complicated that the more one looks at it, the more, as time goes on, one sees the further changes that should be made. Of course, we had to do something about freedom of information, but there was no way in which we could get legislation passed, and a Green Paper was published. The then Clement Freud, proposed a private Member's Bill in 1978-79. The Minister of State, Home Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Pontypridd (Mr. John), handled it on the Floor of the House. In our Green Paper we said:

"Some aspects of the reform have recently been discussed in Standing Committee on the Official Information Bill now before Parliament, and the Government will be making further proposals at the Report Stage which will reflect the White Paper policy."

But we had run out of time—a general election was approaching and we could not have gone any further.

While in office we produced a Bill, which I shall willingly make available. I think that I could authorise that. Legislation was being prepared, albeit hastily because we were not in a position to do otherwise. Ministers should look at it. That legislation should be made available. The Bill which the new Government then produced was not exactly the same, and it failed. I asked the Library to find comments on why the Bill failed. A Press Council release said:

"Contrary to the Franks Committee's proposals it severs the link between classification and protection."

For that reason, the media were apparently not happy. Some people, including the Labour party, said that under the new legislation there could not have been a full discussion of the Blunt case. I do not know about that; I only know that the Blunt statement which the Prime Minister read out was the one that we had ready to read out, had we still been in office.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): Why was it not revealed?

Mr. Rees: The Blunt affair had not broken then. I did not regard the Blunt issue of 20 or 30 years ago as important. But the hallelujah chorus loved it, even though it was about 30 years old. I thought that the important issue was what was happening at the present time. I sometimes think that a good leak is the best way of dealing with the hallelujah chorus.

There has been a drift in this Government. That drift occurred not because the Government did not have a majority — they can do almost what they like — but because of events. The hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) asked me about Agee and Hosenball, a different issue. I would have supported the Government had they prosecuted Chapman Pincher under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act for "Their Trade is Treachery", whi contained much of the same information that was in t Wright book. Pincher now says that he was authorised a senior official of the security services, but my view is th the Government made a grave error in not prosecuti him.

Mr. Benn: Is my right hon. Friend now saying that thinks that the Government were right to prosecute to t to prevent publication of the Wright book?

Mr. Rees: I did not say that.

Mr. Benn: I am asking my right hon. Friend to mak this clear. He has admitted that, as a Minister, he kne things about national security — notably on the Blu case—about which he kept quiet.

Mr. Rees: On the Blunt case, I thought that, unless was necessary, it should not be said that the man, who ha been found out 20 or 30 years before, had been a spy. Wha was the point of revealing that news if his former master did not know that his cover was blown? That is all. It wa not a very important issue. I did not think that the Blun case was important years after the events occurred and wa prepared not to say anything about it.

Parts of the Chapman Pincher book should have bee prosecuted under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act Some relevations in the Wright book should have bee dealt with under section 2. [HON. MEMBERS: "How?"] The question is how could that have been done, because he had gone away. Of course, that could not be done with Wright but it could have been done with Chapman Pincher, whose book contained the same information from the same source as the Wright book. As for the part of the Wright book about dirty tricks, I will never let go. But other aspects on the time basis could easily be published. Some should not have been published. There will always be some aspects of the policies and actions of the security services that should not be published. The Bill does not say that everything should be published. We say that crimes concerning "secret and above" should be prosecuted, and not anything below. Because of the Government's dilatoriness, the Ponting events occurred. I am clear about Ponting: he should not have been prosecuted under criminal sanction.

Mr. Buchan: I am slightly disturbed by what is being said. Is my right hon. Friend saying that Chapman Pincher and not just Wright should have been prosecuted? I should have thought that he should say that instead the allegations should have been immediately investigated, hearing witnesses under oath, and that if any people were to be prosecuted it should be those who carried out the subject of the allegations.

Mr. Rees: I am making a distinction between the two. I have argued on the Floor of the House for an inquiry into the allegations.

Mr. Buchan: True.

Mr. Rees: I have. It is not a question of saying, "True". I am not talking about the allegations. I am merely saying that some aspects of the book plainly contravene section 2 of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Benn: But my right hon. Friend wants to amend it.

Mr. Rees: Prosecution would still take place in some circumstances under the Bill that my right hon. Friend and I support.

Mr. Peter Archer (Warley, West): Let me intervene just so that we will not be at daggers drawn over what may be a misunderstanding. I understand my right hon. Friend's assertion that they were infringements of section 2, but is he saying that it would necessarily have been in the public interest to have prosecuted under section 2?

Mr. Rees: That is a different matter. I am saying that, prime facie, the Attorney-General would have to examine aspects of the book and decide whether to prosecute. That would remain true under the Bill, which does not sweep aside prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Michael Mates (Hampshire, East): The right hon. Gentleman also said—if I heard him aright—that there were parts of the Wright book that he would never let go. That means that he would have had to take exactly the same measures as this Government to try to prevent those very parts of the book from entering the public domain.

Mr. Rees: Let me give the hon. Gentleman a reply as blunt as the reply that I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn). The answer is no. The information is half-way round the world; it is everywhere. What is the point of locking the stable door now? I refer only to certain parts of the book, because it does not matter whether the greater part of the book is published.

On serious injury, classification and national security, I would like to suggest how the Bill might be handled. I have just read a brilliant book about Rab Butler by Anthony Howard of The Observer. It refers to a private Member's Bill that came up on a Friday, which sought to loosen the bonds of literary censorship:

> "Rab, to the surprise of those used to the Home Office's obscurantist ways, had directed that the Department should not oppose the Bill but instead had authorised one of his junior Ministers to suggest that it should be passed to a Select Committee so that it could be put into a more workable form."

That took a year, and all aspects of the Bill were questioned.

Let me tell the Home Secretary what I think should be questioned in this Bill. On classification, evidence should be taken from civil servants. I query the way in which we have been dealing with classification. On television last night the former Lord Chancellor said that this was not the judges' role. He said that they were not very good at constitutional matters, although I am not sure that classification is a constitutional matter. Evidence should be taken from senior Civil Servants on how classification is carried out.

What about time? I saw all the papers of the second Franks Committee on the Falklands war, which, so the committee said, dated back to 1965. I went through all those papers from the Foreign Office and Ministry of Defence on behalf of my colleagues as part of our analysis. It was interesting to note that all the papers had been taken in when the Government changed, on the ground that the new Government must not see the documents of the previous Administration. Exactly the same paper was put forward to the new Government. They were not allowed to see the paper that had gone to the previous Government; they just saw the same information. Would that some of that information had been published. It would not have been to the detriment of the services had much of the information on the Falklands been published earlier.

How do civil servants deal with the time aspect? If I gave someone some of the classified documents that I have at home now, it would not matter a tinker's cuss. Those documents date from 20 or 25 years ago, but they are still classified. There is more to classification than what appears at the top of the paper. Sometimes classification depends on whether there has been time to look at the documents and on whether civil servants have been available to downgrade them. Let me give an example. After the Ulster workers' strike, I commissioned a paper in the Northern Ireland Office on what might be done in Ireland. It dealt with dominion status—whatever that meant—and the whole range of options. It was time to reassess. A heavy classification was placed on that document, quite properly, because people's lives — especially in the security forces—would have been put at risk if people had thought, "My God. They are considering pulling out." That document could be published now. Indeed, it could have been published a year afterwards. It is a very interesting little document, although it does not get one very far.

Mr. John D. Taylor (Strangford): Exactly.

Mr. Rees: Nevertheless, I bet that that document is classified as secret in the Northern Ireland Office, and it need not be.

I have mentioned the role of the judiciary. Let me make one point to the Home Secretary about something that has cast doubts on the Government's injunctions and so on to deal with lifelong confidentiality. In The Times on 10 December, Lord Hunt of Tanworth, taking the context of the Civil Service, Sir Robert Armstrong and the leading article of the day before, wrote:

> "In this context the issue of lifelong confidentiality is a red herring: what that argument is about is unauthorised disclosure."

Yet the Government are pursuing that line. Why should not a Select Committee of the House have a chance to question Lord Hunt — to ask him why, as a distinguished former Cabinet Secretary, he takes that view?

We need to examine the role of the Law Officers and the Cabinet Secretary. I make no personal comment about Lord Armstrong, with whom I worked for many years; I am not talking about him. However, over the past year, I have thought that we need to examine the role of the Cabinet Secretary in relation to the Official Secrets Act. We need to examine the role of the permanent under-secretary in each Department. How do permanent under-secretaries view their role? It was handled badly in the Ministry of Defence at the time of Blunt. Something went wrong in the Ministry of Defence, I presume before the matter reached the Law Officers. It does not normally work that way.

Let me give an example from Northern Ireland. A man was giving documents to a member of the hallelujah chorus. The documents were dropped through the door of a house in Bangor. The lady who cleaned there was the wife of a policeman and she took the documents, which were marked confidential, to the police. Eventually, the permanent secretary told me about the case. He said, "It is a matter for the police, but what about the Official Secrets Act?" I asked what the files were about. They were about a committee that I had set up to end black propaganda on the part of the Army. I considered them not to be so important and when the question arose whether there should be a prosecution I expressed the view to the Attorney-General that there should not be, but that it was a matter for him to decide. No prosecution took place. Disciplinary actions were taken but that did not mean that the case warranted the application of the Official Secrets Act.

The Government should set up a Select Committee. By all means, let them publish their own White Paper while the discussions are taking place, but let them give the House a chance to discuss the issues. If they do not, we shall end up with a White Paper but there will be no legislation this year and I would be astonished if there were legislation next year. The questions on a number of these issues will be far too difficult. The arguments will take place on the Floor of the House and in Committee. We could have such discussions now, on this Bill. At the end of the day, the Government will have control of the proceedings. They could kill the Bill today or at any stage in Committee. They have a majority of more than 100, even given that Conservative hon. Members will vote against them. But let them give the House of Commons a chance to discuss the matter by setting up a Select Committee, as Rab Butler did many years ago to deal with a Bill. If they did that, they would be doing the House a service, just as the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills has done us a service, particularly in the manner in which he presented his Bill.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department Mr. Douglas Hurd): It may help the House if I set out at this fairly early stage in the debate the Government's views on the Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd). The House will be grateful to my hon. Friend for providing us with the opportunity for a debate—[Laughter.] I have always said that. I congratulate my hon. Friend on the full, lucid and engaging way in which he set about his task today.

The question in the debate is not whether section 2 is acceptable, for we all know that it is not. Section 2 is too wide and too weak. It tries to cover too much ground and, partly for that reason, does so ineffectively. Of course, in practice, prosecutions are not brought against civil servants who disclose the colour of the carpets in their offices or what was on the menu in the staff canteen. But it is wrong in principle that the criminal law should, even in theory, deal with such trivia. As the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Rees) said, the catch-all character of section 2 has serious practical consequences. It means that people are uncertain about the circumstances in which they are at risk of prosecution and conviction. Because section 2 is potentially oppressive, since it covers such trivial matters, it has come to be regarded as oppressive in all circumstances, and the misleading impression has got about that section 2 is concerned only with trivial matters.

For those and other reasons, the conclusion that section 2 needs reform has been common ground, at least since the Conservative manifesto of my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) in 1970. That thought underlay the report in 1972 of the Franks committee, which was appointed by my right hon. Friend and his colleagues. It underlay the White Paper, whose proposals were based on the Franks report, which the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South a colleagues published in 1978. It underlay the Bill t Conservative Government introduced when they office in 1979. My right hon. Friend is right to sa as it stands, section 2 has no defenders.

In 1979, it was widely expected that a Bill to fu long-held ambition of narrowing the scope of sec would be received with reasonable enthusiasm. hoped that the proposals in the Bill, which were ba the Franks report and the 1978 White Paper—th hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South now say he would have acted differently — would be supported. That was reasonable, but it turned out wrong. The 1979 Bill was lost in a thicket and had withdrawn. Some parts of it attracted very opposition. I am thinking especially of the fact would have protected all information relating to se and intelligence and would have provided for the question whether the disclosure of information relat defence or international relations was likely to serious injury to the interests of the nation to be de by a Minister of the Crown. The Bill ran into troub those and other grounds.

Since 1979, the Government have put no propos Parliament. That was a reasonable stance for my hon. Friends to take for some time after the collapse effort in 1979. After long consideration by dif Governments, a substantial effort had been made major proposal put forward. The debate that follow 1979 showed the difficulties but did not provide answers. It was legitimate for my right hon. Fri especially those who had had a hand in that enterpri make the distinction between criticising section 2 reforming it. The first was easy — it was com ground. The second had been genuinely attempted found to be dauntingly difficult.

When, early last autumn, my hon. Friend contemplated his Bill, he might reasonably have tho that that was still the Government's position. He may thought — although, as he knows, I went as far could as fast as I could to enlighten him — that choice lay between a private Member's Bill and the in of a Government still nursing their burnt fingers, fearing the fire and refusing to do anything sensibl effective about section 2.

That is not the position today. The question before House is not whether a further effort should be mad improve the Act. As I shall try to show, the choic between taking this Bill forward and waiting—not very long — for fresh proposals from Government which Parliament can decide.

On 3 February last year, we had an interesting del in the House—I rather think that it was a Supply of the late, lamented Alliance—in which I made it c that the matter should return to the agenda. Since A 1987 — I gently underline that date — Ministers officials have been working on a thorough and deep rev of section 2 to establish whether the difficulties can overcome and the Act reformed. By the end of last y we had reached a point which enabled me to announc the House on 15 December that we had made enou progress to be able to promise a White Paper in summer and to work towards early legislation thereaf So—trying to put it fairly—we had the coincidence my hon. Friend gaining first place in the ballot and be keen to take forward a subject of major importance which he felt strongly, but on which, unknown to him when he began to think about it, the Government had already embarked.

That has created a tactical position which is painful for my hon. Friend and for me and the Government, although it is not the fault of either of us. We are faced with my hon. Friend's Bill, yet we have not reached conclusions on several of the matters that it covers. I make no apology for that and, especially after the fascinating speech of the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South, who talked about the murky confusion that prevailed in 1978-79, it is not open to the Opposition to chide us for taking more than 10 months on a matter which took them five years with no legislative result. I regard the right hon. Gentleman as the hare who has bounded about in this race for some time and myself as the tortoise, who started much later. We shall see who reaches the winning post first.

As any reader of the Franks report can see, this matter goes to the heart of government. As the right hon. Gentleman said, it is not a matter on which Ministers can take a general decision to legislate and officials of one Department can go away and work up a proposal. This involves many agencies and Departments. Not only the principles, but the details are crucial to them. That is why it is not sensible to scratch and scramble at the issue. It is not sensible to take at a gallop the necessary detailed work to get round a tactical difficulty. It would not be sensible for Parliament to plunge into the subject without having before it the Government's proposals.

Mr. Allen McKay (Barnsley, West and Penistone): Will the Minister answer a simple question? Is there anything in this Bill which he would not have in his?

Mr. Hurd: If the hon. Gentleman has been following my exposition, he will understand that I cannot answer that question — [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh!"] Perhaps I should try to explain it again. In 1979, following a period of Government by the Labour party, which made no such major effort, the Conservative Government made a major effort which was defeated. For some time after that, the view was that the subject was too difficult. That view no longer prevails, and since April 1987 a major effort has been under way. I suppose that we are about two thirds of the way through that effort, but it would not be sensible to set before the House, as a critique of my hon. Friend's Bill, the two thirds of the ground that we have covered and our provisional conclusions. Hon. Members will accept that, once we have covered all the terrain, Ministers will consider the full picture and ratify the provisional decisions that have been made. It is precisely to avoid such confusion that the Government are taking the line that I advocate on the Bill.

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): This is a small question, but one on which the entire debate may turn. As I understand it, the Home Secretary is saying to the House, with as much authority as the Government possess, that the Government believe that the House should wait until June; however, they will not tell us what we should wait for.

Mr. Hurd: What the right hon. Gentleman is being asked to wait for is a White Paper in June, followed by a debate in the House before the summer recess, to which my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House committed us yesterday. That will be followed, we hope, by early legislation, which will be considered and decided in the House. It will then be for the House to decide whether it likes the proposals.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: What does "early" mean?

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Gentleman has been in the House for long enough to know what "early" means in this context.

My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills has tried to be helpful. He has offered to take on board any specific points, and has been ready to negotiate changes. But, as he knows, and as I have just explained, we are not in that position. We have worked out our own ideas on some points, but not on others. It would be silly for Ministers to start pronouncing on part of their work until they can consider the whole. The Committee stage of a private Member's Bill can, of course, be interesting and fruitful, but equally it can be unpredictable and confusing, because neither the private Member who is sponsoring the Bill, nor his hon. Friends, nor the Minister is in effective charge. I am sure that it is much better to proceed instead in the orderly way that is traditional for important legislation on the machinery and methods of government. There should be a Government Bill on which Parliament should pronounce. The Government should propose, and Parliament should dispose.

Mr. Dykes: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for giving way. Perhaps he does not realise that he is being condescending — accidentally or unwittingly — which is not normally characteristic of him. Does this not make matters more difficult for the House? Can he not even give some putative, theoretical examples of the difficulties of reaching final conclusions at this stage? Otherwise he is saying, in effect, what hon. Members on both sides of the House will resent: that the subject is not suitable for parliamentarians.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend is simply not following my argument. Not only is the subject a matter for parliamentarians, but it is a matter on which only Parliament can decide, and which Parliament will wish to discuss in detail. I am merely suggesting that is better for that detailed discussion, and those decisions by Parliament, to take place on the basis of proposals put forward by Government.

I was flattered by the constitutional doctrine advanced by my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), but I am not asking the House to accept a blank cheque on the basis of trust in my judgment. We are not implying that these are matters for dictation by Government, rather than for discussion in Parliament. I certainly would not ask the House to accept my views on how the law should be changed without discussion, as though the fact that they were my views, or those of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, settled the matter. That could not conceivably be proper.

Parliament, not the Government, will decide whether section 2 is to be reformed, as we were reminded bitterly in 1979. What the House must decide today is whether, on a matter that lies at the heart of government, to proceed with a private Member's Bill or to wait for a short time — we have defined a short time — until the House can analyse and consider the Government's proposals. It is plain to me which of those two courses offers the greater opportunity for reflection, discussion and a good outcome.

[Mr. Hurd]

Another fairly dotty notion going the rounds is that the Government intend simply to propose some tyrannical tightening of the Act. That would suggest that we would have no regard to the Franks report, to the 1979 experience or to today's debate. It surprises me that anyone should take such a charge seriously. After all that has happened, it would hardly be sensible for us to suppose that either House of Parliament would accept such a measure.

Mr. Buchan: If the Home Secretary is taking that view —if, indeed, he takes a view indicating basic agreement with the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd)—why in heaven's name should a senior civil servant of this country, and indeed the country, be put into the ludicrous position of pursuing past tales from one court to another throughout the world? If that is the intention, it does not add up.

Mr. Hurd: The House has had a full account of, and debate on, the attitude that the Government have taken during the different "Spycatcher" trials, and I do not wish to be diverted to that subject now. I am merely saying that it is dotty for any serious critic or commentator to suppose that we would see any point in putting forward to either House a substitute for the Bill that simply presented some tyrannical tightening of the Act.

Mr. Alex Carlile rose——

Mr. Hurd: I want to get on, because, as you, Mr. Speaker, have warned us, many hon. Members wish to speak, and the speeches so far have taken up a certain amount of time.

Let me go over the terrain to illustrate the point that I have just made. We want legislation that is effective, enforceable and reasonable. "Effective" means clear and intelligible. "Enforceable" means that the legislation should not pose undue challenges to the prosecuting authorities or the courts. "Reasonable" means that new legislation should not just bring about a narrowing of the scope of the criminal law, but should command the confidence of juries. That involves taking into account the criticisms made of the 1979 Bill.

Anyone who wishes to narrow the "catch-all" range of section 2 faces the same set of complex and sensitive issues. Once we decide that it is wrong for the law to penalise all unauthorised disclosures of official information, we have to tackle the problem of deciding what disclosures of what information should in future be unlawful. That sets off a series of interrelated questions. We have been steadily working our way through those questions since last Easter, and we have not yet finished the work. They are the questions addressed by the Franks committee, the Labour Government and now my hon. Friend.

What are those questions? First, we must ask to what categories of information the legislation should apply. The Franks committee recommended, for example, that all Cabinet papers should be protected, as should all information on currency and the reserves. We concluded that it was not necessary to cover those categories in the 1979 Bill. Should we now go back to Franks, should we stick with the 1979 categories, or should we narow the field still further?

Everyone would agree that security and intelligence information should be covered, but, in our view, that is not enough. For one thing, sensitive defence informat clearly be protected. But how much more info needs the safeguard of a criminal sanction? Shou be Government papers, or should it also be info provided in confidence to the Government?

Once we have got through that filter, we are fa another set of questions. Should the disclosure o I stress the word "any" — information in categories be an offence, or should it be an offe if the disclosure is likely to cause damage? If we de there should be some test of the damage likely to b by disclosure, should there be one general test, or tests relating to different categories of informatio

Sir Nicholas Bonsor (Upmin[illegible]r): As my rig Friend knows, I am one of the Bill's sponsors. W Bill was first put forward, none of us knew t Government were proposing legislation.

My right hon. Friend said earlier that the Ho a choice between this Bill and Government leg later. Surely, however, the result of today's th Whip is that the Bill cannot proceed to a Committe Therefore, the points that he says are at the hear proposals for his legislation cannot be discusse Would it not be very much to the Government's adv if the Bill went to Committee and the issues we explored? That would give us a clearer indication the Government should do before my right hon. puts forward his legislation.

Mr. Hurd: That is the difficulty. My hon. Frie put it very well. I do not deny that there is a diffi am illustrating the wide terrain that a measure cover, to show that we are not after some quick sn the issue—some tyrannical measure that simply b up the mouths of officials. We are covering that g but we have not yet finished covering it. The diffic going into Committee at this stage is that we are no with our proposals on all the points involved.

I have pointed out the new development since m Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills start initiative. We have been at work on the matter Easter, and have committed ourselves to produ White Paper with our proposals by June. Of course will be a Committee stage; of course it will be a d examination. However, I feel that that Committee should be on the basis of Government proposals.

Dr. David Owen (Plymouth, Devonport) rose—

Mr. Campbell-Savours rose——

Mr. Hurd: I shall give way—I think for the las —to the right hon. Gentleman.

Dr. Owen: Surely the time for a three-line Whip, i a time ever exists with a private Member's Bill such a is on Third Reading.

Mr. Hurd: I have tried to explain why I believe th procedure that we are proposing is sensible and or The choice before the House is whether to follo procedure that we have outlined during the past few or to give the Bill a Second Reading and sent it Committee when Ministers have not cleared their on their ideas on answers to some of the questions have been raised.

The facts are that since last Easter we have had in a serious enterprise to find an acceptable replacemen section 2. That work is taking us over the issues that I described, many of which are addressed in the Bill, and a White Paper with a view to legislation at the earliest opportunity is a commitment—I repeat that I hope to lay the White Paper before Parliament in June and, as my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House made clear yesterday, the House will have an opportunity to debate it before the summer recess——

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Hurd: I am coming to an end. I believe that this is the orderly path to a reform of section 2.

My colleagues and I will listen attentively to the rest of the debate. My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills has had his success and nobody can or, in my judgment, would want to take away that success. [Interruption.] My hon. Friend has had his success. He has had his debate. He has taken his initiative and secured from the Government assurances which I think most people would regard as adequate. The orderly path now is to wait—not much longer, but a little longer—to digest and discuss the Government's proposals and any amendments proposed to them and for Parliament to decide in a measured way whether those proposals are ones which it wishes to take forward.

Nothing will be lost except a little time. After 76 years, that is a small price to pay for the chance of putting to rest an issue which, as the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South so clearly illustrated, has troubled successive Parliaments and Governments.

This is not a languid, academic or spoiling exercise on my part. Perhaps I could add a personal word. I have worked as a Crown servant for 14 years and as a Member of this House for another 14. From both angles I have watched this problem deteriorate. The morass has become muddier, the thicket more impenetrable.

Many Governments, including this one and the Labour Government, have put out more and more information, but they have found it more difficult to protect that small portion of what one might call official information which has to be protected. I have believed for some time that the task of reforming section 2 has now become crucial for the proper functioning of modern democratic government in Britain. We now have a choice of procedures. I believe that we have set about the issue in an orderly and sensible way. That is what we intend, and it follows with regret that I must recommend that the House does not give the Bill a Second Reading.

11.14 am

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): I also congratulate the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd). I congratulate him on many things; on having coined a new phrase for the political lexicon—some of us have attempted to do that for 25 years and failed, but he has done it this morning — on his demeanour during the past month, and on the content of his Bill.

I feel just as warmly about the content of the hon. Gentleman's Bill as, apparently, does the Home Secretary. Indeed, the only thing that divides the Home Secretary and me in our admiration for the proposals is that I propose to vote for them and the Home Secretary proposes to vote against them. I confess that I would go further than the hon. Gentleman's proposal. I should like there to be a freedom of information Bill which requires, rather allows, the publication of information which i damaging or potentially damaging to national securi which it would be in the public interest to publish.

The Bill has the overwhelming advantage of refo section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911. Although been tolerated for so long, it ought not to be tolerate longer in a free society. The section allows the suppr of whatever official information the Government choose to keep secret. The information may be suppr for wholly legitimate reasons or simply becaus Government find it inconvenient to allow the p people to know what they ought to know and have a to know. That is our complaint and has always bee complaint about section 2.

Since the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brow published his Bill, the 30-year rule has presented us an overwhelming example of the misuse of section Governments. I refer, of course, to the way in whic years ago, the Government dealt with the Winc disaster. We now know, simply from the publicati Government papers, that the Cabinet of the time de to conspire against the British people to keep two t secret. The first was the nature and cause of the dis and the second was the inability of the Atomic E Authority as then constituted to ensure that an disaster would not occur.

It seems to me self-evident that such action was d against the national interest by any standards. It deeply against the welfare and interests of people lived in the vicinity of Windscale, and it was in a real a conspiracy. Any civil servant, however, who cho protect the people of the area by telling the truth, w the Government would have suppressed, would have prosecuted. That is self-evidently preposterous immoral and a situation which we can begin to chan voting for the Bill.

I want to make it absolutely clear that those of us support the Bill do not believe for one moment anything in it poses any real threat to those secrets w need to be kept secret in the name of genuine nat security. I go even further. I do not believe tha omnibus power which allows the Government to sup anything that they choose to suppress, has done any service to security or the security services' record.

One of the reasons why the security services have such a deplorable record, especially in the 25 years w followed the war, is that they concerned themselves fa much with irrelevant trivialities and not enough wit central issues of national security. If there were sensible and sensitive powers, and if the security ser were under some control through the House, I believe they would operate more efficiently as well as democratically. They have nothing to lose from the Gentleman's Bill.

I repeat and emphasise that I do not think that is any disagreement in any part of the House abou need to keep secret that information which might be an enemy or potential enemy. The argument concern Government's right to keep secret from the British pe information which an enemy or potential enemy al certainly already knows and which it is in the interes the British people to be told.

The Bill draws the proper line between necessary se and news manipulation dressed up to look like the n of national security. It defines the classes of informa which are protected by criminal sanctions, it offers as a defence against prosecution the national interest and the previous availability of published information, and it offers an independent authority — the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council — as an arbiter of security classification. Those are the bones of an acceptable official information Bill.

I do not believe that many of the hon. Members who will vote for the Bill today will do so in the belief that it is perfect in every particular. Indeed, as I understood the speech of the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills when introducing the Bill, he is not making that claim. If the Government are sincere in the belief that they are to build on what he proposes, the Government's clear duty is to allow the Bill to proceed to Committee and to try to make the necessary technical alterations and improvements there. Even at this late hour, I urge the Home Secretary to consider that possibility.

I do so especially in the light of two criteria which, according to newspapers—I do not know whether they were press leaks, unauthorised briefings or simple speculation—were regarded by the Government as the stumbling block. I understand from those newspaper reports that the Government's objections to the Bill centred on two areas of defence: the public interest criterion and the criterion that the information is already in the public domain.

I want to make it absolutely clear that, in the present situation, we regard the second criterion — that the information is already available from other sources—as of crucial importance to the freedom of this country and this Parliament. Prosecuting for the production and dissemination of information that is already available is not intended to keep the information from a potential enemy but it is, by definition, intended to keep that information from the British people.

If one considers the Government's record during the past two years, when they used vast amounts of taxpayers' money to launch vastly expensive actions against newspapers that want to do no more than publish what is generally and genuinely known, one knows that the Government are doing so in the knowledge that, even if the newspapers win in court, the delay and the costs will have penalised them. The Government's pursuit of newspapers for wishing and intending to publish information that is already known has been used in a deeply unscrupulous way as an attempt to bully and blackmail newspapers into a code of conduct that the Government cannot support by any more logical or acceptable means.

The Home Secretary's response to the Bill was to ask the House to wait until June. He said, "Wait for a definable time," but he could not define for us what we had to wait for. I cannot believe that this House of Commons is so supine as to buy the Home Secretary's pig in a poke, because we would be doing so in the most extraordinary circumstances. I do not want to say anything about the Government that would deter their opponents on the Government Back Benches from voting for the Bill, so I am using my words carefully. However, to say to the House, "Trust the Government over official secrets; trust the Government over news manipulation; trust the Government over their attitudes towards television; trust the Government over their performance and proposals for manipulating or suppressing the news," is, i recent events, to make an unreasonable requ least.

Let us consider recent events that might le Members to feel that the request to wai without any assurance of what June w unreasonable. We are asked to trust the Gove for two years, have been engaged in the blac the "Spycatcher" affair. The Cabinet Secret humiliated and the Attorney-General ma ridiculous to limit the sales of a publication, from a publication, which has already sold 5 in the United States and which has, I susp reached the shelves of the Kremlin. I find it to trust the Government when I think of the v they have behaved over that affair.

We are asked to trust the Government exactly a year ago today, either sanctioned o —they certainly approved—a night raid o studios in Scotland. They defended the remo BBC of large amounts of BBC property. Ther later, they blandly announced that the BBC wrong and there were no grounds for prosec any action. I find it difficult to trust that Gov waiting until June.

We are asked to trust the Government prohibited the broadcasting by the BBC of documentary programmes which, it is gener have been produced by responsible producers were approved by the D-Notice committee. I able to trust that Government by waiting without knowing what they propose.

Most absurdly of all, we are asked t Government which prohibited the circulati Cavendish's Christmas card. The fact Government have behaved ridiculously over t should not prevent us from understanding possible to be ridiculous and tyrannical simu The fact that the Government have made themselves over the Cavendish affair should the fact that to tell a man who produces a br novelette or novel — which, having read it seem to me to contain much significant info that when he sends his Christmas card to friends, it will be illegal if any newspaper reproduce its messages, does not seem the Government whose attitude to the Official Sec June will be something on which we can plac reliance and to which we can give absolute cre

From the point of the Cavendish affair, it is to understand exactly the Government with wh dealing. I repeat that I do not think that Mr. C Christmas card contained much of significa important to remember that Mr. Cavendish is Wright is said to be by Government so disgruntled failure", who wants to get his own b security services for paying him an inadequate p is a man who thinks that he has something to context of the Bill, it is worth noting exactly so things that he does say and that the Governme suppress.

There was a time when every word of Mr. C Christmas card would have resulted in the edit Sunday Times and The Observer going to priso been reproduced in their newspapers. If they had for instance, Mr. Cavendish's view that that would have been an offence that would result in a criminal prosecution.

However, there is more to the Christmas card than that. Mr. Cavendish went on to "confess"—I use his words exactly—that when he read stories that were already currently in circulation and already published in newspapers of MI5 complicity in events in Northern Ireland, of the so-called Loyalist strike in particular, they "tie in with many events to which I have been privy over the last ten years".

Indeed, Mr. Cavendish is explicit about Ireland:

"MI5 were bitterly jealous of MI6's move into Ulster, since they believed that Northern Ireland was clearly their territory as part of the United Kingdom, and information which is now emerging seems to confirm that MI5 took active steps to 'sabotage' the work of SIS . . . Smear campaigns were being organised against anybody of consequence who appeared to be sympathetic to the position of the Catholic minority in Ulster or who showed that he believed in a settlement based on radical changes in the Northern-Southern Irish relationship. Among those targeted were Edward Heath, Harold Wilson, Edward Short, roughly twenty other MPs and also the first Catholic Chief Constable of the RUC".

It seems to me, as it will seem to many of my hon. Friends, that these are matters not so much for suppression as for investigation. It seems to me—as, I think, it will seem to many hon. Members of all parties and, indeed, to the country—that a Government who choose to suppress such charges are not a Government who can legitimately say to the House, "Wait until June. We shall produce something that is acceptable in that particular."

Nor has the Government's conduct concerning the Bill done anything to increase confidence in the Government's integrity over this matter. I am sure that hon. Members of all parties will deeply resent the notion that there are some subjects that are too important for the House of Commons to discuss on Fridays. This is an ideal subject for private Members' legislation, for it is a classic——

Mr. Hurd indicated dissent——

Mr. Hattersley: By blowing his exasperation, the Home Secretary demonstrates my point exactly. It is ideal for the purpose on this occasion, because it is a classic example of Parliament attempting to restrain an authoritarian Executive. Whether the Home Secretary knows it or not, that is a large part of what the House of Commons is for.

The hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills said that he found some irony — or perhaps he used the word paradox — in the distinction of attitudes between individuals when they moved from one side of the House to the other. Irony or paradox was a charitable way of describing it. I am sure that he is no more surprised by the change in attitude than I am, because the nature of the problem is that Governments — I freely admit, all Governments—are over-inclined to secrecy. Nobody is suggesting for a moment that it is a party issue. As I understand the hon. Gentleman, when he talks of wanting to curtail Governments, it is not this Government whom he wants to curtail, but Governments in general. On a private Members' day, the House of Commons should say that there are some things that are for the House of Commons and strong occasions when the House of Commons insists on imposing its will on the Government.

If any of the weaker-minded members of the 1922 Committee are here, I shall provoke a small groan by saying the words, "when we are next in governm me explain my point. When next the Labour p government, I have no doubt that there will be tir Ministers curse under their breath the passing o through all its stages, because there will be thing shall want to suppress. Looking at the matter objectivity of Opposition, we realise that it will be in the future as it was in the past. We shall often suppress things that we should not be allowed to The House of Commons should prevent us fro that when our time comes, as it should pre Government from doing it now.

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): As I understand hon. Gentleman's argument, it is based main pouring scorn on the Government for trying to stable door after the horse has shot away, par pouring scorn on the handling of the Cavendish Wright cases. He has not suggested that it would h wrong to bolt the door in the first place and stopped the horse from leaving. If that is so, will to any part of the Bill of my hon. Friend the Me Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) that de bolting the door in the Wright or Cavendish ca does not, would it not be better for the House to w Governmeat proposals appear, which would door?

Mr. Hattersley: Had the hon. and learned Ge not intervened, I should not have been so unkind that on Sunday morning on television he promised hon. Friends and the British people that the Secretary would describe his proposals for a Bil morning's debate——

Mr. Lawrence: I said that the Home Secretary describe his reasons for opposing the Bill, as he h

Mr. Hattersley: The hon. and learned Ge promised us that we would be told what the alt was.

Let me answer the hon. and learned Gent question directly. The point about the bolting of th door is covered in the Bill in two ways. First, t Member for Aldridge-Brownhill does not touch s of the Official Secrets Act, which has an enormo direct influence on security matters in general, and of the terms — not all — that the hon. Ge suggests. Secondly, by defining and differe between those which are genuine secrets and thos are not, he makes a group of secrets still sub penalties, were they to be revealed.

There is nothing now in section 2 that preve horse leaving the stable with the same alacrity tha be able to leave if the Bill is brought into operati the secrets that I have listed this morning as being to attempts at Government suppression have stable. The Government have been trying to bolt th not because they thought the horse could be within the premises, but because they wanted to s British people knowing what was going on — alternative, which is to stop those who may be our e or potential enemies.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: May I take my righ Friend back to the issue of Cavendish as against th of Wright? Is it not true that the Government, in tr prevent Mr. Cavendish from publishing, misund the position? Mr. Cavendish has not worked for the security services for a long time—for decades. All that he has said about what happened in the 1970s is based on hearsay. He has no evidence—he has simply purloined the material from others and put it in a Christmas card. Why are the Government so sensitive to what he has to say, when he does not back it with evidence?

Mr. Hattersley: As I hope I made clear, I was not enormously impressed by what Mr. Cavendish wrote. In a sense, that makes the Government's attitude in suppressing him all the more absurd. I repeat that the Government have behaved absurdly over Cavendish and Wright. When my next book comes out, I hope that the Attorney-General is prepared to promote its sales in America in the way that he promoted the sales of Mr. Wright's book. I do not think that half a million copies would have gone into American homes had it not been for the Government's activities.

While the Government have made asses of themselves, or a single ass of their collective self, over these matters, it is enormously important for the House and the country to understand that simply because the Government behaved foolishly does not mean that they did not behave tyrannically. They were absurd to do what they did, and in a democracy that was wrong. Today we are considering not the absurdity but the iniquity of Government. Because of that record, I could not say that everything will be all right in June when the Government introduce their new proposals.

As I understand it, and certainly as I understood the Home Secretary on the radio this morning, when he was so emollient that for a moment I believed he would support the Bill, one of the Government's principal objections is not the context of the Bill, about which the Home Secretary was remarkably eloquent during his speech, but the occasion on which the Bill was presented to Parliament. That raises a third question of principle. The first is the content of the Bill, which I support on principle. The second is the Government's record on those matters. I am not prepared to cast a vote that suggests that I trust the Government on that.

The third is the Government's attitude towards Parliament. At 2.30 pm we are voting not simply for a free press but for a free Parliament, a Parliament that is not prepared to be told by the Executive that this is not a subject that we should discuss, and upon which it is not prepared to be told by the Prime Minister that it is too complicated, technical and important for us to deal with on this occasion. For all those reasons, I hope and believe that my hon. Friends will support the Bill.

Sir Ian Gilmour (Chesham and Amersham): The issue on which the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) ended is extremely important, and I shall return to it in a moment.

I am proud to be a sponsor of the Bill of my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), which he introduced so ably. I listened carefully to what my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary said. I shall not lavish compliments on him, because it would embarrass him in more than one way. But I am not sure that his high qualities were necessarily an advantage to the Government this morning. Asquith was a Prime Minist much in the news lately. I think that it w once said of him that Asquith's lucidity disadvantage when he had nothing to say right hon. Friend's shining integrity is disadvantage to the Government when he h essentially shabby case.

Since the gravamen of the case is that t claim, in effect, a unique and exclusive rig these matters and that my hon. Friend th Aldridge-Brownhills is badly out of step a in attempting to do so himself, it is relevant Government's handling of those matters ov months, to see how justified that claim is, the light of the principles that my hon. Frie his Bill.

Like, I imagine, every other Member o have read "Spycatcher", and there is no qu it is a shocking book, written out of malic should never have been written, and it sho seen the light of day. I entirely sympat Government's original attempt to stop it And of course, I entirely agree that the should be kept secret. But the question is whom those secrets should be kept. It is powers from which we wish to whithold kn security services and other matters, not behalf of whom the security services are s operating. Indeed, a good working rule w that if the Russians know something, the can know it too. As we can confidently as Russians are capable of reading the Australi and of buying "Spycatcher" in America, t know all that is contained in it. If the Go followed tht simple rule, they would have sav a great deal of trouble and the taxpayer a money. There are three principles or tests in and my hon. Friend's Bill contains them.

The first applies only to a Governme democratic society, and the second tw Governments of any society. The first is t desirable the end, there are limits to the Government can use to attain it, because t those means would endanger the basis of th our society. In a free society, the end does n means.

The two principles that should apply to democratic or not, are, first, that a Governme at least in accordance with common sense a that the means employed should have som chance of attaining the desired end.

To prevent the press from doing its p reporting — not, I emphasise, disclosing — great public interest, the Government have re indiscriminate use of injunctions. That is a rev practice that obtained before the Licensing Ac end in 1695, and is quite unacceptable in a One of the greatest prides of our society du 200 years has been that, unlike practically country, we have had no prior restraints on Unfortunately, the Government have broke tradition, and both Lord Bridge and Lord Ol out what a perilous path the Government were by doing so.

The Government may say, "We have onl injunctions; it is the courts that have granted is true, but it is no part of a Conservative Government to makes asses of the judiciary or to persuade its members to make asses of themselves. The humiliating subservience of the judiciary to the Executive in the 17th century is well known. I hope that the current judiciary will take a careful look at the 17th century.

The second principle—that a Government should show proper common sense in their actions—has not been adhered to either. For the Government seriously to argue, and for the courts seriously to accept, that British newspapers should not publish what has been written about and is common knowledge in Australia, the United States and many other countries, is not just a defiance of common sense but a groteque absurdity. Why should the British people be singled out as the only people in the world to be kept in ignorance of what everyone else knows? Both Lord Bridge and Lord Oliver made that point well. One of them spoke about the idiocy of trying to create a cordon sanitaire around the country.

On the third principle—that the means used by the Government should have some likelihood of attaining the end—the Government have again fallen down. As the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook said, we all hope that the Attorney-General will shower injunctions on any books that we might write. I have always enjoyed rather modest sales of my books, but obviously that can easily be remedied with the help of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Attorney-General. Saatchi and Saatchi could not have promoted Mr. Wright's book better than the Government have done. The only result they have achieved so far has been the promotion of his book. It is rather fortunate that the rules that apply to the improper use of expenditure by local government councillors do not apply also to central Government, because if they did some of my right hon. Friends would face a rather hefty bill.

The secrecy laws should be directed against hostile Governments, not the British public. The Bill is a courageous and successful attempt to deal with that. If the principles of the Bill had been followed, the Government would not be in such serious trouble in these matters. My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills outlined his Bill so carefully and fully, and defended it so well, that I do not need to take up the time of the House by discussing it further.

I wish, instead, to concentrate on the Government's attitude to the Bill. We all know that for many years—and for long before this Government came to office—the House of Commons has been a pretty poor thing in many ways. It has lacked independence and has been bound hand and foot to and by the Executive. However, usually the conventions of politeness and courtesy prevail, and the House is flattered and cajoled into thinking that it enjoys some power and decides matters of moment. We all know perfectly well that it enjoys nothing of the sort and that matters of moment are decided in Whitehall, not Westminster.

The Executive does not usually flaunt its power over us, however, and the decencies are preserved. Today, those conventions have been abandoned and what Burke called the decent draperies of life have been torn asunder. The Executive is dictating to the House in all its naked crudity. I do not understand why the Government are so frightened of the House of Commons. We all know that that is a much better way of producing legislation than by the Executive sitting around in secret.

As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretar House will have to discuss these matters when his Bill forward—unless the Government sh Speaker with injunctions. I daresay that that wil not happen—although, as my hon. Friend th for Aldridge-Brownhills said, one cannot be t anything these days. The Government today what they have been doing in the courts durin few months. They are still wearing the same bo that they wore in the courts. Their imposition line Whip is the parliamentary equivalen injunctions that they have taken out against alm serious newspapers. In both cases, the procedur misconceived and authoritarian and a sorry Executive arrogance. I shall certainly oppose afternoon.

Dr. David Owen (Plymouth, Devonport): Thi a day on which the House exerts its control Executive, and that would be a day of pride. Inste probably be a day of shame. The Home Secr given the game away. I did not expect him specifically when the Government intended to their mind, but he has told us that it will be in said that there would be a White Paper, and Government decision.

If the Bill is committed to a Standing Commit have moved on to the House of Lords Government make up their mind on the issue time, the Government will tell us their view of a has already been discussed. It is not necessary Home Secretary or a junior Minister to p definitively on all the Bill's clauses during its C stage. It would be an advantage, of course, wer do so, but the Bill can go through its stages wit Government giving their definitive view of it.

The Government's view about the Bill could clear in another place where it could be amen brought back to this House. I will come later to th why many of us are concerned about the Gove position. The reasons relate to the whole que closing the stable door or blocking the mechanism the current position, if the House refuses to give a Second Reading, we accept that at the very leas continue with the present fiasco of the Official Sec 1911 for at least another year. That is an e important year to lose.

The Home Secretary was not able to tell us Government feel are the sticking points on the Bill not able to say whether they were concerned ab judicial review of the over-classification of docum the public interest defence for the public disclo confidential information. The Home Secretary over the facts that his immediate predecessor undertaking, in the wake of the decision taken European Court of Human Rights in the telephone tapping case, to implement the recom tions of the Law Commission on the remedies breach of confidence and the fact that the public defence in the Bill is modelled on the Law Comm recommendations.

It would not have been too hard for the Secretary to tell us whether he agreed with his pred and the Law Commission. After all, the Governme been aware of the recommendations for many

[Dr. David Owen]

However, we must wait until June. We are content to do that. We will receive the Government's view in June. If the Government agree to impose fundamental stops on this legislation, they will have to go to Conservative Members and explain the case for a three-line Whip. However, to apply a three-line Whip on a private Member's Bill in this way is an utter disgrace and ought to be rejected decisively.

Mr. Marlow: What is a little confusing for many of us on the Conservative Benches who wish to support the Government is why the Government take the view that it would not be helpful to them, if they are going to make up their mind in June, to have had the views of the House in a Committee stage before June. Surely that would be helpful for the Government?

Dr. Owen: I totally agree with the hon. Gentleman, at least on this occasion. I confess that I for one would be ready to serve on the Committee. Indeed, it would be unusual because in Committee on this Bill there might be many right hon. and hon. Members who have held office as Home Secretary, Foreign Secretary or Defence Secretary. They would be ready to give their judgment on this private Member's legislation. That would be immensely valuable for the House.

We have all been down this secrecy path before. Those of us who have been Ministers are all sinners. The ABC case, which was brought in good faith, turned out to be a complete disaster. The Attorney-General at the time was careful to consult, but made the point that he had taken the decision himself to pursue the trial. I initially said no, and I wish to hell that I had continued to say no. There was a most extraordinary exchange during the trial. A witness was asked to look at a photograph of a sign at the entrance to the military base. The exchange went like this:

"Is that the name of your unit?

I cannot answer that question, that is a secret.

Is that the board that is up outside the door of your unit?

Yes.

Read it out to the jury.

I cannot do that, that is a secret."

Indirectly I was a party to that farce. We have all been party to such farces and it is high time that the farce was ended.

I have concluded that the Government are not the best body to end the farce. When we enter Government, we begin to accept all the advice of officialdom and begin to believe the case for secrecy and to a great extent we lose our common-sense. We need the common-sense and common wisdom of the House of Commons. The hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) is to be congratulated on bringing forward his Bill. It is an honour to be a sponsor of that legislation.

I want to consider the most serious reason why I believe that legislation is important now. I have read "Spycatcher" and I was appalled. I did not expect to be, and I was rather lulled into believing that it was a book that might be acceptable. The book contains information which should not have seen the light of day under any circumstances. I have watched as invaluable secrets have been disseminated over the past eight years in an appalling way. We have seen secrets pouring out of GCHQ—the ABC trial related to GCHQ—and we have seen the effect of the Government's good intentions in trying to keep things secret. However, they have allowed massive amounts of secrets to come out. The we have lost very valuable secrets be to grapple with this issue.

I agree with my right hon. Frie Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. R "Spycatcher" should have been pr published. However, more important, book "Their Trade is Treachery" prevented from being written. I investigative journalism had been ca Economy with the truth was not pr Robert Armstrong in the Supreme C Wales. Sir Robert was a victim of the Her Majesty's Government being e truth.

there is some honour about it. It is an outrageous breach of honour. We cannot legislate for honour, but at least let us put some legislation on the statute book which provides some way of getting to grips with this serious and massive problem.

The problem is no longer what to do about "Spycatcher". That book has long been in the public domain and everyone has copies of it. If the House had a proper scrutiny of the security and intelligence services, we would be examining why the security and intelligence services, who are paid effectively and directly by us, did not tell their responsible Ministers about what was happening. Are they still holding office, or have they been sacked, as they should have been? It is an outrage that nobody seems to have discovered the evidence that Sir Robert Armstrong gave in the courts a few months ago. That is far more serious than anything that came from New South Wales. It reveals that the security and intelligence services are not even telling the Prime Minister about what is happening. I do not believe that that can be tolerated any longer.

The House has been totally excluded from any form of scrutiny of the intelligence and security services. In the debate that was instituted on these Benches the Home Secretary seemed to be more open-minded about the question of scrutiny. He wanted time to take it away and look at it. It is high time that he came back to the House with detailed proposals.

Mr. Dalyell rose——

Dr. Owen: If the hon. Gentleman will forgive me I will not give way.

It is high time we grappled with the absurdity of the Official Secrets Act. It is pretty pointless making party political points on both sides of the House. We have all failed to carry out our responsibilities in Government. It is now time for the House of Commons to take this issue on, and today is the day. Today is the day, above all, because we are debating a private Member's Bill and all hon. Members can say goodbye to the Whips. It is a day when the Patronage Secretary can get stuffed, and that is what he should have done.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg (Hampstead and Highgate): As the first non-Privy Councillor permitted to take part in the debate, may I start by saying that I found the speech of the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) very interesting. He said that it was time the Home Secretary took on board possible scrutiny of the security services. He will remember the rather pleasant four years that he and I spent on the old Defence and External Affairs Sub-Committee of the Estimates Committee. It met in private and, in a limited sense, performed the duties the right hon. Gentleman has just mentioned. The problem of the present Select Committee on Defence is that it meets in public and cannot, therefore, do the same sort of work as the Committee on which we served. Perhaps there is a lesson to be learned from the fact that the more that comes into the public domain in that way, the less one actually knows.

The right hon. Gentleman said that the Bill should be allowed to proceed and that it should go into Committee. However, I think that his timing might have been a trifle awry. He said that, by the time the Government White Paper was published, the Bill would be in Leeds, South. That would provide the opportunity for everyone to give the evidence needed. It would give Parliament a chance to consider what the rights of Parliament were against the rights of the Executive. I put that thought into my right hon. Friend's mind to see whether he would like to consider it. That would still give us the opportunity to have the Act of Parliament in the next Session.

Mr. Marlow May I put the same point to my hon. Friend? What would be the disadvantage to the Government if the House, through a Standing Committee, could discuss and debate the issues in the Bill before the Government come forward with their own proposals?

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: I would very much resent being a member of a Committee, sitting week after week and blocking the private Members' list, unless the Leader of the House opens up a second Committee, and, after three months or so, finding that all my work has been negated because there is a totally new Bill. I would rather proceed in the way suggested, because it is a more open way of proceeding.

The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) made a rather inflammatory statement last weekend. He said that he hoped that Conservative Members would have sufficient guts to come and vote for the Bill. I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman has a greater knowledge of guts than I have. Having listened to his speech, I know why it is apparently rumoured that he will no longer be a contributor to Punch.

Mr. Frank Cook: I do not know how the hon. Gentleman manages to find that comment inflammatory, but I hope that it has illuminated something for him. He seemed to be suggesting that the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) had no right to introduce such a Bill. Is he really suggesting that there is any subject, or group of subjects, that we, as elected representatives of parliamentary constituencies, must consider to be outside our care or outside our specific, individual influence? If that is so, it is clearly running counter to any idea that I have ever had about representative parliamentary democracy.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: I am glad that I gave way to the hon. Gentleman because, clearly, there is a misunderstanding. I was trying to draw the distinction between a Bill and a discussion. My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills said, quite rightly, three times that we should discuss this matter. Clearly, I did not get my point over to the hon. Gentleman. I am entitled to my view, and my hon. Friend is entitled to his view. We may both be right, but, in my view, this is not an occasion for a private Member's Bill which requires such detailed legislation. The subject is different. One may have debates willy-nilly, and as often as one wants.

I wonder why there is such sudden interest in the subject. We knew that there was a long gap. The former Home Secretary, the right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South made the point that he was not able to proceed because the Liberals wanted too high a price to leave the Government in power to produce legislation. That is understandable and acceptable. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made the point that this Government tried, but got their fingers burnt. A Bill is now two thirds of the way forward. I hope that my right hon. Friend will accept that there is a little uneasiness about the word "early". He may be following the convention that one must not anticipate the contents of the Gracious Speech. If that is what he says, we can accept the word "early".

What is the Official Secrets Act? The trouble is that there is a blurring in the public mind and the media between sections 1 and 2. On taking office, the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook and I signed a document under the Official Secrets Act, which is binding lifelong. He and I have no right at our discretion to say that, in the national interest, we should reveal something that has come into our possession. If one does not accept that concept, one should not accept office. There is a duty in accepting office.

During my period in office, particularly at the Department of Health and Social Security, more and more documents appeared in the public domain. Such documents were restricted or confidential. Copies appeared. They were not leaked, they were clearly stolen and, perhaps, sold to the press. There is a real danger. When they are considering ideas for policy, Ministers in effect play ping-pong. They bounce ideas to and fro to try to find out the facts and to determine reactions. If every concept were to appear in the public domain, Ministers would become much more wary about even putting ideas forward. Ministers may meet and discuss without the benefit of the knowledge and advice of the Civil Service. Such knowledge and advice are of enormous value. The overwhelming bulk of the Civil Service produces impartial advice on which Ministers can draw and test their opinions. That process is at risk if matters get into the public domain, unless something can be released because there is no further value in its being kept secret.

I have one piece of advice for my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House. I only wish that there might be a clause in a piece of legislation that would retrospectively cancel the pensions of those who break their oaths, whether they reside in the United Kingdom or in Australia.

Where is the massive demand coming from? Let it be clear that it is not coming from our constituents. On average, I receive 60 letters a day. Hampstead and Highgate is a rather literate area. I have received five letters on this subject, two of which have come from journalists.

I wonder whether we are not being pushed into believing that there is a demand for a major change that might go beyond the removal of the section that has worried us for a long time.

In a debate about the press in another place this week, Lord Longford said:

> The popularity and credibility of the British press has never been at a lower ebb . . . Many of its employees behave routinely in a fashion more appropriate to wild beasts than professional writers . . . A significant portion of the tabloid press is wholeheartedly devoted to peddling fantasies, often malevolent ones."—[Official Report, House of Lords; Vol. 491, c. 1314.]

We must be cautious before we give in to any sort of pressure.

If we are to change something that has existed for over 60 years, slightly amended—at least one Government found it difficult to do so, and a second were rebuffed—it would be sensible to wait a further three months for the White Paper. I shall certainly vote against the Second Reading of the Bill.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): I shall support the Bill to prolong the debate—not that I think that the Bill goes anything like far enough.

We have had an interesting debate and the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) made a powerful case for the cancellation of Hansard, because if people were to read what was said here hon. Members might be nervous of speaking. Then when the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) offered to go on the Committee I thought that that would be another little group that he could split into five parts.

We have had a marvellous debate, but the House should be candid with the public, who will be reading Hansard, probably with some interest.

Why are we having the debate? It is because certain public servants, for one reason or another and in many cases honourably, have spoke the truth on matters about which the Government did not want the truth to be known. Sarah Tisdall was betrayed by The Guardian, which is supposed to be a liberal newspaper, and served a sixth-month sentence. In my opinion, that woman was moved by conscience. Clive Ponting came out with information that was embarrassing to the then Secretary of State for Defence. Cathy Massiter said that people who were active in the peace movement were having their telephones tapped. We have also had the case of Peter Wright, and I shall return to him later. There was the 30-year rule on Windscale and the fire of 1957. The only leak that the Government are afraid of at Windscale is of information about what happens there. They do not mind radioactive leaks, but if information gets out it could be damaging to their nuclear policy.

That latter point matters very much because as Secretary of State I received claims for compensation from people who died of leukaemia as a result of working at Windscale. As Secretary of State, I did not know that the Prime Minister of the day had suppressed information that would have been relevant to people who had a claim.

Mr. Ray Whitney (Wycombe): The right hon. Gentleman referred to the case of Mr. Ponting and the embarrassment that it might have caused the Government. When I was head of the Overseas Information Department and the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) was Foreign Secretary, information came across my desk many times that would have been deeply embarrassing to the Government if I had published it or used the Ponting method. For example, the conduct of the then economic policy of this country. Would the right hon. Gentleman have approved of my leaking that information?

Mr. Benn: I am talking about people who were motivated by conscience to reveal what they thought should be in the public domain. I am not arguing about other examples—that information would have come up if something had happened.

An interesting factor in the debate is the way in which alliances have run. As the right hon. Member for Devonport said, this is not a party matter. We have seen an alliance of former Home Secretaries—who have been involved to some extent and who do not want the degree of freedom of information that, on the whole, the public want, even if they do not write to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate about it. The public are not fools. They have watched Colonel Oliver North being grilled before the American Senate under what I would call the 30-minute rule, whereby the news comes out as soon as the event has occurred. Here it is concealed. People want to know more about what Government do. Of course they do. Why else was there such a struggle to elect people to Parliament in the first place?

I must say one thing for the Government: I understand why they have a three-line Whip. I understand why they sent Sir Robert Armstrong to Australia and ruined the end of his Civil Service life. I understand why they brought injunctions against the newspapers. The Government do not want what the security services are doing in Britain to come out. There is no point in saying that the Government have been silly and absurd and made people look ridiculous. In a limited way I can confirm, from my knowledge as a Minister in a Government whom Peter Wright tried to destabilise, what he said happened. Who benefited? The Conservative party. That is why the Prime Minister defends MI5. It helped to get rid of the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath). I have evidence of that as well. The right hon. Gentleman must know—this appears to have come out of the Cavendish Christmas card, which I have not read because I am not on his mailing list—that efforts were made to discredit him as leader of the Conservative party. I have evidence of some of the reasons.

Of course the Prime Minister does not want to bring to light the process by which Wilson was removed and the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup discredited. MI5 is still doing it. Does anyone think that it ended when Peter Wright resigned? MI5 is still discrediting people whom it regards as acting contrary to the national interest, as MI5 defines that national interest. Does anyone think that the fabrication of false information and its publication in the foreign press ended when the Labour Government left office? Of course it did not. It still continues. That is what the three-line Whip and the threats in the press are about. Any Conservative Member who wonders how such a nice Government could do such a horrid thing had better think about the reality behind the argument.

Then we come to this marvellous principle about confidentiality—whatever one's position in the public service, until one dies everything learnt while there must remain secret. The whole idea is absurd. The hallelujah chorus does not rely on press releases; it relies on Bernard Ingham, who is paid to issue confidential information daily to benefit the Prime Minister. Whatever damage Clive Ponting did to the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) was nothing compared with the damage done to the right hon. Gentleman by Bernard Ingham on the Prime Minister's instructions. A Prime Minister who talks about keeping everything secret but who, using a civil servant, pumps out secret papers to get rid of a Cabinet colleague is an absolute disgrace.

There has always been a highly selective leaking of confidential information. I must confess that I have rather less sympathy than perhaps I should with all the pompous editorials about the freedom of the press. The warnings about what the security services have been doing in Britain have been given time and time again over the years by my hon. Friends. But when we said it, those editors said it was the paranoid Left talking about those wicked "conspiracies."

But when there is interference with the papers' right to publish what they want on a Sunday they are on their high horses and talking about the need for a free press. They know what we ought to tell the public through Hansard today: government is lubricated by the selective leaking and briefing that go on all the time. Therefore, it is in the interests of the press to support the wider question.

I did not quite understand the allusion made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Rees) to Chapman Pincher; perhaps he will explain it later. My right hon. Friend thought that Chapman Pincher should be prosecuted. Chapman Pincher has been the press officer for the Right wing of MI5 for years.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: He admitted it.

Mr. Benn: I do not know whether he admitted it, but it makes no difference to what is happening. We all know what is going on. The service is being protected on the basis of confidentiality.

I shall now deal with the legitimate questions that the House should discuss when this matter arises. Who wants to know the individual secrets? But the question of what is and should be secret is a policy matter. For example, on defence, everyone accepts that one does not want to let out information about the performance of one's latest aircraft or missile, but the policy of the Ministry of Defence is a matter of public concern. It is the same with commercial information. No one wants to make available to our competitors abroad information that could damage British industry. Nobody thinks that the Budget should be announced by the Financial Times the day before — except Hugh Dalton, who had a little arrangement with the London Evening Standard, which managed to get the information out a little earlier than Hansard. Everyone accepts that if one leaks one's intention to devalue the day before, one has devalued from the moment of the leak. No one thinks that personal information should be available, although the Government have never answered the point that MI5 is wired into the Department of Health and Social Security computer in Newcastle. Personal information is made available to the security services, but the Government wish to conceal that.

It is for Parliament to decide the categories of secrecy. For my part, I do not want to know any of the secrets that the security services know, if those secrets would impinge upon national security. If one hears that there is to be a bomb attack tomorrow, one does not want Parliament to discuss it today because that means that one can do nothing about it. However, the security services are part of the defence of the nation. We know the identity of the chiefs of staff and we should always know who are the heads of the security services. We know the defence budget; we should know the security services budget and we should certainly know and discuss and decide who is a legitimate target for surveillance. In the Prime Minister's view, it is the "enemy within". Anyone who takes a view contrary to hers in industrial matters is now undoubtedly the subject of inquiry by the security services.

In the end, those who work in the security services have to rely on their consciences. It is very important for us to say, and for every generation to repeat, that conscience is above the law because the law is man made. Whether at the time of Nuremburg or long before or today, people are sometimes so deeply moved by what they think is being done secretly that they are prepared to break the law and take the consequences, as Sarah Tisdall did. That is the foundation of the liberties of the people of this country and it has to be said.

The underlying question is, "What is the real issue?" As has emerged from the debate, it is the relationship between Parliament and the Executive. What are the powers that Prime Ministers use—be they this Prime Minister or the other Prime Ministers to whom I shall come in a moment? The powers of the Royal Prerogative, are abused by Prime Ministers to preserve the security services from public scrutiny. Ministers are appointed by the prerogative, as are the heads of the security services. The security services have the power to bug and burgle under the prerogative, just as the Postmaster General had the power to open letters under the prerogative. With that power, the Prime Minister decides on classification, defines security — through her Ministers — prosecutes, or orders injunctions, appoints the judges and then appoints the chairman of the BBC to ensure that there is no public discussion of matters that she does not want to be discussed.

The BBC is supposed to be an independent agent. When its programme on the security services was banned, it should have broadcast 45 minutes of silence, punctuated by a statement that the Government had banned the programme. Through the powers of patronage, the Prime Minister has reduced the BBC to a crawling, creeping servant of Government policy. She has followed that today with a three-line Whip designed to do to Tory Members what she has done to the BBC.

To be fair, I should say that all Prime Ministers have been the same. In case hon. Members cannot wait for it to appear in my diaries, I should tell the House that James Callaghan was passionately opposed to a Freedom of Information Act. He loathed the idea of anyone knowing anything. There was a hint of memories of the armalite coming from the recesses of the mind during the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Leeds, South. No Executive wants Parliament, the public or the press to criticise it effectively. People should also think carefully about the deafening silence from Wilson and Callaghan on the revelations in Peter Wright's book——

Mr. Martin Flannery (Sheffield, Hillsborough): And on Chevaline.

Mr. Benn: There were other matters, too. The most important matter is the relationship between Prime Ministers and the security services. We do not know whether Prime Ministers know too much about the security services, or whether the security services know too much about Prime Ministers, but neither position is satisfactory.

I understand why the Government believe that, but I do not understand why Parliament accepts it. Today, we have the power, if we choose, to carry this Bill into Committee — no more than that. Not even the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), who introduced the Bill with a lucid speech, honestly believes that he will get it through with the entrenched power of the Premier against him. After all, the final reserves of prerogative power of any Prime Minister is the witholding of honours from Tory Members who do not vote according to a three-line Whip. Peerages do not come so easily to those who have been difficult. I warn Conservative Members who might be influenced by the arguments that I understand they may not be invited to the royal garden parties if they are a bit rebellious.

But the House has the power to enforce its will today. By enforcing its will, it will not be endorsing the Act that would emerge from this Bill, but enforcing the right to debate the central questions at greater length. I have been in this place for far too long for my good, although that has been compensated for by the benefit which the House has received from my sacrifice. I did not think that I would live to be a Member of Parliament where clerks are vetted, research assistants are vetted, members of the press are vetted, Members are vetted and Mr. Speaker receives a briefing on behaviour from the Serjeant-at-Arms. I did not think that I would live to serve in a Parliament vetted by Government. We were elected by the people to check and control the Government. Until we get that right, we cannot complain if we continue to have the problems from which we have suffered in recent years.

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): Let me join those who have congratulated my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) on the Bill that he has introduced today, and also on the way in which he has presented it. It displays a workmanship that is thorough, detailed and worthy of admiration. I therefore regret all the more that the Government have introduced an entirely separate question which, certainly in the press and probably in the rest of the media, detracts from the debate that we are having here on what is a central issue in modern politics: the display of information.

By decreeing a three-line Whip today, the Government are challenging the whole basis of private Members' time. This is the first occasion that anyone can recall, or find in history, on which a Whip of this kind has been issued. Having been a Whip for eight years, and Chief Whip for four of them, I remember well that we always set out to respect private Members' time — simply because the pressure of private Members on us was so great. That seems to have changed today. In that regard, I find myself in some sympathy with what the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) has been saying.

If we allow this to pass today, it will be cited in future by the Government as a satisfactory precedent for imposing three-line Whips on private Members' debates and legislation. That is entirely unacceptable, to me at any rate and, I hope, to the great majority of my colleagues on the Back Benches.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary used a phrase that I used just before him on the radio this morning: that it is not for a Government to decide issues. My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) said that the Government could not permit the Bill to be passed today. There is no question of the Government permitting or not permitting a Bill to go through: it is the House that does that. But my hon. Friend's words epitomise the attitude that the Government have only to decree something for it to happen.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary said that it was for the Government to propose and for the House to decide. That is quite correct. What he did not say was that, on a private Members' day, it is for private Members to propose as well as for the House to decide. My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills was entirely right to propose a Bill of this kind, to which he attaches the greatest possible importance.

Like my hon. Friend, I regret that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary was not able to deal with particular issues, and to say which of them he regarded as going in the right direction and which he would like to change. We shall accept my right hon. Friend's view that he is not in a position even to say that. However, let me tell him, my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House and my right hon. Friend the Government Chief Whip that, if a three-line Whip had not been imposed, they would have stood an infinitely greater chance of persuading us to tell my hon. Friend that — in view of the commitment to deal with the matter in June with a Bill in the next Session of Parliament — it might be best, after a full debate, to withdraw the Bill. However, the imposition of the Whip is a challenge to all of us to say, "Of, course we shall not ask you to withdraw the Bill. We shall not try to defeat it; we shall support it."

I believe that today's debate is valuable as well as important. It is said that the issue is very complex, and that we are such simple people that we cannot possibly deal with it; only the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary can do that. However, let me point out that, on the Floor of the House, there are many more people who have had to handle security matters, from the highest level downwards, than there are in the Cabinet or among junior Ministers. Those with any experience of such matters can now be numbered on fewer than the fingers on one hand. It is in the House that we can make a contribution, and, therefore, a debate in Committee would be extremely valuable. The timetable has been described by the right hon. Member for Chesterfield.

If the matter had been looked at from a rather different viewpoint, a more acceptable solution might have been found. It is said that my hon. Friend was told early on that the Government were going to carry out this programme, but I can find no trace of that in the correspondence that has passed. I have not handed that correspondence to the press or to anyone else, although it is not particularly secret or confidential.

There is no trace there of either the Prime Minister or the Home Secretary saying, "We give you this assurance that the Government are so far advanced with their plans that the White Paper will be published in June and there will be a Bill in the next session, so perhaps you might like to take some other subject." Firm undertakings have now been given. I sincerely hope that my right hon. Friends will be able to carry them out. I have had some experience of dealing with this subject in a White Paper and legislation, and I know what the difficulties are.

Another possible arrangement, although it is too late for it now, would have been the procedure which was followed in, I think, 1952 or 1953, when we had to reform the Army Act. Instead of going through the normal procedure, we set up a special Committee. I recall that Sir Patrick Spens was the chairman. All parties took part, and the sole purpose was to make agreed recommendations on what the new Army Act should be. It worked extraordinarily well. The result was that the Government felt able to accept all the recommendations without controversy. The matter came to the House and the Bill passed through quickly. If we had gone through the other processes, the Bill would have gone on for endless nights and we might never have reached an agreed solution. That is another means of dealing with a situation such as this if it is approached with the right attitude at the right time.

The right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) and for Chesterfield dealt at considerable length, based on their own knowledge, with what is essentially the internal control of the security services. I am the first to agree that this is a matter of vital importance, particularly because of some of the information that has emerged in the past two or three years. It is not, however, covered by the Act which is being amended, or by the Bill. It is an entirely separate issue which deserves serious consideration by the House.

We are in an extremely silly position — we do not even admit the existence of the security services. There is no such thing as MI5 or MI6. There is no budget for them, because the House never discusses them. What a contrast that is with the United States. One year ago, I was asked to take part in a television programme in Washington. Sitting on one side of me was the head of the Central Intelligence Agency and on the other side was the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. They were both fully known, they both fully accepted their position, and they answered questions from us and the press. That is at least realistic.

As for control, I am still not absolutely convinced that the House, or representatives of it, are capable of controlling the security services. From my discussions in Washington, it is apparent that neither the leaders of the press nor Congress are satisfied that they control the inner workings of the security services. I should have thought that it had emerged clearly from the Irangate hearings that they do not control the inner workings of the security services.

Mr. Benn: Leaving aside parliamentary control, to which the right hon. Gentleman has referred, when he looks back on his experience, is he satisfied that there was adequate ministerial control of the security services when he was responsible for the Administration?

Mr. Heath: As far as I know, yes, because that was one of the matters on which I took a firm stand. I instituted machinery which dealt with these aspects. I have always believed that there must be severe limitations on the work of the security services internally, to say nothing of their activities overseas. I am perfectly prepared to consider any evidence which may be brought forward suggesting that that was not the case. So far, I have not seen any. From 1970 to early 1974, I believe that control was firm through the institution that I had established.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Is it true that the right hon. Gentleman made a telephone call to a solicitor acting for Mr. Colin Wallace about developments which took place during that period in relation to him?

Mr. Heath: My solicitor? What is his name supposed to be?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Acting for Mr. Colin Wallace.

Mr. Heath: No. I shall look up my telephone account. This is a separate question of the inner control of the security services. Secondly, we come to the question of clause 1 of the existing Act, which must be enforce although, as we realise full well, we are not always effec in achieving our aims by it.

The third part is the question of information and cla 2 of the existing Act. As has already been mentioned the election manifesto of 1970 I pledged the party eliminate unnecessary secrecy concerning the working Government and the operation of the Official Secrets A We put that in hand immediately by establishing Franks committee in the spring of 1971. It reported 1972. We then had discussions preparatory to introduc a Bill in 1974 if we had been re-elected. Those discussi were not especially helpful.

I invited the editors of all the press to No. 10 to disc with them the Franks report and the way in which could amend section 2 to meet the need for an open soci and a free press, while at the same time safeguarding su national interests as were natural. I am afraid that the o reply that I received was that section 2 should be wip out, nothing should be put in its place and everybo should be free to publish everything, except what ca under section 1. That was not acceptable to us. Indeed do not think it would be acceptable to any Governme or to the House of Commons. However, that is as far we got in those discussions, which I regarded as importa

On the second part, to eliminate unnecessary secre concerning the workings of Government, I believe that t is where we have all failed to move into the present decad I asked Sir Donald Maitland, my press officer, to discu with the lobby the abolition of the lobby. I have alwa regarded the lobby as a pernicious system, and still do. T only way in which we shall achieve open discussion is abolishing the lobby system and by the press having acce to officials and Ministers and having to declare, and bei able and free to declare to whom they have spoken a what people have said. Of course, that idea met enormo resistance from the lobby, which obstructed it — rather it flatly said that it would not accept abolition. W had not reached the stage of finally saying, "You a abolished."

I had open conferences on the two main measures f incomes policy, which were by open invitation to t world's press. The lobby reaction was, "We shall n come." However, when its members found that the world press was there, they said, "Yes, we shall come but we sha not ask any questions." However, when they were the and the world's press were asking questions, the resistance slowly ebbed and those journalists jumped u to ask questions.

I am absolutely convinced that the abolition of th lobby is the answer to the question of handlin information. After all, it is only trying to maintain th situation in which, initially, Parliament was never reporte but now it is reported only by the lobby, with its ow selection and its own juicy bits — [AN HON. MEMBER "The right hon. Gentleman is upsetting them."] I am no aware of upsetting the lobby. That is not quite so necessar for me as—[Laughter.] This is a serious point.

My next point relates to our position in Parliament, i connection with Government and Whitehall. The Unite States' constitutional system has many disadvantages which have become more and more apparent, especiall the difficulty of obtaining a suitable President. But it ha one advantage, that Congress is not beholden to th President. It is not beholden to the Administration in an way. Therefore, its debates are free and it searches out its information from every quarter. It has a statutory right to that information, as individuals as as well as a whole.

Irangate has been mentioned. In a similar situation, can one imagine an Irangate inquiry here? Not for one moment—not carried out openly, in front of television, with officials being made to answer and people not being told by the Prime Minister, "No, you can't have him. You'll have Sir somebody or other or Lord somebody or other because he is my choice." That would not happen. There is a difference between the American open system, with all its faults, and our system. That is what I believe we must move on to.

One aspect of the matter is the 30-year rule, which has also been mentioned. I confess that I did not see the relevance of either the question or the answer yesterday afternoon to the Prime Minister as to whether it was true that Hugh Gaitskell's file had been suppressed under the 30-year rule. We are now in 1988, and if we go back 30 years that takes us back to 1958. Hugh Gaitskell did not die until 1961. The Prime Minister said that everybody in the House would understand the reasons. I confess that I am so ignorant and uneducated that I do not understand the reasons, on any point. Perhaps there is a reason, in which case I should like to know it.

Soon after I became Leader of the Opposition, the then Prime Minister, now Lord Wilson, said to me that his view was that the 50-year rule was far too long and asked whether I agreed. I said that, personally, I did, but I had to consult my predecessors, Sir Anthony Eden and Mr. Harold Macmillan, about their views before I gave him a substantive answer. I discussed the matter with both of them and they agreed with me that it was better to come down to 30 years. The Prime Minister decided that there would be a 30-year rule, with exemptions, not a 50-year rule. I now believe that it should be changed this time. Perhaps with advancing service in the House, I am beginning to realise that there is a period of history in which I moved, about which I shall never know the truth. I find that disconcerting and, to say the least, worrying. I therefore believe that, in so far as we move into much more open information, the 30-year rule should come down.

What has emerged about our own nuclear or atomic problems must make one or two people think again about the harsh words that they uttered over Chernobyl. It is not only such societies that do not give immediate answers to questions. It has taken the House 30 years to get an answer to questions. Therefore, in future we might be a little more careful about our own attitudes towards the problems of those outside these shores.

I shall support the Bill because I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills has produced a workmanlike job and we can benefit by having further discussions in Committee. I want to establish firmly that the Government cannot issue a three-line Whip on a private Members' day.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary touched on this matter at the end of his speech. Legislation can do only a certain amount. It cannot deal with the whole problem. The problem is that of people. To talk about silence for life is not realistic for people. They say that, by the time they have retired, those things are just history. Other people have written about them—Ministers and Prime Ministers have all written about them. Journalists to whom others have talked have all written about them. Those people ask why they are in that exceptio position. It is a matter of people's feelings and their vie about their lives.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid-Kent): My right hon. Frie has good reason to know that I have just started readi the Colville diaries. The first thing that I read was that was not entitled to keep a diary. Is that not a go illustration of the point that my right hon. Friend is tryi to make?

Mr. Heath: My hon. Friend has touched on a rat delicate question for those of us who are acquainted w the matter. It was always understood that Sir John ga an undertaking to the other private secretaries that diar would not be published. Indeed, a large number of su very delicate situations still exist.

We are dealing with people, and it is the choice people that matters. In the inner control of the secur services, the first point to remember is the selection people and their admission to them. They contain so admirable people. Unfortunately, I have had to disappoi some of them. They came to me and spoke about some their great achievements. I said, "Admirable; you ha done very well and produced great advantage for t nation." "We can popularise and publish them, can't we they asked. "No," I said, "I am sorry, but you cannot. N one is to hear a word about them. They are yo achievements and you must be satisfied with that and ke them within the security service."

However, I also met people in the security services wh talked the most ridiculous nonsense and whose whc philosophy was ridiculous nonsense. If some of them we on a tube and saw someone reading the Daily Mirror, th would say, "Get after him, that is dangerous. We must fi out where he bought it."

The second point about people is that we must treat o public servants well. Many harsh words have been sa about Mr. Wright. I must confess that I have not read h book. A friend of mine in America sent me a copy b special messenger as soon as it was published, but I w told that I should not read it. I was also told that if n housekeeper wanted to stand by the fire and read it to m that would be all right. I have not run any risks from th security services or anyone else by reading that book.

There was a stage when Mr. Wright felt that, havi given years of hard service faithfully, he was not w treated. My judgment is general—that one must loc after one's public servants properly. With the country in its present state, the morale of the public service is low almost every sphere, and it must be raised. That can b done only by looking after our public servants proper and by showing them that we respect their work. Some c them may occasionally go wrong, but the number minute compared with other countries.

I support new legislation in this area, and the Bill is we on the way to providing that. I do not doubt that oth matters must be considered—for example, whether th Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is qualified t take decisions. All such issues can be argued, and that where the complexity lies; it does not lie in the principl of greater information and security for the nation that w are trying to achieve. Such principles are clear and th complexities lie in the machinery for achieving them. Thi is where this House can contribute a great deal. Above al we must always remember that the final answer will re with people, and will turn on our relationships with them

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) referred to the principals of the CIA and the FBI sitting shoulder to shoulder with him on television. Together with many dozens of other people, I was shown around the White House by a gentleman who described himself as "Wilbur C. Eisenstein of the US secret service uniform branch". That is another example of the different attitude of regimes in other countries.

As a humble Back Bencher, I want to commend the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) for his determination and courage in bringing this Bill before the House. I commend him also for the manner of his presentation today. He was very erudite and good-humoured. I contrast that with the discomfort displayed by the Home Secretary with whom I have great sympathy. In allowing himself to strike the posture that he has shown today, he has created a "knight's fork" for himself later this year. Clearly, he will have difficulty delivering if the Government's attitudes remain the same as they have been over the past two or three years. The Home Secretary is offering assurances that all will be well come June, yet those assurances are offered by a Government who have already behaved badly in the Tisdall case and are now behaving in a quite cretinous fashion over the issues of Cavendish, Wright and Duncan Campbell.

My right hon. Friends the Members for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) and for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) referred to Windscale and the 30-year rule. It is true that we now know that certain matters were kept out of the public eye 30 years ago. Those matters have now been released under the rule. However, we also know that three areas of that issue are still kept secret by the Government today. At least one of those could have a direct bearing on any medical assessment of the biological effects on the Windscale community and those immediately adjacent to it.

The hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) asked where the pressure was coming from for the measures that we are considering today. He said that the pressure was not coming from the constituents. How on earth can we expect constituents to apply pressure on matters about which they are kept ignorant? People cannot apply pressure about something until they know that a situation exists. Once again we must commend the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills for bringing the proposal forward today.

I do not intend to deal in detail with the proposals as I want to be brief. Hon. Members who have spoken, and others who wish to speak, are wiser, more experienced and certainly more eloquent than I can ever be. I take heed of the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour) who counselled the Government to take a careful look at the 17th century. We are not talking about anything new today. As we have already heard, all Governments have readily been anxious to keep secrets. To highlight that, I want to refer briefly to William Fordyce's "The History and Antiques of the County Palatine of Durham Volume 2" published in 1857. It has been in the Library for some time. It states:

"The Speaker has issued a warrant against the printers of the Gazetteer and the Middlesex Journal, two of the papers of the day, on a charge of misrepresentation of the proceedings of the House."— the House of Commons.

"As the printers refused to appear at the bar, a proclamation was issued for their apprehension, and were brought before Alderman Wilkes and Oliver, by they were not only discharged, but bound over to pr the person who made the capture."

So the two aldermen were charged to prosecu decision of Parliament, but refused to do that and the victims to prosecute the person pursuing them.

"Mr. Miller, printer of the London Evening Pos likewise been taken into custody by a messenger fr house on a similar charge . . . The sarjeant-a consequently attended at the Mansion House, to dema bodies of both printers and publisher; but as he h applied to a magistrate to back the warrant, or to any officer of the city to assist him, his lordship informe 'that as long as he held the office of lord mayor, he w guardian of his fellow citizens' liberties, and that no po earth should seize a citizen of London without authorit him or some other magistrates of the franchise accordingly declared Miller at liberty, made out a war commit the messenger for an assault and false imprison

That is an example of Parliament at that time thought to be exceeding its responsibilities. Perhaps see some similarities today. It goes on to say:

"The House of Commons was indignant at this de of its authority and ordered the Lord Mayor an Alderman Oliver to attend in their places (together Alderman Wilkes)".

It would appear that when they appeared before th there must have been a three-line Whip in operation archives tell us that on a Division of 282 to 39 the Mayor was committed to the custody of the lieuten the Tower and was imprisoned, together with the others.

The result of that imposition of a three-line Whip, later on, was that "The excitement out of doors was very great."

The committal and imprisonment of the Lord May London was felt to be an event of peculiar extraordinary importance—so much so that when were committed to the Tower, to the people of Lo picketed this place. That must have been one o original lobbies. When the Lord Mayor was taken here by the Deputy Serjeant at Arms for incarcerati the Tower, the crowd removed the horses from the c and drew the coach themselves, by manpower, to the of the City and ordered its contents to disembark. Lord Mayor and aldermen——

Mr. Rupert Allason (Torbay): I am falling asleep.

Mr. Cook: I am giving the House a history lesso you care to sleep——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. very wide awake.

Mr. Cook: I was not referring to you, Mr. De Speaker.

When the crowd had ordered the travellers in the c to disembark on the way to the Tower, the Lord M had to protect the Deputy Serjeant at Arms by assurin crowd that a friend was simply taking him home for a of Horlicks before he went to bed. The Lord Mayor s the evening not in the Tower, to where he had dispatched, but in the Mansion House and had to along to the Tower quietly the next day and turn hi over. It said:

"He was . . . honoured with the freedom of the ci Worcester, and of the town of Bedford"—

I hope that hon. Members are taking note of these pl —

"and addresses were forwarded from the counties of Carmarthen, Pembroke, and Cardigan, the towns of Newcastle, Stratford and Honiton, the common councils of every ward in London and many patriotic clubs."

The decision to release the Lord Mayor was popular and the decision to incarcerate the Lord Mayor for defending the freedom of publication of the proceedings of the House was very unpopular.

He remained in prison until the prorogation of Parliament. When the Lord Mayor left the Tower there was a 21-gun salute from the members of the Honourable Artillery Company and 53 carriages followed him in his train to celebrate, and there were loud huzzas. It continued:

"The feeling of the nation was unequivocally shown on the occasion; and the fact that, since that period, the proceedings and debates in Parliament have been regularly printed and published, which before they were not, is sufficient to secure . . . the gratitude of prosperity as well as the plaudits of his contemporaries."

I do not apologise for reporting that with some degree of pride. The person responsible for all that was Brass Crosby, Lord Mayor of London, Alderman and Member of Parliament for Honiton but born and bred of parents in Stockton-on-Tees of a mother born and bred in Blackhall, county Durham.

In the spirit of that time and of some efforts since, and in the spirit that is true of the north-east and other areas of the country, that freedom of access to information and freedom of comment that is supposed to be an inalienable right within this country, we should resist the ill-timed and misplaced efforts of the Government to seek to defend in a poor and frail fashion the mistakes they have made in the past two years. I, together with many of my hon. Friends, will gladly be supporting the private proposals of the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills by going through the Lobby with him.

1.10 pm

Mr. Michael Heseltine (Henley): The first point that seems evident from the comments of right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the Chamber is the near-universal praise for my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) for his introduction of the Bill, the way in which he did that and the thoroughness with which he addressed the entire exercise. Nobody has sought to question that, and I should like to add my words of admiration for all that is involved therein.

I take a slightly different view from some hon. Members who have spoken about the scale of the achievement of my hon. Friend. He can argue that he faces a three-line Whip from the Government and that in the way of things the chances have to be that the Government will secure their will. However, I do not see that as a defeat for my hon. Friend, but a remarkable personal victory. I take the view that, however the coincidences may have worked out, the initiative of my hon. Friend and the fact that he pursued his determination to the point at which he introduced his Bill cannot be dissociated from the assurances that the Home Secretary has given that the Government intend to introduce their own legislation.

During the course of the morning, we have ranged over fundamental constitutional issues as to whether this is a matter that should have been raised by a Back Bencher at all. I want to make my view absolutely clear. I have no doubt that my hon. Friend is fully entitled, as a Member of this House, to raise this matter. He has done excellent job and it would be a constitutionally impossi approach to suggest that he did not have the right to r such an issue.

The second issue that flows from this is whether hon. Friend was right to want the reform in the first pl That is no longer controversial. The Government h conceded that that is so. They began to consider refo in 1979, and in earlier reincarnations they set up inqui to precipitate such action. Therefore, my hon. Frien right to want reform, as he is right to take the initiativ secure that reform. I believe that he has achieved substantial personal victory, and I want to congratul him on it.

It has emerged over the past few months that my h Friend was not alone. Indeed, the Government h already begun the process of reform before my hon. Fri began his endeavours. While most of us were preoccup with preparation for the general election campaign 1979, the Government were preoccupied with preparin new Official Secrets Act. If that was an official secret was one of the most effectively kept official secrets tha remember.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken (Thanet, South) rose——

Mr. Heseltine: This official secret emerged from shroud in one of those constitutional coincidences th charm the sceptic some months later, and after my he Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills had ma known his intention to proceed in this way.

What cannot be ignored is that, however we interp the history, my hon. Friend has secured a very f commitment from the Government. To him the credit; him the victory. I very much hope that, whatever m happen in the Lobbies this afternoon, he will remember t scale of what he has achieved.

My hon. Friend knows my views. In all t circumstances and for all the reasons that I shall try explain, I hope that he will content himself with th achievement for the time being. In practical terms, it apparent that the Government cannot stand back fro this legislation. Those who have listened to the debate w have realised that the journey of this legislation, wheth this Bill or the Government's Bill, will be no easier th time than it was in 1979.

It is obvious what reforms the right hon. Member f Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) wants. He wants a regime where civil servants see it as a reasonable part of their approa to leak, sometimes publicly and sometimes covertly. H sees as a virtue the behaviour of Sarah Tisdall. He se Clive Ponting as an example of a legitimate way in whi civil servants should behave.

I was close to the events which surrounded those tw prosecutions. Everyone knows that Ministers are n themselves responsible for initiating those prosecution That is done by the Law Officers. If there is one memo which I shall always hold of those times, it is that th people who felt most strongly that they had been betraye were not the Ministers, but the civil servants.

If the views of the right hon. Member for Chesterfie ever gain sway, the standards of the British Civil Servic who I happen to think are world leaders, will be destroye because they will become politicised. Of course, we kno that many people in the Labour party have already begu the process in local government of recruiting people fo their political views.

Mr. Buchan rose——

Mr. Heseltine: That is the logical step, if it is believed that what is today perceived as secret may be merely a stepping stone to public disclosure of ministerial dialogue. I have the highest regard for the British Civil Service and treasure the fact that a Minister could say more or less whatever he liked to civil servants. He could even make stupid mistakes in front of them and they would remain confident to him and would not abuse that trust.

Mr. Dalyell rose——

Mr. Heseltine: The day that one feels that, every time one is indiscreet or one makes an error of judgment or is plain wrong, it will be in the public domain, that day we shall recruit people who are politically loyal to us and we shall not have the wider discussion on which the proper government of the country depends.

The idea that these issues will be easy to deal with or that, even with the eloquence of my hon. Friend, he would find it easy to steer private Member's legislation through the House on so complex a matter, does not stand up. It is the right of the House to insist, in the extreme, that it should be done. The most effective way, although not the only way, of doing so, is for the Government to proceed with the legislation because their rules, secrets, relationship to their civil servants and decisions about censorship are at the heart of the debate.

The better way is for my right hon. Friends to conclude their deliberations, produce a White Paper, and then, in the light of the dialogue that will ensue, introduce a Bill for proper parliamentary consideration. It will have to proceed within the traditions of Government legislation, which means that the Government will use the whipping procedure to ensure progress. There will be no progress with the legislation unless there is access to the whipping mechanism. There are too many people whose views are irreconcilable. There are those who want to toughen the legislation to make more things open and available, and there are those who want to change the legislation to preserve greater secrecy. Such an irreconcilable position will be resolved only by the Government using their majority.

Mr. Dalyell: That is all very well, on the assumption that Ministers are telling the truth. Moving on from the Ponting matter, what would the right hon. Gentleman say about the selectively leaked Law Officers' letter on Westland, of which he was the victim? Is not the central issue that Sir Brian Hayes, Sir Robert Armstrong—this is according to Sir Kenneth Clucas, not just to me—were put in an impossible position and therefore were forced to behave unethically?

Mr. Heseltine: The answer to the hon. Gentleman's question is simple. I shall say not a word more and withdraw not a word from what I have already said.

The issue is whether the Home Secretary's offer should now be accepted. I do not think that I flatter my right hon. Friend when I say that if he, of all members of the Government, tells the House that there will be a White Paper that will lead to a Bill at an early date, that will be the case. I have not the slightest doubt that that is his intention. My hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills may say that it will not be the Bill that he has introduced. That will be the case. The Bill will be based upon the Government's assessment of how we should introduce reform. It will not change the ou the Government seek to amend my legislation, as opposed to introducing thei legislation, the end result will be that the G allow the passage only of legislation with wh

Although there is a time loss for my h what probably amounts to 12 months, that that he is being asked to incur. There is a course. It has been referred to by many right Members. It is the loss that is involved in the line Whip to deny a private Member access House. That is a disgraceful decision. It sho been taken.

Mr. Tom Clarke (Monklands, West) recognises that the right hon. Gentlem considerable experience in government. I whether he has ever introduced a private I In my limited experience, Government assu matters have been worthless. In that case, if Gentleman considers that there is little diffe the positions taken by the hon. Member Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) and the Gover he not urge the Government to withdraw Whip and table amendments as the Bill r through both Houses?

Mr. Heseltine: I accept the Hom assurances that he intends to deal with th deliberations are under way, and that the G not yet ready to conduct a proper debate. I best interests of my hon. Friend the Member Brownhills for there to be a procedure Government are not able to answer the que members of the Committee will rightly p clause, about the Government's views. The use of a three-line Whip was a misjudgment by the Government. It can de excite the arguments of those who regard the as authoritarian or stretch the loyalty of number of supporters of the Government, in be an easy parliamentary session. The war House has given the Government on the issu line Whip is clear, and I hope that it will be

The next step is a dilemma for all th supporters of the Government, and there i issue for Conservative Members. The G rightly and, in almost every case, unavoi pursued, through courts in Britain and over of issues arising out of the existing Official Looking at the options that faced Law Ministers, I do not see any easy alternative that the Government took. If they had n decisions to prosecute, which were often unattractive decisions, in virtually every case options would have flowed from their doing Government were fully entitled, in the exe legal judgment, to pursue the issues of the O Act through the courts.

The Government are still deeply imme process. The issue for Conservative Member the mistake of a three-line Whip, is whether w against the Government — in theory, ov Government—in a context of which the c could be that we are anxious, dismayed or, opposed to the steps that the Government have taken in upholding the existing Official Secrets Act. That message will flow directly if Back Benchers behind the Government overwhelm the Government's three-line Whip on this issue. That is the interpretation that would be placed on it.

With the most profound admiration of my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills, and with the clear view that the victory of today's deliberations is his and that of his colleagues—he is entitled to the credit—I hope that he will not proceed with the Bill. If he does, with the greatest reluctance, I shall support the Government in the Lobby this afternoon.

Mr. Peter Archer (Warley, West): The right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) has expressed, with great eloquence, a point of view which he is entitled to hold. He has advanced a number of propositions that I would have been interested to hear debated in Standing Committee. But the right hon. Gentleman said that he does not want that debate to take place; he wants the matter to proceed in the Government's good time and on the Government's agenda. He does not want to see his hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) as an honest broker, he wants the Government to have control. I suspect that that is one of the matters of principle which are in dispute today.

Yet the right hon. Gentleman's speech confirmed what was already apparent from the debate—the Bill gives expression to a real concern which transcends not only party divisions in the House, but the distinction between those who have held high office and those who glory in being professional Back Benchers.

I should add my congratulations for the fair and balanced way in which the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills introduced the Bill. He introduced a new expression into the political dictionary, which will be with us for many years. I hope that he will also introduce a new addition to the statute book.

The debate has been a fair and balanced one. It is not always true that, outside the House, the debate between those who see the free flow of information as a vital part of democracy and those who prefer to see the truth dispensed economically has always been conducted in quite such moderate terms.

The Government must have perceived this as a disastrous and damaging debate. There have been times when I have felt sorry for the Government. Today, my heart did not bleed for them because their difficulties are entirely of their own making. They must have known that no one believes that any Government are motivated purely by a concern for security. They are not necessarily as coldly rational as my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) said. Any Government know that the more the public learn about their activities, the more likely the Government are to be criticised. Anyway, if the public learn the facts, they might misunderstand them. The Government say, "It would all create alarm and despondency, so is it not better to keep it discreet?".

It is not always a matter of the Government deliberately setting out to conceal what is discreditable. Among any elite, not least among Ministers and governmental officials, part of the tradition and culture that holds them together, part of what they have in common, is knowing what other people do not know. Letting in the uninitiated is breaking the code in more senses than one. I r as will my right hon. Friend the Member for M Leeds, South (Mr. Rees), that one of the witnes Franks committee quoted the words of a p secretary in 1873 who said:

"The unauthorised use of official information is fault a civil servant can commit. It is on the same cowardice by a soldier."

That is the very nature of Government. Th Secretary's valiant attempt to persuade the lambs the convenience of the lion was impressive. But did not believe that we could have confide Government with a record such as the one c today. Even the right hon. Gentleman must recog in deciding how far we trust the Government entitled to take account of their relationship with their attitudes towards the BBC's property and of injunctions to ensure that the people of this and only the people of this country, are kept from what is available to every foreign secret service a is on the bookstalls everywhere else in the world

Part of the picture is the way in which the Gov have dealt with this debate. One can almost in Government committee saying, "How will we d this? Let us have a three-line Whip. It will be un people will be horrified and it will break all the pre but we will ride it. Tell them that we will do so about it, only be careful not to tell them what we That is the picture against which the House is decide whether to await the Government's con and time before proceeding.

Of course, there is another side to the pictu picture is wholly one-sided. Not all of those who ca for freedom of information are motivated solely by for truth. A good scandal sells more newspapers t dissertation on political principle. Of course the right to know is sometimes invoked in aid of a bombard the public with trivialities. As we all kno is no better incentive to report and to seek info than the knowledge that someone finds it embar William Randolph Hearst used to tell his reporte

"News is what someone, somewhere, doesn reported: all the rest is advertisement."

Two hundred years ago, Sheridan put words to th into the mouth of Mr. Puff, "If you really want book, you must get home two things about it: th that everybody is reading it; the second is that ought to read it." The Government have learned t way in the case of "Spycatcher". As we have all are all on the list, we hope, for the next injunctio

The Government do not learn from history. I enough to remember when people who had never h D. H. Lawrence were queuing up at bookstalls "Lady Chatterley's Lover". I suspect that many never read it.

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): My rig and learned Friend bought one.

Mr. Archer: I was given one.

Mr. Buchan: Such is the effect of these actions friend of mine discovered that his son had hidden top shelf of the wardrobe an expurgated version of Chatterley's Lover."

Mr. Archer: Presumably, he had arrived by it which is even stranger.

[Mr. Archer]

The Bill must compromise, as any Bill must, between the secretive and the plain nosey. It also has to maintain a balance between the views of those who insist on dealing tidily with a group of related subjects in a package and those who would be happy for all the talk about the whole matter to run into the sand.

There has been much common ground in this debate. It is common ground, for example, that some restrictions on free speech are inevitable, as the right of one individual to speak freely may conflict with the rights of other individuals. We need laws governing defamation, obscenity, contempt of court, breach of copyright and invasion of privacy and we need to safeguard the prevention and detection of crime. The present limits on any of those matters would be a suitable subject for debate. I can name about a dozen reports of commissions and committees that must be propping up rickety tables in Government Departments at this moment and which may never see the light of day again. It is easy to show that almost any of those topics has implications for all the others, including the subject that we are debating today.

I remember when some of us thought that the best way to treat the reform of what was then called media law was to try to agree a package after a series of trade-offs. We now know better. We know that it would be an achievement to secure the most limited of reforms and that to wait for a comprehensive review would be to petrify matters as they stand for our lifetime.

In any event, I am not sure that we ought to think of this as media law. The right that we are discussing is not primarily the right of the media. It is not even primarily the right of anyone else to disclose information. It is the right of the public to be informed. The right of the press to sell newspapers seems to me less important than the right of the electors to have before them the material on which they can make informed judgments. Indeed, what we seek to do may actually diminish the number of scandals on which the media can thrive. The knowledge that the public may discover what is happening as a matter of course may ensure that discreditable things do not happen. It was Mr. Justice Brandeis of the United States Supreme Court who said that sunshine was the best disinfectant.

This is understandably and properly a modest Bill concentrating on a single topic—the freedom of official information—and its objectives are modest even within that topic. The Bill might have set about seeking to repeal the 61 other statutory provisions identified by the Franks committee which help to conceal official information. I was grateful to Penguin Books for directing me to an article in New Scientist by Jon Tinker in 1972. Jon Tinker analysed the veil of secrecy over the control of pollution. It transpired that the owners of a factory emptying cyanide into a river would face a maximum fine of £100 but that if the river inspector mentioned the results of his analysis —not to members of the press but to any member of the public—he would face up to three months' imprisonment. That is all of a pattern with the information—if we are to believe all that we hear—that an inquiry is proceeding into a leak of the report on foam-filled furniture. That report was not even classified at the time because everyone thought that it was a sensible plain warning about the danger to life. The United States has its Freedom of Information Act, its Privacy Act, its "Government in the Sunshine Act" and blowers (Civil Service Reform) Act". Freedom of the Press Act. Most countries some attempt to solve the problem. The U has section 26 of the Clean Air Act and s Offices, Shops and Railway Premises Act, a criminal offence to disclose the fact t offence has been committed. We are stil Ibsen's play "An Enemy of the People" enemy was the man who was trying to wa the danger.

The Bill maintains a balance between th who want no reform and those who wil anything short of complete reform.

The hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownh properly, that the best must not be allowed enemy of the good. We should not rej because it is not a feast. Section 2 was th place to begin because it is indefensible. unjust; it is so unjust that juries will not prosecuted under it. Juries have a strong i is fair and sensible — a proposition Opposition Members will put to the Go different context, on Monday.

The draftsmanship of the section is sentence, it contains so many alternatives a that the Franks committee calculated that than 2,000 separate offences. I have tried t of the offences, leaving out the words relevant to that offence, and I wonder w would have included the section if these w been starkly in the original draft:

If any person having in his possession information . . . which he has obtained owin as a person who holds office . . . under His that would mean a lift attendant in a block offices who has discovered the colour of th the canteen—

"communicates the . . . information to an than a person to whom he is authorised to . . . that person shall be guilty of a misdeme

It is clear that we are not discussing secur irrelevant to the section.

There are two genuine problems about the Government invoke security as a reas how is the public to know that that is Governments have earned the unquestioni public, and if the Government say, "Not o tell you the information, but we cannot eve we cannot tell you, because that involves sec have a problem. We could have an infini Government cannot tell us why they cann they cannot tell us, and so on ad infinitum are to have confidence that secrecy is direct security problem, we need someone who ca adjudicate on whether the alleged security n

The second problem is that our security the reliability of the security services whic hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup reminded us, do not even exist according book. We do not know whether the allega "Spycatcher" and the other publications guess is that the problem lies less with c security services than with their contr members. subject of so much public disquiet, yet the Prime Minister loftily brushes aside the allegations about which we heard today and the calls, from many responsible quarters, for an investigation. After all, it is none of the public's business and she knows best.

But none of that concerns section 2, because it is not about security. It was not even designed to protect security. The first draft of the Official Secrets Act 1889, on which section 2 was based, was headed the "Breach of Official Trust Bill". It said nothing about security. The Government of the day were compelled to include a public interest defence. During the spy scare of 1911, the House was very much involved in discussing the Parliament Bill and could give only half an hour to the entire Official Secrets Bill. They introduced a section that went much wider than the 1889 Act and which eliminated the public interest defence.

Section 2 does not discriminate about the sort of information which it seeks to protect. It creates offences irrespective of whether the public would benefit from disclosure. It punishes someone for disclosing or possessing information, irrespective of whether the information is already publicly available, and it makes guilt or innocence dependent upon authorisation without specifying who can authorise what and how many people can authorise themselves.

The Bill addresses itself specifically to those problems, and I hope that the House will give it a Second Reading.

1.44 pm

Mr. Jonathan Aitken (Thanet, South): Let me begin, in common with many other hon. Members who have spoken on this important parliamentary occasion, with a genuinely warm tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd). His speech amounted to a proposal for—in the words of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary—an effective, enforceable and reasonable Bill. Admittedly, my right hon. Friend claimed those words for his own, as yet non-existent, Bill, but, in my judgment, they apply admirably to the Bill presented today.

My hon. Friend made a first-class speech. At least one part of it, as the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) suggested, might well pass into the lexicon of political terminology. He referred to the Hallelujah Chorus. It must be said, however, that the Hallelujah Chorus can sometimes be conducted in such a way as to produce music that is a long way from the dulcet tunes of George Frideric Handel. My hon. Friend is to be congratulated on standing firm against some of the pressures imposed by the conductors of this Hallelujah Chorus.

An insight into those pressures was revealed in a long article about my hon. Friend in The Independent on Saturday, 9 January, which contained the following remarkable paragraph:

> "Some of those involved in the current and unsuccessful attempts to persuade him to drop his latest crusade claim that they are beginning to doubt his personal balance and stability."

Those of us who heard my hon. Friend put forward his lucid view of the Bill will feel that perhaps the most appropriate answer is to quote the remark of George II about General Wolfe:

> "Mad, is he? Then I hope he will bite some of my other generals."

Mr. Hoyle: The hon. Gentleman quoted wh in The Independent. Does he know whether it as usual, from the Prime Minister's press offic

Mr. Aitken: With unattributable brie authorship is always invisible. But what it me seriousness — and this is why it was a comment—is that the Torquemadas and the of the administrative information spreaders around saying that my hon. Friend is g Although a joke can be made of that, it was a s disreputable piece of briefing.

The debate has two major themes: the cont Bill, and the issue of principle about the freedoms of Parliament and Back Benchers. I su in times to come, today's debate and the e preceded it will be viewed as something of a wa the history of contemporary relationships Parliament and the Executive.

The lessons of history tell us that Governments from time to time get too big for t They trample too hard on the rights of indivi parliamentarians, and must be halted in their t hon. Member who does the halting—in this my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Bro honours a long parliamentary tradition that st the way back to John Hampden, and I congra hon. Friend on what he has done this afternoo

I hoped that I would be called late, so tha answer the criticisms made of the Bill. I have h which I was ready to fill up with answers to t criticisms made of the various clauses and the po in them. My page is completely blank. The element of today's debate is that there has been n serious criticism of the Bill's contents. My r Friend the Home Secretary spoke so emolliently Dispatch Box that I suspect that, if someone m dead of night and said, "Psst! Are you really in this Bill?" his answer would be yes. He could n single objection to put forward.

The absence of any criticism of the Bill from Member who has spoken in the debate is, per most telling measure of support. I suspect that, i to have a free vote, at least two thirds of the Hou be willing to vote for the Bill. I therefore feel hardly necessary to say anything about its cont I shall make only two brief points.

First, as everyone has agreed, the Bill is ser responsible. It narrows down the categories of inf that need to be protected by the criminal law. incidentally, probably make it easier for the C obtain convictions against disloyal civil or Crown who breach their trust in matters of sensitive info That is something that the prosecutors need.

I am not a paid-up member of the Royal Socie Protection of Attorney-Generals, but I someti that, under the Official Secrets Act, they have impossible job because of the uncertainty. The Bi give prosecutors, or those thinking of breaching much more certainty.

I should like to put down a marker for th Secretary's invisible, non-existent Bill of the fi concerns reviewing a ministerial certificate, Minister's fear that an offence has been commit cannot have absolute offences. We cannot hav committed just because a Minister says so. On things which worried me about the 1979 legislation was the fact that a Minister could just certify that a serious breach of secrecy had occurred. There was no way in which to challenge it.

One of my hon. Friend's most important proposals is the introduction of a review by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. This is not a brilliant innovation, although I commend it. It has its genesis in what Lord Havers committed the Opposition, as we then were, to on 15 June 1978. I hope that Home Office Ministers will look up what was said then. Many good reasons were given, but basically they amounted to a proposition with which few would disagree. It was that a Minister should not be judge and jury in his own court and that there therefore had to be some form of independent review. My hon. Friend suggests the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Lord Havers suggested a Law Lord accompanied by two Privy Councillors. A mechanism for review is vital.

I should like to give a personal example of how necessary it is to have an independent check on Ministers' assertions that a secret has been breached. Seventeen years ago this month, I was sitting not on these comfortable green baize Benches, but rather uncomfortably in the dock of the Old Bailey with the editor of the Sunday Telegraph, being tried for an offence which was alleged to have been committed under section 2. The Crown opened its case in dramatic tones saying that "major military secrets" had been revealed. That statement was made by the prosecutors on, of course, the submission by Ministers.

Two days later, after some cross-examination, of the chief prosecution witnesses, it was revealed that every military fact in the document concerned had already been published and that the British defence attaché, whose document had been leaked, had himself read out the document to a press conference of journalists on an unattributable basis. Halfway through the trial, therefore, the Crown had to go into reverse and say, "Very sorry. There are actually no secrets here." If Ministers' decisions cannot be reviewed, a future defendent might be unable to argue about the assertion that secrets had been revealed.

I must consider the case, if one can call it that, which has been deployed by the Government. They have asked us to respond to their three-line Whip and vote down my hon. Friend's admirable Bill. The message from the Treasury Bench was that, until the Government have made up their mind, Parliament should not get a look in. It is the Alice in Wonderland "sentence first, verdict afterwards" approach. The only sop that we are thrown in the face of that unacceptable doctrine is the Home Secretary saying, "Trust me and trust my future Bill."

There is nothing intrinsically wrong with trusting as fine a Minister as the Home Secretary. It is the kind of request which, in commercial life, one gets all the time. There is a problem, the company or organisation needs some time to sort it out, so we are told, "Trust us, trust the management, we will draw up a plan and issue a prospectus in a few months' time. Just give us a bit of time to get the small print right." It all sounds very reasonable like that but, in commercial life, when shareholders or voters agree to such a request, they do so after hearing at least some bare bones of an outline of what the plan might be. They do not sign blank cheques for plans or prospectuses which are still too secret even to be described.

a national scandal. I wholeheartedly understood to be the call from the right Devonport that there should be some kin into that because it is a worrying a featur come out of the strange shenanigans and recent months.

Mr. Dalyell: I support the hon. Gentleman. Sidgwick and Jackson, in the form of William Armstrong, asks, "Is it not true that 'Their Trade is Treachery' could have been stopped by one telephone call?" Why was that call not made?

"If the Prime Minister says that she did not know, why and how did the chain of communication fail?"

Who was responsible? Was it the rivalry between MI5 and MI6? Why were neither Pincher nor Rothschild called to give evidence? That failure cost the British taxpayer £2 million.

All the major points in Chapman Pincher's "Web of Deception" were confirmed in the High Court in November by Sir Robert Armstrong. That means that he was kept in ignorance of the fact that "Their Trade is Treachery" could have been suppressed by one telephone call; that Pincher received no first-hand information from MI6, but was briefed only by MI5 officers, who kept information from Armstrong and who were not fully briefed themselves; and that he was told nothing about the role of the arbiter.

Mr. Aitken: I hope that the hon. Gentleman is not expecting me to be a spokesman on security matters on behalf of the Government. Therefore, I am unable to deal with his fascinating intervention, but it is well to have it recorded that across the Floor of the House there is concern on that particular issue, which is of considerable importance.

Although the debate is about the Bill, it has raised the deeper issue of Parliament's rights. One of the most attractive features of the Bill was that its careful construction could attract a broad consensus of parliamentary support. An official secrets reform Bill needs a broad consensus of support. It needs to have the support of people such as the right hon. Members for Devonport and for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Rees) —people of all parties—because only then will it stand the test of time and not be regarded as partisan and devisive Government-introduced legislation, which will be immediately challenged by an incoming Administration of a different political colour.

Therefore, I was glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills was able to construct such a consensus. One of the saddest aspects of the Government's approach is that they have destroyed that consensus. They have made the task of future official secrets reforms infinitely more difficult because it will now be seen to be hijacked into the area of party politics, which is a great pity considering that the Bill needs the bipartisan consensus to which I referred.

The widest issue of all is whether parliamentarians, particularly private Members, have the right to introduce such Bills and submit them to the judgment of the House of Commons. Speech after speech, particularly that of my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), has highlighted the sinister and authoritarian development of an attitude emanating from the Treasury Bench, which comes down to the words, "Back Benchers shut up and know your place." That is unacceptable. I was glad that even those who will support the Government in the Lobby, such as my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), were strongly critical of that aspect of the Government's handling.

I recall that when the Conservative Government came to power in 1979 after the winter of discontent, they were rightly proud to portray themselves as the individual and his freedoms and the op mighty subjects. Times seem to have cha are seeing an over-mighty subject, Executive, determined to reject a goo explanation, without an alternative and tuous disregard for the rights of private

My hon. Friend the Member for Aldr has been right to fight his corner and Government's tactics as bearing an uncan to the stories of the dog in the manger a who has no clothes. Let us remember Edmund Burke:

Let those who care about Parliament f Friend into the Lobby and give him a majority that they deserve.

2.2 pm

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and B am proud to follow the hon. Member for (Mr. Aitken) who made a courageous speech. His reputation and track record on well known and much appreciated in the H congratulations with those that have been shoulders of the promoter of the Bill, the ho Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) by all spoken. I had great pleasure working sponsor of the Bill. He has done himself g he has done the House a service by in subject.

The Home Secretary said that he though Gentleman had had his success, but it w accurate to say that the Home Secretary that the hon. Gentleman had had his chips taken by the Government has been disgr with the hon. Member for Thanet, South th of the most surprising turns of events dur has been the absence of any effective an criticism of the detailed proposals in the B marginal qualifications in some other h speeches, the only two that fell into the cat critical were those of the right hon. Memb (Mr. Heseltine) and the hon. Member for H Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg). I hope that th will take that to heart when they are formula Paper that they intend to bring forward in

It is clear that there is a sense of urgen the ranks of all parties that something must Home Secretary's speech was complacent, was 16 years ago that the Frank's committ "the only satisfactory treatment for a law suf many defects is to sweep it away entirely." Sixteen years is a long time to leave on the something that Lord Franks said in 19 unsatisfactory.

Section 2 catches all information, regardl matter, importance or whether it is genuinel is most disturbing. The scope of section 2 properly addressed today. The House sho that it is not only journalists and civil serv caught by it but, technically, anyone given i confidence who then repeats it without permi receiving information—unless so authoris one can prove that it was forced upon one to section 2. Persuading an official to divulg is, technically, subject to section 2. Under section 7, it is an offence even to allow on to one's premises someone whom one has grounds to believe has disclosed information without authority.

To leave such a piece of legislation on the statute book for 16 years, especially against the background of Lord Franks' report and subsequent criticisms, is quite ridiculous.

Mr. Allason: I listened with great interest to the hon. Gentleman's clarification of the scope of section 2, but I believe that it goes beyond that. It covers those who might be guilty of offences overseas and who could be prosecuted in this country. Furthermore, it is not limited to those who have signed the Official Secrets Act. My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) seemed to imply that it was so limited, but that is not the case.

Mr. Kirkwood: I can confirm that that is not the case, and I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his intervention. There is a widespread potential for abuse, and the House should bear that heavily in mind — especially as the Government are asking us for further time so that they can bring forward their own measure. My former colleague Sir Clement Freud said:

"Section 2 gives the Attorney-General more power than a bad man should have or a good man should need."

We have properly spent time today debating lofty ideals, issues and profound matters such as the duties of the House and the Government. I want to bring the debate to more mundane but very important issues that affect our citizens daily. The right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) said that, within the past 24 hours, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry — Lord Young — had ordered a fire report leak inquiry within the Department of the Environment.

We are told that yesterday, a team of investigators visited the Crown Suppliers. The leaked memorandum was highly critical of the Government's stance on foam-filled furniture, and warned that the proposed code of practice would be retrograde and only window dressing. It accused the Department of Trade and Industry of creating a code based on what the furniture industry thinks that it can afford and what it believes that the customer will expect. The Minister appears to have ignored that advice, as well as that of many others because it was secret. The publication of the advice has helped to persuade him to do what he should have done in the first place and he has now banned dangerous foam.

A leak inquiry would be a disgrace. The House should be calling for an inquiry into why the Minister ignored the safety advice that he received in the first place. However, as the inquiring is taking place, what are the consequences? The person who leaked the document may have committed an offence under the Official Secrets Act 1911. If so, The Guardian which first published the extracts will also have committed an offence. In theory, although I hope that this will not happen, both parties could be prosecuted. That could not happen if the Bill that we are debating became law. Categories of protected information are defined in clause 1 and could not conceivably apply to information of that kind. Even if by some chance the information were covered, the person responsible might be able to plead justification in the public interest under clause 7.

I believe that in cases where there is a substantial risk to people's lives, it is right that such a defence should be available. We must bear that issue in mind as well as the more arcane, but perhaps intriguing, issues of spies, national security and secrecy that are covered by section 2 of the Official Secrets Act.

Ministers claim that they tried to reform the Official Secrets Act in 1979. The Government's view is that they failed to get a consensus on an alternative. The reverse is true. The 1979 Bill failed because everyone agreed that it was a draconian and oppressive measure which would have given Ministers even more unacceptable powers than those contained in section 2. I remind the House of some of the quotes that appeared in the newspapers at that time in response to that measure. The Daily Telegraph called it:

"in many respects truly appallingly."

The Spectator called it:

"A deplorable Bill, so bad that it is impossible to study it without a sense of shock."

The Sunday Express called it "disastrous". The Daily Mail called it:

"A Bill devised by the establishment for the establishment to save its own face as much as to defend the country."

The Times called the measure:

"a grave threat to the freedom of the press."

It is wrong of the Government to say that they tried in 1979 to reform the Official secrets Act with good faith and with their best endeavours, but could not get a consensus. The truth is that the 1979 Bill was completely unacceptable across a broad spectrum.

The Government's position that we should trust the Home Secretary and allow him to bring forward his measure via a White Paper in June is incredible, as the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) said. The way in which the Government are having recourse to injunctions and interdicts and using the law of confidence and circumventing the jury system is disgraceful. That gives us no confidence at all. Indeed, the recent quote from the High Court judge considering the most recent interdict suggested that the Government were moving towards imposing a doctrine of absolute confidentiality which he believed was unobtainable this side of the iron curtain.

For the Government to ask for the trust of the House in this matter is ironic to say the least. The Home Secretary's failure to give us even a hint of what his White Paper might contain — the hon. Member for Thanet, South referred to this — leaves the House very little alternative but to support the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills.

What is the case now for the Government refusing to confirm at least the notion and assurance that they will bring forward a public interest defence? The Bill is a measured alternative. It contains extremely necessary safeguards. I would go further and reverse the onus by requiring all official information to be made public through a freedom of official information Act and reserve only certain categories that relate to safety. I believe that, in the fullness of time, we should move in that direction. It has been proved to work in other countries.

On the balance of the argument, I believe that the House should accept the proposals that the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills put forward so ably, and I shall support him in the Lobby.

2.15 pm

Mr. Julian Amery (Brighton, Pavilion): My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has asked us to wait until the summer. He has asked us not to support the Bill today and to vote it down. I would have been more inclined to listen to his advice if he had told us more about how his mind was moving, and if the handling of official secrets cases during the past few months had been better.

The Government's attitude in the cases of Mr. Wright, Mr. Cavendish and the BBC programme has been to rely on a doctrine and a principle of total, life-long confidentiality. This is a rather new approach in regard to books and programmes. The old convention was that an author would show his text to the authorities, and if the authorities wanted any change, they negotiated with the author and changes were or were not made. If changes were not made, the author concerned could have been liable under the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Wright's lawyer claimed that Mr. Wright was prepared to reveal his text. Mr. Cavendish and his publishers did reveal their text. The Government's decision was not to try to preserve secrets, but to lay down a principle that, if it was applied to secret agents, officers or Ministers, would kill for good the publication of memoirs which are a great help in the education of all of us. When I was involved in covert operations, the memoirs of Sir Paul Dukes, Sir Robert Bruce-Lockhart and Sir Compton MacKenzie taught me a great deal. The doctrine of total, life-long confidentiality is unreasonable, undesirable and unenforceable. That it is unenforceable has been demonstrated in the exchanges of Mr. Wright and Chapman Pincher showing that it is quite easy to give information to somebody else, and that somebody else does not appear to be liable to prosecution.

I do not understand the distinction. The Government claim that the experience of a former official is their property. If that property is purloined by someone else, it would come close to purveying stolen goods, but that is not the Government's view.

My hon. Friends on the Treasury Bench have shown a singular lack of sense of humour in their handling of these matters. It was devastatingly humourless that they sent Sir Robert Armstrong to Australia. Anyone but another lawyer could have told them that the judge in Australia, a good, solid, Australian a well-balanced man with a chip on each shoulder, would not accept the idea that something that was generally known all over the world could remain an official secret. It was singularly humourless when the Government tried to gag the press at home while the printing presses were rolling as fast as they could on the other side of the Atlantic. It has been humourless for the Government to try to force the House by a three-line Whip to throw out the Bill today. There are better and more subtle ways of doing that just as there are subtler ways of killing a cat than drowning it in cream.

We have to recognise that that lack of sense of humour on the part of the Government is going a long way towards bringing about the result that they want to avoid. I have never been a crusader for open Government when matters of defence and foreign affairs are involved. However, there is a movement that would like to see the secret services brought under parliamentary control, and I understand that that is something the Government wish to avoid. However, if they continue to adopt such a rigid stance, over lifelong confidentiality I suspect that in the end that is what they will buy and I would regret it.

2.20 pm

Mr. Richard Shepherd: With the leave of the House, I shall reply to the debate.

We have had nearly five hours of debate in which we have ranged over many important issues in support of the Bill. However, the interesting thing that has arisen is that the Government have found only two Members to speak on behalf of their propositions. It is appropriate for me to refer to what I thought were the themes of those who did speak against my Bill.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) advanced a constitutional doctrine which I did not understand. However, he convinced me that I would not turn to him for constitutional advice. The other person who spoke in support of the Government, if my understanding is correct, was my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine). He was extraordinarily kind to me and for that I am grateful. I accept the kindness and return it in this way. My right hon. Friend was promoting an extraordinary proposition. First, he said that I had won, "Hallelujah, you have done well." Secondly, he said that the Government are right to say that this is not a matter which should be originated by the House and looked at in this way because the issue is too complex. Thirdly, he said that Back Benchers are right to be upset and agitated. On that basis we are all right. That is great. Let us face it, we have resolved all the difficulties.

On the matter of trusting the Government, after a conversation yesterday afternoon with the Head of that Government, I am anxious about that concept. My right hon. Friend the Member for Henley was a member of the Government. He has an understanding of the machinery of government. He advanced the proposition—he was in the most powerful position to do so—that there was a flawed rating system. I remember that very well. He looked at the issues involved and came to the conclusion that we could never consider a poll tax. He left the Cabinet, but we are still committed to the idea that something has to be done to reform the domestic rating system. We are all agreed about that principle. What happens? The Government come up with a poll tax and the most vehement opponent of that poll tax is my right hon. Friend the Member for Henley. I give him all my loyalty and support in terms of his right to express his opposition. That must be right. Yet, I am asked now, in a sense, to trust the Government in this matter.

All that my sponsors and I are trying to do is to say that great matters of principle are involved. There is the relationship of the citizen to the Government of the country and the relationship of the House of Commons to the Executive. Those matters go to the heart of our responsibility as Members of Parliament.

We cannot necessarily call upon the Press Gallery always to express our views. We do not control the resources of the nation, which are at the Government's disposal. We know that our job is to support and succour the Government. The Queen's business must go on and we all take that very seriously. We are negotiating and trying to identify matters of principle and trying to state them clearly. Will there be a review of a ministerial certificate? Can a Minister be judge and jury in his own case? We have wanted to know that all along the way.

The second principle that we have been enunciating and about which we have tried to elicit information from the Government — we are not being unreasonable — is whether we can have a public interest defence. We have gone over these issues again and again today. My feeling, and the sentiment of the House, as I understood it, was that these issues are appropriate for the House to discuss.

I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State because he has dealt with me courteously. Unfortunately, he has not always been authorised to tell me what he has been authorised to tell other people. I must pursue this because if I have any value in the House it is to state as clearly and as loudly as I can how I see government and to try to raise these issues as we have done today.

I knew officially that we were to have a White Paper only on the Tuesday before we went into recess, yet I heard from colleagues, including the executive of the Select Committee on Home Affairs — although I am not supposed to reveal that—that the Government intended to work on a White Paper. I could not be told that; my sponsors could not be told that; but other people could be told that. It is such a trivial matter. Of what importance can it be to the conduct of great public affairs? The House, and particularly Back Benchers, are entitled to assert that we sometimes want to affect important matters — the way in which the decision is taken—by identifying the principles on which we shall operate. That is all that I have asked by bringing this measure before the House for its full consideration.

Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister if she would withdraw the three-line Whip, but was told that that was not possible. I asked whether it was possible to identify these matters of principle and whether there was any response to them, but was told that that was not possible. I asked whether it was possible to refer them to a Select Committee, but that also was not possible. Nothing was possible, but the Executive holds unto itself what has been said repeatedly; that this goes to the heart of government. But it goes to the heart of the House of Commons, too.

It is impertinent for the Government to say, "We have to originate all these ideas on this matter and we have to present them fully formulated to the House." Why can we not have our say about the principles? The fact that the Government have all the instruments and power at their hands to try to dispose of private Members' business is another matter. However, surely we in the House have a right to ascertain the central issue. I hope that my colleagues will remember that right and that it is certainly not just a matter of reviewing what the Government present on a plate, a la carte.

I mentioned my experience on the Telecommunications Bill. Hon. Members will recall that the BT licence was a take-it-or-leave-it document. We could not alter a word. We had to say either yes or no. It was a desperately flawed document. No one who has had experience of the telecommunications business since we passed a badly thought out and constructed Bill would doubt the accuracy of my comments.

On the basis of the proposition that we are not allowed to consider this Bill, we must wait until the Government produce a Bill. It is not respectable. We are citizens public affairs. We ought to reject this nonsense, n because the Bill is of the most magnificent integrity, b because we want to discuss the issues involved.

Let the Government come back and say what is wro with our Bill, but the proposition that, "There ai nothing wrong with this Bill, but we shall produ something at some other time and our Bill will have great integrity than anything that you, from the House Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, c raise" is a dangerous and silly concept which we shou throw out. It is important that we should consider that. ask the House to vote for the Bill.

Question put, That the Bill be now read a Secon time:—

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): On a point of or Mr. Deputy Speaker. Because of the noise, I did not h you read the title of my Bill. Is it possible to repeat i

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member did not h me read the title of the Bill, no doubt for two reasons, first being that I did not read it; the Clerk did. In any c objection was taken. Does the hon. Member wish to a date for Second Reading?

Mr. Faulds: I should like to give a date, if that can chosen. If the Bill has been objected to, what is procedure?

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): You another date, you fool.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member gi another date. If he wishes to do that, will he kindly do now, so that we can proceed? Second reading what da

Mr. Banks: Tomorrow, Sir.

Mr. Faulds: Tomorrow, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Did I hear the hon. Member Friday next?

Mr. Faulds: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speak It is difficult to proceed with the proper business when my right I have a young colleague who has diarrho loquaciousness on every occasion and when there is su a hubbub in the rest of the House that I cannot hear wh is happening. I should like to pursue the Bill on the fi convenient date available.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

DISQUALIFICATION FROM OWNERSHIP O ANIMALS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Hon. Members who a leaving the Chamber should do so quickly and quie because there is still business to discuss.

Although the Clerk read the title of Bill No. 3, t Disqualification from Ownership of Animals Bill, I mu tell the House, that, because the Bill has the same effe as clause 1 of the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bi which received its Second Reading on 11 December, cannot propose the Question on Second Reading.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): On a point order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should like to make it cle that, having had the contents of my Bill — t Disqualification from Ownership of Animals Bill—safe subsumed into the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill, I do not propose to move the Second Reading of the Bill today. I shall strongly support the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill.

DATA PROTECTION ACT 1984 (AMENDMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

To be read a Second Time upon Friday next.

CONCESSIONARY TELEVISION LICENCES FOR STATE RETIREMENT PENSIONERS BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Not printed.

Miss Marjorie Mowlam (Redcar): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for anonymous Conservative Members to shout "Object" and deny the pensioners of this country the right proposed in the Bill?

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The point of order does not arise because——

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman knows that, when I am on my feet, he must keep his seat. Points of order do not arise, because, as the Bill has not been printed, the Question cannot be proposed.

Miss Mowlam: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You did not offer me a date for the Second Reading of my Bill. You did not give me the chance to give one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologise to the hon. Lady. I thought that she had to have the Bill printed first. I am in error. Would the hon. Lady please name a day for Second Reading?

Miss Mowlam: Friday next.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

SLAUGHTER OF DEER BILL

Order Read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [11 December].

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 22 January.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE (IMPROVED PROVISION OF SERVICES) BILL

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken; Second Reading what day?

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think that it is cowardly of Conservative Members to hide behind anonymity on a matter as crucial as the National Health Service and I wish that Conservative Members shouting, "Object", could be named. I would like to name the next available date for Second Reading—Friday next.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In the last Parliament, many disagreements arose on Friday afternoons about the blocking of private Members' Bills by hirelings of the Government who hide behind the Dispatch Box and the Front Bench and refuse to stand up and say on what basis they object and who they are.

The Chair has been approached on this subject on many occasions and many hon. Members have expressed concern that it is an abuse of the procedures of the House that the blocking mechanism is used behind the cloak of anonymity — in this case blocking a very effective measure to improve the Health Service. Would you, Sir, be prepared to rule that, for the duration of this Parliament, you will always insist that the hon. Member blocking a Bill stands up and records his or her objection to it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This matter has been dealt with on several occasions on Friday afternoons. The position has been made quite clear. What has happened this afternoon is not unusual. It happens frequently on Friday afternoons, especially when private Members' Bills are before the House.

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Secondly, I remind the House that the shout of "Object," is no different from the collection of voices when a motion is put to the House. Under those circumstances, it is quite impossible for the Chair to ask or insist that hon. Members expressing their view through their voice be identified by being asked to stand, or in any other way. The matter has been dealt with on previous occasions. I have it in mind that I must follow the practices and conventions of the House, and if hon. Members feel sufficiently strongly about the matter, any changes should be pursued through the appropriate Committee of the House.

Mr. Skinner: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. There is a way out of this problem, as you are probably aware. From time to time, there are deliberations, in what is known as a Speaker's Conference, on all sorts of matters appertaining to the business of the House and to electoral considerations. In view of the abuse that is taking place, with people refusing to stand up and be named, it is high time that the matter was put before that Conference. For instance, in relation to the Concessionary Television Licences for State Retirement Pensioners Bill——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not taking any "for instances"—not at 2.50 pm on a Friday.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Janner: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let me deal with one at a time, please. The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is very familiar with our proceedings and knows that the right place to discuss this matter—if there is substance in it — is the Procedure Committee. If the hon. Gentleman believes that there is substance in his complaint, no doubt he will consider referring the matter, through the appropriate channels, to the Procedure Committee.

Mr. Madden: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Are we not in a new position with regard to this procedure? The voices of Conservative Members that were raised in objection to the National Health Service (Improved Provision of Services) Bill, which was presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), of which I am a sponsor, and which seeks to improve health care services for every person in the United Kingdom——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must make a point of order.

Mr. Madden: How can we know whether those who objected to this important measure have interests in privatising the NHS——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are going over well-trodden ground. It has been made clear many times that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to try to identify those who may have expressed an objection, or to question their motives. It is not a matter for the Chair.

Mr. Patrick McLoughlin (Derbyshire, West): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Since some hon. Members have been named, it is important to put on record the fact that one may object to a Bill, not because of its contents but because——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not think we can start having a discussion about reasons——

Mr. Corbyn: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Janner: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House is becoming increasingly discourteous. Hon. Members know that they should not rise when the occupant of the Chair is on his feet dealing with a matter which has been raised. I should tell the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) that this afternoon is not the time to discuss the reasons why hon. Members may have expressed objections.

Mr. Janner: I raised this matter last Session because it was extremely important to know whether an hon. Member was entitled to address the House unless he or she was standing. Mr. Speaker ruled that the matter should be considered by the Procedure Committee. The vast majority of Back-Bench Members believe that it is wrong for an anonymous person to be able to object to a Bill. In view of the strong views of hon. Members on both sides of the House—we accept your statement that the matter should go to the Procedure Committee—will you be good enough to say that the Chair will seek guidance from the Procedure Committee about a procedure which is wholly unsatisfactory and extremely wicked?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remember that point being the subject of discussion last Session. The hon. and learned Gentleman will recall that it was pointed out then that expressing an objection from a sedentary position is no different from occasions when the Chair puts a Question to the House and collects the voices. If it was thought necessary for those registering an objection to be ic or to stand when they made that objection, we wo to follow a similar practice when a Question was House should consider the difficulty that that wo posed to the Chair and the House this afterno more than 500 hon. Members were in the Cham

However, let me add that it is my recollection Chair did not rule that the matter be referred Procedure Committee. Indeed, it would not be app for the Chair to seek to do that. The Chair wo suggested on that occasion that, if the hon. Gentle it appropriate to do so, he or his hon. Friends co to have the matter discussed in the Procedure Co That was what I was suggesting this afternoon to Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). I was not ex a view other than the one that I have expressed in with points of order.

Several hon. Members: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We cannot indefinitely on a Friday afternoon listening to mu points of order.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to call Members, and an hon Member has the Adjou debate.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): On of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Perhaps I can help y matter has been referred to the Procedure Comm has been debated at length, and the Procedure Co has produced a report. The report has not been by Parliament, because the Leader of the House found time for it.

We want the matter debated. If it is the view House, or of Members of it, that we have not de it satisfactorily, hon. Members are free to am report and to move resolutions that may be carrie whole House.

Secondly, as we found in Committee, there are why Back Benchers might wish to intervene and the development of proceedings on the Second Rea a Bill. One reason is that they do not want the B be jumped, so that Bills that come after other Bills to secure positions in Committee——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentlen been helpful, until the point that he is now raising earlier that I did not consider it right or useful House to try to discuss the motives that lea Members to shout "Object" on the proposed Reading of a Bill.

Mr. Campbell-Savours rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I said that th Gentleman had been helpful, and I think th information that he has given us should be borne i by hon. Members. However, he must recognise t question of debating in time for the debate on a pa report from a Committee is a matter not for the Ch for the Leader of the House. If hon. Members feel s about the matter, no doubt they will pursue it wi Now, can we get on?

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): On a p order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Would we not have fewer points of order this afternoon if the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) had admitted that it was he who objected to the Concessionary Television Licences for State Retirement Pensioners Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That matter has been dealt with in the course of earlier points of order.

Mr. Madden: On a separate point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. May I also ask for inquiries to be made into the denial of drafting assistance to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) in the preparation of her National Health Service (Improved Provisions of Services) Bill? I consider it disgraceful that she has been prevented from receiving such assistance in bringing forward that important Bill, and I think that insult has been added to injury by the fact that it has been blocked today by unnamed people. Because we do not yet have a Register of Members' Interests, we do not know who is speaking for whom——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is now seeking to raise a whole string of matters, some of which are certainly not matters for me. Questions of drafting of Bills and drafting assistance are not a matter for the Chair, and will no doubt be pursued through the appropriate channels.

Ms. Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. There is serious concern about the issue of people who object to ten-minute Bills not having to identify themselves to the Chamber. The debate is not being prolonged simply to waste time; we are asking for your assistance to sort out a procedural issue that causes great disgruntlement in the House. As I understand it, that is part of your role, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

You argued earlier, Sir, that it was common practice to take the voices before deciding whether a vote should be taken. I put it to you that that is quite a different issue. If a vote is taken, everyone who votes has his vote recorded, and has to stand up for the position that he takes. In this case, the hon. Member who blocks a Bill is deliberately not identified. This is a serious procedural issue. We need your assistance to resolve it. It is not enough for you to say that we may refer the matter to a Committee. I should like to ask for your help to sort the matter out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, it is the task of the Chair to ensure observance of the Standing Orders and the practices and conventions of the House. It is not my task to create procedure, merely to apply it. Its creation is a matter for others. The hon. Lady might reflect on the advice that I have already given and see whether it might not be the best advice to pursue.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to the point of order. Mr. Deputy Speaker. As you know, I took a close interest in this matter in the previous Parliament and I have suffered the same fate as my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) seems to have suffered. When she rose to move that her Bill be read a Second time, there was a great d of noise on both sides of the Chamber. In some cases noise might have represented support for the Bill, and might have represented opposition in others. It was clear whether anyone was objecting. It was not clear w was objecting. Can you be certain, Mr. Deputy Speak who objected to the Bill? My hon. Friend the Member Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen)——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, no. Order. The ho Gentleman is going over ground that we have alrea covered. I have made it clear on several occasions that is not the responsibility of the Chair to ident individuals. It is sufficient that the voice be heard and t voice was clearly heard calling, "Object."

Mr. Faulds: On a point of order. I am in somewhat a sad quandary. When I introduced—when I attempt to get some progress on — my Community Heal Councils (Access to Information) Bill, which was g through the Chamber in the previous Parliament by admirable hon. Friend of mine and only fell because of t election intervening before it could go to the Lords a become law, I had understood from the Governme Whips, who were extremely helpful, may I say, that th Bill would go through on the nod. I am very, ve surprised to find that the discipline behind the Chief Whi on those Benches is so appalling that some uninforme unintelligent, unhelpful hon. Gentleman has wrecked wh was a quite valuable little Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can understand the ho Gentleman's resentment. Doubtless he will have anoth opportunity. I have to say again that it is not for the Cha to try to identify those who shout, "Object."

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): If would help, I could tell you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that th Opposition intend, through the usual channels, to pre the Leader of the House to bring to the House the repo of the Procedure Committee on this matter in an effort protect the rights of Back Benchers from Governme Whips getting people to object to Bills. We are not ver hopeful of the outcome, however, on the day of th unprecedented action of the Government in putting three-line Whip on a private Member's Bill.

Mr. Hal Miller (Bromsgrove): On a point of order, M Deputy Speaker. Can I declare an interest in taking pa in that debate, as I had a private Member's Bill which wa blocked by Labour's objections and which would greatl have facilitated the education of children in Britain?

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member fo Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) has been helpfu and showed how the House might make progress in thes matters. I hope that the House can feel content with th advice that he has offered, and that we can now mak progress.

Birmingham Children's Hospital

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

3.3 pm

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): The whole country is hoping and praying that my constituents' child, four-year-old Matthew Collier, will win his battle for survival after 10 hours' major heart surgery on Wednesday. All our hopes go out to Matthew and his parents.

My Adjournment debate is about the intensive care unit at the children's hospital, Birmingham. Everyone in the west midlands knows about the splendid job that the hospital does and the kind of work that the surgeons do, including the most complicated heart operations such as that performed on Matthew two days ago. The utmost praise should be given to the surgeons, consultants, nurses and the other medical and non-medical staff at the children's hospital.

The hospital faces financial problems, and as far as major heart surgery is concerned, there are nowhere near sufficient trained nurses for the intensive care unit. That is the part of the hospital to which the child goes after major surgery and where he or she may spend weeks being cared for, before being allowed home. It was the lack of bed availability in the intensive care unit that led to the position where my constituent's son, Matthew Collier, could not be admitted. Moreover, no date was given for admission.

Matthew had already had three operations. In September last year, his parents were told by the hospital that major heart surgery was urgently necessary. An appointment was given—I stress only an appointment—for 24 February. All that happened because beds were not available in the intensive care unit. Matthew's parents were told that he could be admitted only if he became an emergency case. In all the circumstances, what could the parents do except go public over their beloved son, especially since, although Matthew's health was deteriorating, he was not considered an emergency case? We are, of course, pleased that a bed became available this week and that Matthew has had his lengthy operation.

When I visited the hospital last week, I was shown round the intensive care unit. Although in total there were six beds, only five were in use. I stress to the Minister that only five beds are serving the entire west midlands region. It is reported that over 90 children are waiting for major heart surgery at the children's hospital in Birmingham.

One of those children is another Matthew—in this case Matthew Mulhall, who is eight months old. He has a serious heart condition and his parents have been told that major surgery is required. In a letter to her Member of Parliament, his mother wrote:

"I cannot sleep at nights worrying about the cutbacks and the effects it could have on our son".

It was that case in Coventry which led my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Hughes) to make his protest in the Chamber on Monday. I cannot and will not condemn a colleague who feels, as a religious person, so strongly about the position of his constituents and their child that he made the protest that he did. I am sure that my hon. Friend did not make his protest lightly.

I received a prompt reply from the Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) to the letter to the Minister for Health at the beginning o about Matthew Collier's case and the intens at the hospital. In her reply, the Under-Secre to an intensive care nursing course that is ap to commence next January. However, I shoul the Minister about the position in the meantim proposed course produces the further trained will be employed in the children's hospital i unit.

Moreover, as we know, the chairman of health authority responded to the spotlight on by suggesting six courses of possible action to position. Of course, any action that can be ta a temporary basis, which could assist the chil urgently in need of major heart surgery, is to b All hon. Members would welcome that. Howe heart consultants at the hospital were somew about some of the suggestions. The loc Birmingham reported that, in the consultants of the chairman's proposals demonstrate appreciation of the special needs of childre diseases. The four said, for example, impracticable and inappropriate to move ch region to region.

Ms. Clare Short (Birmingham, Ladywood Friend will be aware that that hospital constituency. There are grave shortages thr hospital, not just in the intensive care unit, result of the Government's underfunding of Service.

In the regional health authority's plan, t hon. Friend has just referred, one of the prop money should be given to private hospitals, hope that my hon. Friend shares my deep that. We want the children's hospital in B which is loved and respected throughout the r properly funded and to function properly. We money to be creamed off to build up a priva while we fail to resolve the problems in th hospital.

Mr. Winnick: The point made by my hon. F which all Labour Members share.

The position of the intensive care unit is current crisis in the NHS, no less in the west mi elsewhere. It is not acceptable to the large people, no matter how they vote, that childre major surgery on the NHS, such as the two chi I mentioned, should have to wait literally mo they can be admitted. That is unacceptab unacceptable to the large majority of people, no less acceptable to the Minister and his col

Neither should the parents have to undergo and stress of wondering whether a bed can b their child, in addition to all their constant fears over the child. Can one imagine what it for parents, knowing that their young child req heart surgery, and wondering whether that survive? They have all the constant worry and, at least in the west midlands and, no doubt, in of the country, there is the problem such as th by Mr. and Mrs. Collier and Mr. and Mrs. whether a bed will be found in time. That is w two cases, the parents decided to go public.

At the end of my brief speech, I should like to leave a few minutes for my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) to speak. She will then have to leave for an urgent constituency engagement.

The Government must take urgent action now to try to resolve the crisis and the need for more nurses at the intensive care unit in the children's hospital, Birmingham. It is no good saying that next year there will be a course. It is no good for the Minister to say that suggestions have been made by the chairman of the regional health authority. Nothing less than urgent action will do. It should never again be necessary for parents such as my constituents or other parents to have to go public to draw attention to what is happening.

I quoted this on Monday, and I repeat, that the Prime Minister has said that she wanted to go to hospital "on the day, at the time and with the doctor that I choose." That is fine. That is the Prime Minister's wish. If it is fine for the Head of the Government to have that wish, should it be any less right for our constituents and their children to be able to have operations in the same way, without a lengthy delay, and to be able to have them on the NHS?

I plead with the Minister to understand what is happening, to understand the difficulties and the need for more funding and more nurses in the intensive care unit. Let us try to resolve the problem. Let us hope that never again parents have to contact the media and so on before there is an understanding of such cases by the Government. I hope that the Minister will respond accordingly.

3.13 pm

Ms. Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. Does the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) have the consent of the Minister to speak?

The Minister for Health (Mr. Tony Newton): Yes.

Ms. Walley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) for allowing me a short time to put across these views, about which I feel strongly. I hope that hon. Members will forgive me if I have to leave before the end of the debate because of urgent constituency business.

I speak on behalf of families in North Staffordshire with children who need that treatment, especially the parents of Clare Wise, who lives in Kidsgrove. Clare needs her shunt operation urgently. She needs it now while she is still well. Will the Minister give me a date when she can be admitted for her operation?

On Tuesday this week we heard that Sir James Ackers made an announcement. He has at least and at last acknowledged that we have a problem in the west midlands. However, will the Minister take note that extra money is needed to provide the proper levels of intensive care, not just five beds? That extra money must be spent on the NHS so that everyone can benefit, not just the private sector. Clare's family do not want her to have a private operation, even though money has been raised locally to pay for it. Her parents want the consultant who has treated her throughout to do the operation. They want to know that there will be a bed available in the intensive care unit if it is needed.

I would be grateful if the Minister will say how he intends to make extra money available for this very important service in the west midlands, so that w "Young at Heart" lobby comes here on Monday, i assured that the intensive care unit will be fully st a matter of only days or weeks.

3.15 pm

The Minister for Health (Mr. Tony Newton): I as myself with the opening words of the hon. Mem Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), who expressed hi wishes to Matthew Collier and his parents, and a hopes of us all that the operation yesterday will s

I wish to record the advice that I have been give the position of Matthew Mulhall, who was also me by the hon. Gentleman, and who was the sub comments in the House earlier this week. I understa his parents, with their Member of Parliament, n consultant — Eric Silove — yesterday. Matthew leaking heart valve and I understand that Dr. Silo advised Matthew's parents that it would be best t him to grow so that the largest possible replacemen valve can be used. It is envisaged that his operati take place in four to six months' time, althou condition will be kept under regular review meantime.

I thought it important to place that information record because, in the light of the apparent clinical it places the case in a rather different context than have been assumed from some of the remarks made Having said that, I stress that I fully accept tha remarks were made in good faith.

Ms. Short: It now appears that only if one goes media, or forces a child to be named in the House, c obtain attention. Delays for operations, even when had been set, have been occurring at the Birmi children's hospital for years. It is important that tha is made clear. If the Minister says that he cannot so problem this week, the question must be: why solution not sought when the problem first arose ago?

Mr. Newton: I acknowledge the hon. Lady's sin The point I made about Matthew Mulhall was int to help the House to understand the position in th of the advice given to me. It was not intended to mi the anxieties that we all feel when delays occur.

I well understand that the hon. Member for Sto Trent, North (Ms. Walley) has to leave the House sh I do not have sufficient information about the c Clare Wise to feel it right to make any com Obviously, I have noted the hon. Lady's remarks ar make inquiries. I am sure that she and other hon. Me will understand that I cannot dictate to clinicians the in which their patients should be treated.

I had intended to say a word or two about the fac obviously, I do not accept everything that the Member for Walsall, North said about the Na Health Service. However, rather than extend argument, I shall say something about the part problems of Birmingham children's hospital. I d intend to minimise the concerns that have been expr but I want to remind the House of the very achievements of that hospital in recent years.

The number of in-patients treated in the hospital past seven years for which I have figures has risen per cent. The number of out-patients has risen by cent. and the number of day cases has more than doubled to 121 per cent. Since the cardiac unit, which is the focus of our debate, was designated by the Department in 1984 as a supra-regional centre, which protects its funding, as I am sure that hon. Members are aware, 569 open-heart operations have been performed by surgeons. I know that all hon. Members, whatever their current concerns, would want to join in acknowledging the achievement which that represents.

Many of the treatments that now take place at the hospital were not available a few years ago, and that is one of the causes of the hospital's current difficulties. More than a dozen highly specialised treatments are provided, and that has placed additional pressure — I clearly acknowledge this — on some key services and, in particular, on the hospital's intensive care unit. To put the matter clearly, the pace of medical advance has run ahead of the hospital's ability to recruit and retain enough trained nurses, and the intensive care unit has not been able to operate at full capacity. Even so, admissions to the paediatric intensive care unit have risen from 207 in 1977 to 470 in 1986. The figures have much more than doubled in just under 10 years. However, I recognise that, despite that very large increase in the amount of work, some operations have had to be postponed, as we are all aware.

As the hon. Member for Walsall, North is aware from the recent letter to which he referred from my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, we have been taking a very close interest in the matter in response to the concern expressed inside and outside the House. The issues have been explored at a series of talks between officials and officers from the West Midlands regional health authority and the Central Birmingham health authority. The outcome of those talks and the work of our officials, as well as regional and district officials, enabled Sir James Ackers the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority to make his statement earlier this week in which he outlined six areas of action intended to ease the position and ensure that in future children do not wait for cardiac surgery for long periods.

The first priority relates in some ways to the point made by the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North. The priority is to ensure that children currently awaiting an operation are treated as quickly as possible. The regional health authority is therefore considering urgently whether arrangements can be made with other regions or private hospitals to improve the immediate position. While I acknowledge what the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) said about the use of the private sector, as a matter of practical concern for those who are awaiting operations if it is possible to obtain those operations within the capacity that currently exists in the private sector, it would be wrong to stand in the way of that, whatever long-term view the hon. Lady may take. At any rate that option, and the possibility of making arrangements with comparable centres in other regions, are among the ideas being considered urgently by the regional health authority.

I know that some doctors at the children's hospital have said that it would be impractical to send children out of the region for treatment. I want to make it clear that it is not the intention to impose a solution that is unacceptable to the children's doctors or their parents. If such a solution were acceptable to the clinicians and parents, I would fully support the regional health authority's objec that all the necessary arrangements for a po were in place. If that is the right practical particular practical problem, no one would in its way.

A number of other initiatives are under w the recruitment and retention of nurses who h of special skills needed by the children's hosp —the hon. Member for Walsall, North fair this — the establishment of a new traini Birmingham for paediatric intensive care. W for the course—the first of its kind outside start later this year. I have made very clear my every possible step should be taken to get tha place as early as possible.

Mr. Winnick: The second paragraph of a received from the Under-Secretary of Sta Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie

"It is anticipated this course will commenc 1989."

Mr. Newton: That was the position wh Friend wrote that letter. Part of the pur exercise, and of the statement from the RH during the week was to show that further ste taken to accelerate that process. It is my dir as a Minister, to ensure that no step fails to accelerate the introduction of that course. A knows, the principal problem at the children's hospital intensive care unit is not a money but a shortage of intensive care nurses. focus on that problem beyond anything else There is no question of the introduction of being delayed due to lack of money. We woul that to happen.

Ms. Short: That is good news. Another su the hospital is that there should be a special returning nurses who are resident in Birmingha would not be attracted to other regions. enormous potential. I have written to the Mi it, but I have not yet received a reply. I ho Minister will comment on that suggestion, wh more fruitful than a fresh course for new you

Mr. Newton: I am sorry if the hon. La received a reply. The two courses are complem idea emerged from the work done joint Department and the region, and I very much l will prove possible to pursue that course as wel paediatric intensive care course. Both courses

In the short term and in the longer term efforts will be reinforced by what we are doing level in the profession with the nurses and negotiating council to advance a review of t grading structure which, to a significant exten at ensuring that the skills of nurses in key spe better reflected in their grading and, therefore, i As the House is aware, there has been agreem negotiating council about new grading Proposals are going to the review body for pr report that is due later this year.

The hospital building programme to which is currently under way in the west midlands. A the objective of providing a modern hospital ser parts of the region that historically have facilities — the constituency of the hon. Me

Walsall, North is among those benefiting from the building programme—another important feature is the replacement of the old single specialty hospitals in Birmingham, including the Birmingham children's hospital, by new facilities on district general hospital sites.

Despite its hugely increased capital programme, the region has had to make difficult decisions in recent months between competing priorities. Clearly such decisions have to be taken at regional level. At present, it is planned that the Birmingham children's hospital will be rebuilt on the site of the Queen Elizabeth hospital beginning in 1994-95. That will include an expanded intensive care unit.

As Sir James Ackers made clear in his statement, which I welcomed, he is considering whether there is a speedier alternative to that proposal. I should very much welcome it, and I should be anxious to support the region. be wrong of me and of hon. Members—who sought to do so—to pretend that a complex such as that at the Birmingham children's hospit resolved overnight, but I hope that I have given th and hon. Members a measure of assurance, an reassurance, that not only is no obstacle being p way of finding an early solution to that h difficulties but that we shall be doing everything — and have already taken action — to supp encourage the west midlands region to overcon difficulties.

Oral Answers to Questions

WALES

Advance Factories

1. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the figures for each of the last eight years for (a) the average number of jobs per 10,000 sq ft of Welsh Development Agency advance factory space projected, at the time of letting, to be created within three years, and (b) the average number of jobs now actually in existence per 10,000 sq ft of Welsh Development Agency advance factory space.

The Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Peter Walker): I have placed a copy of the detailed figures in the Library of the House. Since 1980 the annual average number of jobs projected is about 38 per 10,000 sq ft of advance factory space to be achieved when the lettings have reached their full potential, which really takes some years. The actual number of jobs created to date already exceeds 30 per 10,000 sq ft.

Mr. Morgan: Does the Secretary of State agree that one of the greatest problems in projecting the value for money to be obtained from expenditure on regional aid is the difference between performance and reality? Does he further agree that his extraordinary claim last week that he was increasing the allocation of regional aid, when in fact he was cutting it, was one of the worst frauds ever perpetrated on the people of Wales and that it combined the worst aspects of door-to-door salesmanship with the persistence of Jehovah Witnesses, although not many of those witnesses claim to be Jehovah?

Mr. Walker: I delight in the way in which the Labour party in Wales is distressed at every big piece of good news for the Principality. It is remarkable, in view of the biggest increase in regional aid in any single year in real terms and in cash, to find the hon. Gentleman so distressed. I am delighted to say that his constituents will not be.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I congratulate my right hon. Friend on achieving a 40 per cent. increase in the amount of regional aid for Wales. As the Welsh Development Agency is having to deal with an apparently insatiable demand for new factory space, particularly in Cardiff and south Wales, this must be of tremendous assistance and will offer great opportunities to continue the economic regeneration that the Government have begun so well.

Mr. Walker: In fairness my hon. Friend should consider that on the Sunday before the announcement the Opposition spokesman spent the whole day announcing the impending reduction in regional aid. Ther it was increased by 40 per cent. the Oppositio distressed indeed.

Mr. Geraint Howells: If my memory serves Secretary of State said last week that an extra plus would be allocated to the Welsh D Agency. Can the Secretary of State say how m money will be allocated to Mid Wales Develo

Mr. Walker: Of course, the mid-Wales advantage from the activities of the Welsh D Agency as well as from Mid Wales Developm increased the Mid Wales Development alloc further £1·5 million, which is an increase of a cent.

Mr. Raffan: Is my right hon. Friend awa announcement that total Government provis WDA and WINvest is to be increased by 30 about one third—in the coming financial ye particularly welcomed in Clwyd where, d economic upturn, the vacancy rate on WDA fallen well below 10 per cent.—a level at ability to attract investment can be impaired?

Mr. Walker: The announcement has been not only in Clwyd but by trade union leader leaders and commercial leaders. The only peo not welcome it are those in the Labour party.

Mr. Roy Hughes: Will the Secretary of St that the number of people employed in WDA f gone down in recent years? Should not the Gov setting employment targets for companies t WDA factories? In view of the downward tr Secretary of State not positively alarmed by th the independent organisation Manpower, whic a survey that job prospects for Wales in 1988 than for any other region of Britain?

Mr. Walker: If the hon. Gentleman would a wager on the result in 1988 I shall willingly t him—perhaps for a mutually agreed charity. the worst of any region, perhaps he will give to that charity. I know that the hon. Gentlema usual happy outlook, will be delighted at the f biggest fall in unemployment in Wales since world war has taken place in the past 12 mon

2. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State whether he intends to review his policies with re Welsh language.

The Minister of State, Welsh Office (Mr. Wy My right hon. Friend and I are presently engag ranging discussions about the Welsh language. of these we shall consider how the balance approach pursued by the Government since 197 further developed and the opportunity to language can be extended.

Mr. Butler: Will not parental choice b motivation for choosing the Welsh language, wins friends and influences people, rather tha people through vicious demonstration? How m Government spending on the Welsh language and nurture it?

Mr. Roberts: My hon. Friend is right. He will know that the fundamental principle underlying the Education Act 1944 is that children should be educated according to parental choice, and that is the line we are pursuing. With regard to support for the language, we are spending some £1,164,000 under section 26 of the Development of Rural Wales Act and £1,735,000 under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 this year, but that is not the limit of Government support. We support the Welsh language through the entire education system and through the television channel.

Sir Raymond Gower: Is my hon. Friend aware that the history of the past seven or eight years has demonstrated very clearly his marvellous exertions on behalf of the Welsh language? Does he appreciate that we recognise that fact and hold him in high esteem?

Mr. Roberts: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend for that unsolicited tribute. He is absolutely right in saying that our Welsh language policy has been very successful and is accepted and approved of by people of moderate and sensible opinion in Wales. I contrast that with the position of the Labour party, which does not appear to have a policy.

Mr. Wigley: Is the Minister aware that there is a genuine welcome for the Welsh language panel of eight people appointed before Christmas, albeit that there is neither a woman nor a teacher on the panel? Will he clarify the remarks that he made on a Radio Cymru broadcast before Christmas about the panel's work? Will he state categorically that, contrary to what he said, it will be part of the panel's remit to look at the Bills introduced by Lord Prys-Davies and myself, about which consultation has taken place?

Mr. Roberts: I am sorry if I gave that impression; it was certainly not my intention. The group will be considering the proposals that the hon. Gentleman and Lord Prys-Davies put forward. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would be the first to recognise that things have moved on since that consultation, and we are legislating on educational aspects covered in his Bill.

Mr. Rogers: Does the Minister agree that, rather than dismiss the Labour party's efforts in support of the Welsh language, he ought to be congratulating us? It was one of his Labour predecessors, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris), who gave grants to local authorities to support and maintain the Welsh language, and it is the Labour-controlled local authorities in south Wales which have adopted and implemented the policies of developing the Welsh language. Does the Minister agree that, instead of criticising the Labour party for not having a policy, he should be generous enough to accept that the Labour party is fully committed to the Welsh language, and has been for many years?

Mr. Roberts: Of course I accept what the hon. Gentleman says, but I cannot but notice that that statement was made by him rather than by anybody from his Front Bench. If the Front-Bench Members have a policy, perhaps they would care to declare it.

Rating Reform

3. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people will be liable to pay the proposed community charge in Wales in comparison with those presently liable for rates.

Mr. Peter Walker: The object of the community charge is to spread the responsibility for the 15 per cent. of local government spending that will come from the domestic contribution to all adults and not just to the householders, so 2·1 million adults will be liable compared with 1·1 million present ratepayers.

Mr. Davies: Will the Secretary of State acknowledge that in every district of Mid Glamorgan, which is the county with the worst social and economic deprivation in Wales, every household will be worse off? We noticed the Secretary of State's obvious displeasure and distaste when he commended the Second Reading to the House last December. When he went against his better judgment and voted for the Bill, did he do so to advance his personal ambition, or from fear of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Walker: Both, probably. As I was able to point out, the community charge will be a fairer, better system for Wales. The hon. Gentleman's allegation that every household in his constituency will be worse off is a load of nonsense. Many of his constituents, particularly one-parent families, widows and a load of people who had an unfair burden in the past, will greatly benefit from the changes. In addition, as I pointed out in my answer, as only 15 per cent. of local government expenditure in Wales will come from the community charge, we can organise the needs element in Wales to ensure perfect fairness. That is why I supported the Second Reading happily and I am glad to say that it was cheered loudly from these Benches.

Mr. Rowlands: Is the Secretary of State aware that in Aberfan, Treharris, Rhymney and Merthyr Vale more than three quarters of the householders are likely to be losers under the so-called poll tax? In the name of heaven, what is the case for increasing costs on some of the poorest householders? I thought that the right hon. Gentleman was supposed to be a "One Nation" Tory, but there is no evidence of it in this case.

Mr. Walker: On Second Reading I pointed out that this depends wholly on the needs element that operates when the community charge is introduced. In the past the hon. Gentleman has given me figures about the poverty of many of his constituents. The basis of the rebate scheme and the nationally spread rebate for those on low incomes may well substantially improve the lot of a number of his most poverty-stricken constituents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: May I put it to my right hon. Friend that if we were not to move to the community charge, and were to persist with this manifestly unfair rating system, there would have to be a revaluation of all properties and that the greatest rate demands would be likely to fall on the lower-priced houses, particularly in the valleys of south Wales?

Mr. Walker: The manner and method of operating the community charge will be perfectly good and sensible for Wales. It will remove a great deal of the considerable hardship that one-parent families and others like them have suffered in the past.

Mr. Alan Williams: Does the Secretary of State realise that although it is bad enough that the poll tax will mean massive increases for the people in the valley communities, it also has an industrial context? The Secretary of State will recollect that last week he produced his future strategy for employment in the valley communities based purely on small firms, although he cut capital grants to one fifth of what they are now. In that context, will he confirm that the combined effect of the poll tax, the unified business rate and revaluation will be twice as great on small firms as on medium-sized and large firms? How, therefore, does he reconcile his employment aims, as stated last week, with the lower capital incentives of the regional policy and the higher costs implicit in his changes in the rating system?

Mr. Walker: That is a load of nonsense. I now have more money with more flexibility than ever before to encourage small and large firms. Before the right hon. Gentleman makes these pronouncements he should study the facts. Small firms in the valleys will benefit from many of last week's announcements. They will also have available through the WDA and selective assistance every possible inducement and incentive available to larger firms. The combination of our policies is undoubtedly good for the valleys. On the rating system—I should have thought that this was to the hon. Gentleman's delight—I announced that if there was any shift of emphasis it would be to the benefit of Swansea as opposed to Cardiff.

Health Authorities

4. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairmen of health authorities in Wales; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met the Welsh health auhorities chairmen's committee on 23 November 1987. The main subjects discussed were cash management, locum agencies, medical staff matters, competitive tendering, waiting lists and community health councils.

Mr. Powell: Having had that meeting, the Secretary of State will be as well aware as we are that the problem in the Health Service in Wales is underfunding by the Government. Is he prepared to tell us today that he will provide the funding required by the area health authorities? Is he aware that Mid Glamorgan alone is looking for at least £4·6 million to prevent beds being closed? Alternatively, will the Secretary of State have a word with the Chancellor of the Exchequer to ensure that money is invested in the Health Service rather than given away in tax benefits? Does he agree that it is no use taxpayers having tax benefits today if they are going to be dead tomorrow because they do not have the service that should be provided by the NHS?

Mr. Walker rose——

Mr. Powell: I have not finished yet.

Mr. Speaker: Briefly.

Mr. Powell: I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. My hon. Friend the Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) last week accused the Prime Minister of having blood on her hands with regard to the Health Service. I hope that it is not rubbing off on the Secretary of State.

Mr. Walker: We had a good and constructive meeting with the chairmen of the area health authorities, as I believe they will confirm. The figures that I have announced for the Helth Service in the coming year show quite a substantial increase. When considering these factors and claiming that the Health Service is underfunded, I hope that the hon. Gentleman will bear in mind that Health Service expenditure in Wales next year will be £1,238 per household compared with £418 in 1978-79.

Mr. Ray Powell: What is the increase in real terms?

Mr. Walker: In real terms it is an increase of 39 per cent., so it ill becomes the Opposition to condemn what has been done.

Mr. Livsey: What formula is being applied to the closure of NHS beds and wards in relation to the increasing number of private beds, which seems to militate against NHS provision very seriously indeed?

Mr. Walker: With regard to the availability of beds, the most important measure is the number of patients treated, which this year is at an all-time record level and massively greater than a few years ago. I believe that that trend will continue. That is the important judgment.

There are, of course, increasing demands on the Health Service as new breakthroughs in medicine take place. That will always be so, whichever Government are in power. We have substantially increased expenditure in Wales and are continuing to do so. The hon. Gentleman referred to Mid Glamorgan. Capital allowance to the district authority next year will show an increase of 21 per cent. in one year, so a great deal is being done.

Mr. Forth: Did my right hon. Friend discuss with the chairmen of the health authorities the number of new hospitals built in Wales in the past few years and the increased number of patients being treated? Did he reassure the chairmen that his priorities include, not just the number of beds at any given time, but the number of people receiving quality treatment from the Health Service? Did he receive positive answers from the chairmen, and was he able to reassure them on all those points?

Mr. Walker: Yes, Sir. In the past 10 years there has been considerable capital investment in new hospitals in Wales, but that does not remove the anxiety of a person who has to wait to see a consultant or to be admitted for an operation. Anyone who knows people with such problems will appreciate their anxiety. There is room for greater efficiency in the Health Service. There is also a need for increased capital and current expenditure. Both needs are being met.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: In view of that very encouraging reply, will the Secretary of State give a guarantee that no woman in the future will go through the experience of some women in south Wales who have had to wait up to 83 days from confirmation of cervical carcinoma to gain admission for treatment at Singleton hospital in Swansea and Felindre hospital in Cardiff?

Mr. Walker: I am sure that at any time after the last war, and since the creation of the National Health Service, one could indentify ghastly individual cases that have not received attention. However, that is not likely always to be the position. For example, there is a question on the Order Paper today to which I will make a written reply. That question asks me for the comparative figures for waiting lists between 1978 and the present day. Significantly, the hon. Gentleman concerned asked for the figures from March 1978 and not March 1979. I will also provide the figures for March 1979, because they show the massive deterioration that took place in that 12 months.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Will my right hon. Friend bear in mind the considerable concern in Pembrokeshire where, according to the Welsh Office's figures, the authority is 5·2 per cent. below the Yates' formula? Will he also bear in mind that some health authorities are not only overfunded on the Yates' formula, but overspent? Pembrokeshire, which is a very good and most efficient authority, is converned that it is losing out.

Mr. Walker: All the area chairmen whom I met, without exception, wanted to improve financial control and managerial competence. We must give careful consideration to the quality of staff that the chairmen need to recruit for those purposes.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: Will the Secretary of State ask the chairman of Gwynedd health authority to conduct an inquiry into reports that, following the closure of a maternity ward at St. David's hospital, Bangor on Wednesday of last week, expectant mothers were unable to gain admission to that hospital and mothers who had given birth were unable to return to wards? Will he bear in mind that a happy and fulfilling time for many families was turned into a distressing experience for them and for the staff who had to care for them? When he next meets the chairman of the health authority, will he discuss with her the level of funding needed for the authority to ensure that such a distressing experience does not happen again?

Mr. Walker: As we know, further allocations for the last months of this year have been given to all authorities, including Gwynedd. I shall certainly put to the authority chairman the points that the hon. Gentleman has made.

Sir Raymond Gower: Is my right hon. Friend aware that there is much evidence of increased longevity throughout the free world and that, however the systems of health and hospitals are funded, the new and expensive treatments are creating strains for health services?

Mr. Walker: Yes, Sir. That is bound to happen because of the major breakthroughs. For example, the figures for hip operations have been transformed over the years because of the changes in the medical profession. The number of elderly people is increasing. However, we must all understand that the need to have proper treatment, if it is available, is a natural aspiration of every family. I shall repeat the figures and state that when we came to office £8 a week was spent per household in Wales, and the figure is now £24. That is a substantial improvement.

Mr. Alan Williams: Despite what the Secretary of State says, will he confirm that the rate of increase in expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales under this Administration is little more than a half of what it was under the Labour Administration? As the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave £6,000 million in tax cuts last year and is apparently going to give at least the same figure this year in his next Budget, is the right hon. Gentleman not ashamed that all that he could offer the Health Service in Wales and the beleaguered health authorities was £3·8 million extra this year and a standstill on finances for next year? Will he bear in mind that because of the cash crisis in our chest, kidney dialysis and acute services, with up to four-year waiting lists, we want the Chancellor to use all the resources not further to enrich the already wealthy, but to save the Health Service for our people?

Mr. Walker: I find that a bit thick coming from the right hon. Gentleman. He sat silently as a Minister in the Government who made the biggest cuts in the capital investment programme in the Health Service of any post-war Government. He sat there without a whimper, complaint or a single word. If he is proud of the fact that when the Labour Government left office they were spending £8 per week per household in comparison to our £24 a week, I find that very surprising.

Welsh Language

5. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils in Wales do not receive instruction in Welsh as a first or second language at the ages of (a) seven, (b) 12 and (c) 15 years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest available figures, for September 1986, show that 74 per cent. of 12-year-olds and 27 per cent. of 15-year-olds were receiving instruction in Welsh either as a first or as a second language. Comparable figures are not available for children aged seven, but for primary children as a group, that is aged five to 11, 66 per cent. were receiving instruction in Welsh.

Mr. Griffiths: Does the Minister intend to carry out a crash programme to ensure that there are more teachers of the Welsh language, so that all children in Wales will have the opportunity to learn Welsh?

Mr. Roberts: The hon. Gentleman will know that we have some 2,500 teachers in Wales who can speak Welsh, but do not teach through the medium of Welsh. We have been encouraging them with in-service training to enable them to use Welsh as their medium of instruction.

Dr. Thomas: Does the Minister accept that the key time for instruction in Welsh and in other European languages is at nursery and primary level? Will he tackle seriously the issue of linguistic skills in Wales, by ensuring that the skills that have been developed in bilingual teaching at primary level are extended and other European languages are added to them, to ensure that children in Wales have the same linguistic skills as those in any other part of the European Community?

Mr. Roberts: That is my desire, too, but let us not underestimate the point made in my answer to the question, that 66 per cent. of our primary school children receive instruction in Welsh. I think that the hon. Gentleman will be fair enough to admit that, although we should not be complacent about that figure, it is certainly very encouraging. I agree with what he said about children at nursery school age. We owe a considerable debt to Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin, which has prospered and extended its activities under this Government.

Schools (Community Relations)

6. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for maintaining a close relationship between individual schools in Wales and their local community, and to ensure full community use of school buildings in holiday periods, at weekends and in the evenings.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Our policy remains that while the use of school buildings for community use is desirable, the extent to which it takes place must be a matter for local education authorities and school governors.

Mr. Michael: Does the Minister agree that the best of local authorities in Wales have sought to maximise the community use of buildings and to maintain a proper balance between community needs and the direct educational needs of the schools? Does he agree that that careful balance is under threat with the Government's impending education legislation? Will he give an assurance that safeguards will be built in to ensure that that balance is maintained in future?

Mr. Roberts: I do not agree with the hon. Gentleman that the balance is under threat. I assure him that the position is as follows. Under the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, school governing bodies are required to have regard to the desirability of school premises being available for community use, but there is no duty imposed on them to provide for such cases. That is the position now. Of course, under the current Education Reform Bill, there is the possibility of community use of school buildings, but their primary purpose is as school buildings, and we have no intention whatsoever of interfering with the duties of the governing bodies of such schools. It is up to them to maximise the use that they make of their school buildings for community purposes.

Mr. Coleman: As playing fields and recreational facilities have been paid for out of the public purse, will the Minister undertake to ensure that those facilities are withheld from public use by opted out schools?

Mr. Roberts: I have made the position clear. We are currently discussing the issue, which features in the Education Reform Bill. As the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) knows only too well, we are coming up to those clauses which deal with financial delegation to schools. I am sure that the fundamental principle—that the buildings were built primarily for school use—will remain effective, but it will be up to governing bodies to maximise their community use.

Mr. Alex Carlile: Does the Minister agree, first, that the most community-orientated schools in Wales are the small village schools and, secondly, that, in general, the best primary education in Wales is provided by small village schools?

Mr. Roberts: I have no great difficulty in agreeing with either of those propositions.

Young Children (Heart Disease)

7. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the most recent annual number of babies or young children diagnosed as suffering from congenital heart defects or heart disease (a) in East Dyfed and (b) in Wales.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Ian Grist): The most recent information available in relation to the notification of congenital malformation indicates that, in 1986, five children in East Dyfed and 57 children in Wales were notified as having been born with heart or circulatory system malformation.

Mr. Williams: I find those figures quite incredible. I am sure that the true figures are far higher. The Minister is aware that there are no facilities in Wales to treat children with congenital heart defects and that, whenever they require surgery, they are flown to Bristol, Southampton, or London. Since 1981 the Government have accepted that a paediatric cardiology unit should be set up in Cardiff at the Heath hospital. However, year after year, we have had only promises that it will be set up. May we have an assurance that that unit will be set up during 1988?

Mr. Speaker: Briefly, please.

Mr. Williams: During the Christmas recess I met the parents of Stefan Jones from Napier, who, at eight months, was diagnosed as having a hole in the heart. Now, at five years of age——

Mr. Speaker: Briefly, please.

Mr. Williams: What does the Secretary of State have to say to Stefan Jones?

Mr. Grist: There is no doubt that babies and their parents in such circumstances are in a most distressing position. It is also fair to observe that the operations about which we are talking are, on the whole, extremely expensive, extremely skilled and relatively new, so I could not honestly accuse Labour of not having provided these facilities. I hope, however, that the hon. Gentleman accepts that we are doing our best to bring such facilities to Cardiff. The Royal College of Physicians is to carry out a suvey of cardiac facilities in south Wales, and the South Glamorgan health authority is advertising for a consultant in this area.

As for those aged under one, on the advice of the royal colleges they will still go to Bristol, but, after the establishment of the cardiac centre in Cardiff, that could be reviewed.

Mrs. Clwyd: Does the Minister agree that it is lack of quality nursing care that results in delays in operations for hole-in-the-heart patients such as my constituent, Mrs. Keenan, who wrote to me this week saying that twice she had been prepared for surgery at the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff and twice she had been told that the operation was off because of a lack of nursing staff and beds? Do the Government realise what anxiety and stress this causes already very sick patients? Surely there is no sense in the Government's reducing spending on nurses' training, as they have in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: I am sure the hon. Lady will also accept that the number of nurses in Wales has increased under this Government by about 3,000. She might, therefore, see the sense of trying to re-order the pay structure so that people are prepared to take on the special skills required in areas such as those about which she has spoken.

Mr. Roy Hughes: Does the Minister appreciate that people expect something more than crocodile tears from him? There is now serious concern about the lack of urgency associated with providing these badly needed facilities for young children. Can he imagine the expense and inconvenience of taking a young child to Southampton or to London? When will we have such facilities in Wales? Is this not yet another example of underfunding the NHS?

Mr. Grist: Not at all. I think that the hon. Gentleman does a disservice to the medical profession that provides such skills. As I said in my answer, 57 children fell into this category at the last count in South Wales. That is a small but desperately important number, which helps to explain some of the problems that are faced.

Public Library Service (Funding)

8. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether there will be an incentive funding scheme for the public library service in Wales to match the £750,000 scheme announced by the Office of Arts and Libraries for England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I intend to observe the progress of this innovatory scheme in England and in the light of that consider whether a similar scheme might be appropriate for Wales.

Mr. Raffan: Will my hon. Friend tell the House for how long he intends to observe the progress of the scheme in England? Does he agree that it could be of particular benefit to the two joint authority schemes currently under consideration in Wales: the future development of the Welsh regional library service, and the development of a regional business information scheme based on the National Library of Wales?

Mr. Roberts: The current scheme involves an expenditure of some £250,000, as opposed to the £750,000 mentioned in my hon. Friend's question, and it is over a period of three years. We shall very soon see whether a similar scheme would be appropriate for Wales. Meanwhile, we expect the library authorities in Wales to be alive to the need to promote co-operation and collaboration, as the scheme will, we hope, do in England. We are currently considering the business information service to be provided by the National Library on a regional basis, and my right hon. Friend is giving it very active consideration.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

"Crockford's Clerical Directory"

24. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the commissioners' policy towards the commissioning of anonymous prefaces to Crockford's Clerical Directory, and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Adley: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the policy of the commissioners towards the commissioning of anonymous prefaces to Crockford's Clerical Directory, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Alison (Second Church Estates Commissioner, Representing Church Commissioners): The Church Commissioners and the Central Board of Finance took over the publication of Crockford's from the Oxford University Press in 1984. It had been a long-standing position to include in each edition an anonymous preface in which the author was given complete freedom to express his personal views. Although some earlier prefaces had proved controversial, the extent of the controversy over the current edition is clearly quite exceptional, and, in the circumstances, the commissioners and the Central Board of Finance will be reviewing the arrangements to be made for future editions.

Mr. Greenway: May I pay tribute to the late Dr. G Bennett, whom I knew for over 20 years, for his ma of theology, his erudition and his warm and passionate personality? May I ask my right hon. F whether Crockford's prefaces, which have been so val over the years, will continue, and whether the Ch Commissioners will consider giving their authors option to be open or anonymous? If anonymity is ch will it be respected in all circumstances?

Mr. Alison: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's kind well-judged words about the late Dr. Gareth Bennett, I am sure that what he has said will be widely appreci at least in Church of England circles.

The question of anonymity is to be reviewed. My Friend's idea of an option of identification or anony will certainly be considered by the commissioners.

Mr. Adley: As a background to the affair, does my hon. Friend agree that, up and down the cou thousands of parish priests are selflessly giving dedic service to their parishioners, but that many feel that work is being undermined by a handful of politi motivated bishops?

Mr. Alison: My hon. Friend has switched the ta slightly from the anonymous author of the Crockfo preface, now known to be Dr. Bennett, to the bishop the Church of England. I entirely endorse his view that heart and soul of the Church of England are the milli of parishioners who get on with the daily work Christian living and worshipping in their parish churc As for my hon. Friend's more controversial point ab the bishops, I am only too glad when conservative bish speak out in a Conservative frame. However, controv has always been a feature of the Christian religion.

Mr. Frank Field: Will the right hon. Gentleman al me to say that the preface was a serious piece of w which the Church would do well to consider carefully its next meeting of Synod and beyond? Does he agree t having a preface that is unsigned can led to unfortun consequences when the person has to lie about whether is the author? Should the Church not take that i account when it considers the next edition?

Mr. Alison: I am grateful to the hon. Member for contribution to this point. As he knows, he featu personally in the preface. In weighing the points that has made, I should point out that Dr. Bennett was at pa in the preface to praise and laud the standard and traditi of anonymity, which he said he found useful and helpf At the same time, if it leads to anonymous authors havi to repudiate their authorship by lying, the Chu Commissioners will obviously have to consider that po in the future.

Mr. Stokes: Does my right hon. Friend agree that t importance here is the substance of the preface, n whether it was anonymous, which is no concern of t House? In view of the present difficulties of the Churc does my right hon. Friend also agree that, although so of us may criticise the hierarchy from time to time, it sure behoves us to do all that we can to back up the good a godly men who deal with Church of England affairs?

Mr. Alison: I agree wholeheartedly with my ho Friend's comments. In this case, the preface to Crockfor was an exceptionally vigorous and stimulating analysis a wide range of issues, including the wider implications for the Anglican communion and certain practices in Anglican churches overseas. It was well worth reading and writing.

Mr. Cormack: Is it not a great pity that more people did not behave with the dignified restraint that the Archbishop of Canterbury showed when the preface was published? Would it not also be a good thing if more of those who talked about it read it?

Mr. Alison: I agree with my hon. Friend on both points.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff (Wages and Conditions of Service)

26. Mr. Skinner: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, whether there are any plans to review the wages and conditions of those staff working in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith (on behalf of the House of Commons Commission): Under the requirements of the House of Commons (Administration) Act 1978, the grading and pay of staff of the House are kept broadly in line with those in the home Civil Service and are linked appropriately. Pay of staff of the House is reviewed at the same time as, and in line with, that in the Civil Service.

Under similar provisions, the other conditions of staff of the House are kept broadly in line with those in the Home Civil Service. These are reviewed from time to time and changes may be applied after management has taken account of the circumstances of the House, in consultation, as appropriate, with the trade unions.

Mr. Skinner: Will the deputy leader of the official wing of the Liberal party, if he can wrest himself away from all these merger talks——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Member is answering for the Commission.

Mr. Skinner: That is his title. Will the hon. Gentleman bear in mind that some of the wages and conditions of staff who work in the House—those who clock on and off, unlike hon. Members—are paltry by standards outside? Will he also bear in mind that recently there have been several instances of staff being treated, particularly by Tory Members, as if it was "Upstairs Downstairs"? They are being treated like servants. Will he draw the attention of his colleagues to that fact and stop this nonsense?

Mr. Beith: I knew that I can rely on the hon. Gentleman to offer me a friendly and encouraging word on matters outside the terms of reference of the Commission.

The day-to-day working of the Refreshment Department, as with that of other Departments of the House, is a matter for the head of that Department, but, in my view, the pay and conditions of staff compare favourably with those elsewhere in the public sector and outside. If the hon. Gentleman has particular cases to pursue, he ought to pursue them with the head of the Refreshment Department—as I know that he has in an individual case—or with the Chairman of the Catering Sub-Committee.

Mr. Boyes: Will the hon. Member accept that, particularly at Christmas time, the Members' kiosk has very long queues and that the staff work exceptionally hard for what is not satisfactory, but highly unsatisfactory, pay? Will he consider whether, at times such as Christmas, those members of staff ought to go on to a commission basis, as well as receiving their wages?

Mr. Beith: I agree with the hon. Gentleman that the staff in the kiosk worked extremely hard for hon. Members during that busy period before Christmas. The provision of the kiosk is a matter for the Services Committee. I shall see that all concerned are aware of the hon. Gentleman's representations.

Scottish Affairs Committee

27. Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the most up-to-date figure available to him for the total expenditure on staffing, pensions and related matters incurred since the beginning of the current Session in connection with the Scottish Affairs Committee.

Mr. Beith: No expenditure has been incurred since the beginning of this Session specifically in connection with the Scottish Affairs Committee. Staff in the Department of the Clerk of the House are available for a wide range of duties, not just the service of particular Committees.

Mr. Allen: The staffing arrangements have continued despite the fact that the Select Committee system has not been set up for six months, and the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs has still not been set up. Costs must be incurred for those people, not just for the six months, but for the remaining five years of this Parliament. Leaving aside the obscenity of the fact that Scottish colleagues do not have a Select Committee of their own, which they should, will the hon. Gentleman take away the consideration that he has the right to report to the House and make representations to the Leader of the House on the fact that more than £1 million has been wasted on the Select Committee system? Will the hon. Gentleman bring back a report from the House of Commons Commission as soon as possible?

Mr. Beith: The hon. Gentleman asked about the Scottish Affairs Committee. The two members of staff who were provisionally allocated to work for it are now working for other Committees. Should the Committee subsequently be set up, it will be the responsibility of the head of the Department concerned to ensure that staff are made available for its work.

Mr. Heffer: Is there likely to be consideration of a reversal of the position whereby subcontractors are brought in for cleaning the House, and so on, when those who used to work for the House——

Mr. Speaker: Order. That subject would have come more happily under the first question. This question is about the Scottish Affairs Committee.

Mr. Heffer: I did try.

Souvenir Kiosk

28. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what were the takings of the House of Commons kiosk in (a) the four weeks to Christmas 1987 and (b) for the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Irving (The Chairman of the Catering Sub-Committee): I have been asked to reply.

The takings of the House of Commons kiosk in the four weeks to Christmas 1987 were £183,620; the equivalent figure for takings in the calendar year to Christmas 1987 was £525,796. The kiosk did not, of course, operate during the period when the House was dissolved for the general election. Both figures include VAT at 15 per cent. We hope that we will have another record year at the end of this financial year.

Mr. Greenway: May I congratulate my hon. Friend and all those concerned upon those excellent and amazing figures and ask whether the staff will get bonus payments? May I also thank him and his Committee for introducing fudge to the House of Commons during the past year, but may I ask why it costs £2·50 a tin, whereas down the road one can buy the same quantity for only £1? Why is House of Commons fudge so expensive?

Mr. Irving: My hon. Friend, who is an expert at fudge, will realise that there is a vast difference between quality and quantity.

Mr. Dalyell: Would it be a good idea to put The House Magazine on sale at the kiosk? What is the position of The House Magazine, which carries the imprimatur of the coat of arms of Parliament? Is it purely a private enterprise venture? May we know who financed the pulping of a whole issue of the magazine and why a whole issue——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that that is the responsibility of the Chairman of the Catering Sub-Committee, although it was in order to ask him whether the magazine should be put on sale in the kiosk.

Ten-Minute Bills

29. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will table a motion for the appointment of a Procedure Committee to consider moving the allotted time for the introduction of ten-minute rule Bills to the end of a day's business; and if he will make a statement.

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): No, Sir, but consideration of any such specific proposal would be within the remit of a Procedure Committee with general terms of reference.

The ten-minute rule Bill procedure is an important way whereby a Back Bencher can draw the attention of the House to a matter to which he attaches particular importance. From this point of view, transferring the procedure to the end of business would rob it of some of its value.

Mr. Hanley: Does my right hon. Friend agree that public business at the start of our proceedings is too often delayed by the over-indulgence of hon. Member's raising bogus points of order? Would it not be more appropriate to have it just before the Adjournment debate, as was done during the Session of 1966-67?

Mr. Wakeham: The question of points of order is a slightly different matter, and it is not one for me. I am not aware of any general dissatisfaction with the present timing of ten-minute Bills. However, it is something that the Procedure Committee could look at.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the Leader of the House confirm that the Procedure Committee, of which I am a member, produced a report before the summer recess that dealt with all these issues in detail and made a recommendations? Is it not true that the reasc report was not brought before the House w Leader of the House was worried that if the P Official Information Bill that we debated last gone through, the proposals in our report, if ca House, would have meant that the House woul more time on Report to deal with amendment and that that would have secured its passage that Bill is out of the way, why does the Gentleman not bring that report forward this

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does this question hav to do with ten-minute Bills?

Mr. Tony Banks: My hon. Friend took 10 ask it.

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Gentleman is chas —this matter has little to do with ten-minute regard to Procedure Committee reports, I hav to the House that I have proposals as to how b with these matters. I am having discussions with channels and I hope to make progress soon.

Dr. Glyn: When the Procedure Committee si right hon. Friend ask it to consider recomme reintroduction of the 10-minute limit on speech knows, in 1979 and 1984 the House agreed speeches to 10 minutes——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The subject is ten-mi rather than speeches. However, I agree with Gentleman about 10-minute speeches.

Mr. Wakeham: This is certainly a matter to attach importance, and we want to get on with as possible.

Select Committees

30. Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Presiden Council if he will make it his policy to review the of Select Committees at the end of the current Ses if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Since the establishment of th Select Committee system in 1979, the Liaison Co has made periodic reports to the House on the o of Select Committees. In so far as they are Hous this would seem to be the appropriate form of r

Mr. Allen: Does the Leader of the House h further comment to make, given that on Friday his colleagues were drawing attention to the ever-p Executive versus Parliament? Is he aware that monons delay in setting up Select Committees ai abetted his colleagues on Friday in arguing for a Parliament? Will he bring forward a report to ens the teeth of the Select Committees are sharpened we can hold the Government to account?

Mr. Wakeham: No, Sir. I have no proposals forward a report. It is a matter that the Liaison Co could consider, and we shall be interested in anyth it says.

Mr. Gow: Has my right hon. Friend conside relationship between members of Select Committ those of Standing Committees? Is my right hon.

aware that many hon. Members are members of Select Committees and of the two Standing Committees, which are all meeting at the same time?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise that, from time to time, this causes considerable difficulties, and my admiration goes to those hon. Members who manage to do a great deal of work. This is more a matter for the Committee of Selection than for me.

Mr. Wigley: The difficulties that have been experienced in the past six months could have been avoided if the Select Committees on Scottish Affairs in particular, and that on Welsh Affairs, had reflected a balance of membership from Scotland and Wales, and not from the balance of the House. As reports must eventually come to the Floor of the House, cannot the House be flexible enough to adopt that approach?

Mr. Wakeham: I am all for flexibility in these matters, but unless Select Committees reflect the broad balance of opinion within the House they will not be acceptable to it. I believe that that is the right principle for all Select Committees.

All-Party Groups

31. Mr. Adley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will propose to the House rules to require that the membership of all-party groups conforms to that nomenclature; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Towards the end of the previous Parliament the Services Committee instructed the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee to investigate and report on the desirability of introducing new rules to regulate the formation, constitution and proceedings of all-party groups. This investigation was cut short by the general election, but I understand that the new Sub-Committee intends to re-examine the matter shortly.

Mr. Adley: Will my right hon. Friend accept that I am talking about groups of parliamentarians and not outside groups? Does he agree that a group of parliamentarians that includes no Members of the Labour party, the Liberal party, the Social Democratic party, the Scottish National party and Plaid Cymru cannot call itself an all-party group, and that were it to do so it would be likely to be in breach of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968?

Mr. Wakeham: I agree with my hon. Friend that an all-party group should be what it claims to be. That was the only stipulation made by the Services Committee in its 1984 report. These are exactly the matters which the Sub-Committee will be considering.

Mr. Dobson: May I express the hope that the Leader of the House will ensure that a number of purportedly all-party groups that apply themselves to South africa and Namibia are genuinely all-party? When I last examined their composition it seemed that all the parties that they claim to represent are the parties to which Mr. Botha belongs.

Mr. Wakeham: I am not sure whether that is a correct analysis. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will have some constructive part to play in the discussions that will take place with a view to ensuring that all-party groups command the general respect of the House.

Points of Order

3.32 pm

Mrs. Llin Golding (Newcastle-under-Lyme): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I ask you to use your influence with the Prime Minister and ask her to change her mind and to meet the parents and children——

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a matter for me. If the hon. Lady is called tomorrow during Prime Minister's Question Time, she can put the question directly to the Prime Minister.

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Can you give advice, Mr. Speaker, about the way in which constituents can redress their grievances? A large group of parents, with their children, are proceeding to 10 Downing street to present a petition. They are concerned over the delay in their children being admitted to the Birmingham children's hospital——

Mr. Speaker: Order. What possible point of order arises from what the hon. Gentleman has said? The issue to which he is referring is not a matter of order. There are other opportunities to raise such matters, opportunities that do not involve me.

Mr. Tam Dalyell: (Linlithgow): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The matter that I wish to raise arises from Question 28. You, Mr. Speaker, are involved indirectly through the learned Clerk of the House, who is a member of the advisory board of The House Magazine. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to clarify the status of The House Magazine. It carries the imprimatur of Parliament yet we are told that it is a private venture. If private ventures carry the arms of the Houses of Parliament, the Houses of Parliament, directly or indirectly, are involved. Indeed, another member of the advisory board is the Librarian. There is some relationship between the House and The House Magazine.

I am concerned about the finances and other matters arising from a decision of the editor of The House Magazine, the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack), whom I am glad to see in his place, to pulp the pre-Christmas edition of The House Magazine. The decision was taken off his own bat for the ostensible reason that a review sought from a professor of journalism who is a regular contributor to The Times, contained references to certain assertions that appear on page 196 of a book written by Peter Jenkins. It is on that page that Mr. Jenkins asserts that a telephone conversation took place between two——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is this a point of order for me?

Mr. Dalyell: How can it be that reference to a telephone conversation between Sir Brian Hayes, Grand Companion of the Bath——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is going into too much detail. Unlike some of the hon. Gentleman's colleagues on both sides of the House, I am not on the editorial board of The House Magazine. If the hon. Gentleman wants an answer to his questions, he should table a question to the Leader of the House, who doubtless will be briefed to answer it. I cannot answer the hon. Gentleman's questions.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): Further to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) has sought to purs

Australia (Bicentennial Gift)

3.36 pm

The Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the Ho Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): I beg to move,

That an humble Address be presented to Her M praying that Her Majesty will give directions that, to m Bicentenary in 1988 of the first European settlem Australia and the opening of the new Parliament Ho Canberra, a gift of a Vice-Regal Chair be made, on be both Houses of Parliament, to the Parliament Commonwealth of Australia.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Who will ta chair?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. Member must not across the Chamber. If he is called, he can ma comments, but he should not do so from a sed position.

Mr. Wakeham: To mark the bicentennial of th European settlement in Australia, I am happy to mo motion to seek the House's authorisation for a joi from this House and another place of a vice-regal ch the Australian Parliament. The chair will stand Senate Chamber of the new Parliament in Canberra, will be opened this year as one of the major na projects commemorating the bicentenary.

The chair will be a fitting symbol of the comm between Australia and this country. These links hav lasted 200 years, and I am sure the House will join sending the heartiest congratulations to the Parli and people of Australia on this occasion. We hope th close relationship will last for many years to come.

3.38 pm

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): I jo Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the House of Comm supporting this proposal to mark what is described motion as the 200th anniversary of "the first European settlement of Australia."

It is an event that scarcely resounds to the credit House, involving as it did the House 200 year sanctioning the carrying away of British citizens most degrading circumstances and dumping th Australia. It led to the destruction of the way of li many of the lives of the original inhabitants.

Having observed these occasions previously, I m that there is always a touch of the patronising abo relationships with Commonwealth Parliament particular, hon. Members frequently misquote a ref to this place being the mother of parliaments. Wha actually said was "England — mother of Parliam and I am glad to say that we all salute Australia mother of the Australian Parliament. In many Australia's democratic development ran ahead of ou in terms of the people who were allowed to vote, a always welcomed the support that the Australian l movement gave to the development of democracy country.

In any case, what we are doing today is o reciprocal gesture to the Commonwealth of Aus because you, Mr. Speaker, are today sitting in a which was the gift of the Commonwealth of Au when this Chamber was rebuilt at the end of the s world war. So I am sure that all my hon. Friends jo in wishing Australia well.

[Mr. Frank Dobson]

For people of my generation there is always a sort of ambivalence towards Australia. My first thought of Australia was of men dressed in peculiar green caps, led by a man called Bradman, who let loose two men called Lindwall and Miller on the England cricket team. Since then most of us have come to recognise that Australia has made a substantial contribution not only to sport but to art and literature—and, more latterly, to the task of making people the world over laugh at themselves and others.

We wish the people of Australia well. We hope that all the people of Australia will benefit from the renewal of the Australian Commonwealth, including the aboriginal people who have not done well. On a personal note, may I add that my best wishes to all the people of Australia will be made that much more sincere by the knowledge that Mr. Rupert Murdoch is now an American citizen.

3.43 pm

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): While endorsing part of what my hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) has said, I do not think we should allow this occasion to pass, or this gift go to Australia, without concerning ourselves with the rights of the aboriginal people. Recently, a Minister quite rightly made public representations about the position of the Palestinian people, pointing out their plight in Israel—or Palestine. We have a responsibility on this occasion to concern ourselves with the rights of the aboriginal people.

After all, it was the British who entered Botany bay and established the penal servitude colonies, and it is the British who have a responsibility for this issue. Before the House agrees to a bicentennial gift of a vice-regal chair for the Australian Commonwealth, we should agree that the humble Address to Her Majesty should include a reference to the position of the Australian aborigine people, and that that message should be conveyed to them from this House.

The House must be aware of the tensions that have been created among the aboriginal people by the bicentennial celebrations. Some of them believe they should be granted the right of self-determination. That is a demand that cannot and should not be ignored. Professor Reynolds, a professor of history at the university of Townsville, Queensland, has written several books on the position of the aborigines. In his third book, "The Law of the Land", he describes how, when South Australia was settled in the 1830s, the Colonial Office instructed that the aborigines should be compensated for the loss of land that had been taken from them and occupied. That has never happened. The present Government of Australia — [Interruption.] What I am saying is important to a group of people in the world who are fighting for their rights, and we have a responsibility because we are about to send a gift. If hon. Members show lack of interest, that will be conveyed to the people of Australia.

Although the Government of Australia announced in December that they would provide the first legal acknowledgement of aborigine prior land ownership and disfranchisement, it will be only a preamble to the Bill and not the treaty for which the aborigines have asked. Professor Reynolds quotes a Western Australian pioneer of the 1880s who warned his fellow colonialists:

"Think not that the Aboriginal inhabitants of Australia"—and as a Christian he made this point—

"offspring of the same parent with yourselv of all the kindred feelings of a common class, in the same way that the convicts and people who were sent to Australia, did. Many were not, according to our interpretation today, convicts; they were just victims of that nasty class system that prevailed in the 18th and 19th centuries and still exists today. Following what the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) said, I make the point that there is a certain arrogance in us acting as if Captain Cook discovered Australia. He went there 200 years ago and found a country that aborigines had been living in, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) said, for 40,000 years.

If the humble Address is also to be sent, I hope that it will include a protest on behalf of many animal lovers at the cruel slaughter of kangaroos and horses. [Interruption.] Hon. Members might sneer, but many people are concerned about the inhumane treatment of kangaroos and elephants in Australia, shot by people leaning out of helicopters. If we are to send any form of humble Address with the chair, we should send, on behalf of all animal lovers, a protest and hope that the Australians will take a more civilised attitude to the wildlife they are fortunate to have in that great country.

3.53 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): The House of Commons should be discriminating about exactly what we celebrate. I declare something of a personal interest, in that there are many more people of my name in the Sydney and Melbourne telephone books than in the telephone books of Edinburgh and Glasgow. That is because many Scots, including some of my family, were despatched to Australia for dissent. My hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) has put a serious case about the treatment of aborigines. Many people were sent to Australia against their will from these islands, and they would find it odd that 200 years later the democratically elected House of Commons is sending the gift and address.

At the end of the first world war, a distinguished Australian, Dr. Elsie Dalywell, was the greatest expert on rickets. She came here with the ANZAC forces and told my parents about the history of our family who arrived in Australia. It was not only uncomfortable but there was a good deal of oppression. Anybody who has followed the writings of Professor Kenneth Cable and others will know that what I am saying is historically correct. There is a serious question about whether the House of Commons should be celebrating the 200th anniversary, because of what happened to our people who were sent to Australia and what happened to the aborigines. Let us celebrate those things that ought to be celebrated and be a bit careful about what we are doing.

3.54 pm

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): I want to know who will take the gift. Will you, Mr. Speaker, be selecting the people who take the humble Address and the chair? Will it be the usual channels? Will any of those 20 rebels who voted against the Tory establishment on Friday be selected, or have they lost their opportunity? Has the Chief Whip already decided that they have no chance? Will the humble Address be taken when there is a test m If there is to be a Liberal or somebody from the who will pick that person? Will that person come provisional wing, from the official wing or merged party, if they achieve a merged party? selection be delayed until the Liberals and S sorted themselves out?

St. Christopher and Nevis (Gift of Speaker's Chair and Desk)

3.58 pm

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): I beg to move,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that Her Majesty will give directions that there be presented on behalf of this House a gift of a Speaker's Chair and Desk to the National Assembly of St. Christopher and Nevis, and assuring Her Majesty that this House will make good the expenses attending the same.

It is a tradition that this House offers a present, suitable for use in a legislative assembly, to the Parliaments of Commonwealth countries to mark their independence. I am happy to move this motion to give formal authorisation for such a gift. The present of a Speaker's chair and desk to the National Assembly of St. Christopher and Nevis was agreed after consultation with the authorities there, and will soon be ready for presentation. It is hoped that, subject to the completion of the work, it will be on display to hon. Members in the Upper Waiting Hall early in March.

I commend this motion as an expression of the friendship and good will of this House to the National Assembly of St. Christopher and Nevis. I am sure that I speak for the whole House in expressing the warmest good wishes for the future of the Parliament and people of those islands.

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): Again, I join the Lord President in the wish to send a Speaker's chair and desk to the National Assembly of St. Kitts and Nevis. Again, too, it must be said that the first allegedly civilising effect of European involvement was the extermination of the original population who, for the sake of profit, were replaced by human slaves from Africa, a proposition endorsed time and again by the then undemocratic House of Commons.

As with the gift to Australia, there is also an element of reciprocation. When this House was rebuilt after its destruction during the second world war, we received from the Leeward Islands, of which St Kitts and Nevis formed part, a gift of oak lamp standards now to be seen in the two Lobbies.

Orders of the Day

Criminal Justice Bill [Lords]

Order for Second Reading read.

4.3 pm

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hurd): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Mr. Speaker: I have selected the amendment in the name of the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hurd: This is the second time that much of the Bill before us has been debated by the House. With agreement on all sides, it proved possible, before the general election intervened, to enact the important provisions in the earlier Bill on serious fraud, and that was welcomed. After the election, we took two decisions—first, to reintroduce the rest of the Bill as soon as possible, and, secondly, to use the inevitable short delay to strengthen the Bill substantially. The new proposals in it illustrate the reinforcement since the general election of the priority that we give to action against crime.

I should like to concentrate today on the additions and improvements. The earlier Bill had completed its passage through this House after what the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman), who is not easily given to compliments, was moved to describe as a "model Committee stage", so it is perhaps natural that we should pay the closest attention today to the new material which has not been before the House before.

First, however, I should mention one thread which runs through both this Bill and its predecessor — the international dimension of crime. Improved travel links and communications have created dramatic opportunities for large-scale international crime, and we are still only at the start of coping with this. The criminal leaps across countries and continents while his pursuer still stumbles, argues and delays as he reaches a frontier or a different legal system. I was forcefully reminded of this during a recent visit to north Africa. Drug trafficking, fraud and terrorism are no longer local problems, if they ever were. They have to be tackled across frontiers.

The Bill responds to this reality in several ways. It reforms our antiquated laws on extradition. Among our friends, many regard Britain as a haven for criminals and that is a reputation that we must shake off. The single most significant impediment to extradition from this country is the requirement that the foreign state should provide in our courts evidence which would amount to a prima facie case for committal for trial, had the case been prosecuted here.

Mr. John Wheeler (Westminster, North): I apologise for intervening at such an early stage, but my right hon. Friend has touched on the subject of extradition. I ask him to make some reference in his statement to the concern on both sides of the House that there are persons residing in the United Kingdom against whom grave allegations have been made in connection with war crimes. I hope that my right hon. Friend will be able to give us some idea how those cases will be dealt with.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend has intervened a little early. We have sought to see whether extradition could be part of the answer to the problem that he has desc far we have concluded that it is not. Neverthe Friend touches on a matter that I have discus right hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, Rees), chairman of the war crimes grou colleagues. It is a matter that the Government and are still studying very carefully. It is t matter for it to be allowed to drop, but I belie work is needed before we can decide whethe in what way the law needs to be changed. I not propose to bring forward a Government to this Bill to deal with that matter. As the m be allowed to drop, I propose to let the House Report exactly how we intend to pursue the m that my hon. Friend will be content with that being.

Other countries, particularly, perhaps, European partners, with different legal traditi standards of justice which are not inferior to o the requirements of our extradition rule difficult to meet. Therefore, the Bill contain dispense selectively with the prima facie requ have responded to proper concerns that that s done haphazardly and that there should safeguards for the fugitive.

During the passage of the earlier Bill, we extradition arrangements which dispense wit facie requirement should be subject to p approval. When the present Bill was in anoth matter was raised quite strongly and furthe were added for the fugitive. He is now to hav right to see the papers on which the extraditi There will be a statutory right to make repres the Secretary of State and a guaranteed per days in which to seek judicial review of the State's order for his surrender.

Mr. James Molyneaux (Lagan Valley): T of State will be aware that there has been m of the legislation that has finally been passed Dublin Parliament on this score. Can he exp way the prima facie requirement that he has in this Bill differs from that which is now in Irish Republic?

Mr. Hurd: Yes. We are proposing to remo legislation the prima facie agreement selective I have described. When I saw the right hon. Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux) in the Chamb it possible that he would intervene on this p be aware, from what my right hon. Friend Minister and, I think, my right hon. and lea the Attorney-General have said, of the misgiv had about the form in which the Dail eventua legislation. We are in the process of seeing h in practice. However, I do not believe that th Gentleman will expect me at this stage to comments that have already been made.

Mr. Alex Carlile (Montgomery): The Hon will be aware that no British subject, or any that matter, can be committed for trial by a country unless the prosecution has establish facie case against him. Will he explain why he a lower standard should be applied to British foreign nationals committed for trial abro words, will he explain why it will no longer be necessary for a prima facie case to be proved against them? I believe that that is inequitable.

Mr. Hurd: The hon. and learned Gentleman has made that point before. He is really assuming that the procedures and standards of justice in other countries with which we might make agreements which must be discussed in this House are in some way inferior to the procedures in this country; otherwise, his question would not arise.

Mr. Carlile: Not at all.

Mr. Hurd: The hon. and learned Gentleman had better pursue his point later.

I believe that, when the House agrees that standards of justice are of equal validity, it is reasonable to make arrangements to dispense with the prima facie rules. I am frankly not happy with the situation in which we give haven in this country to a number of people who are, to put it mildly, in serious trouble in countries with highly respected judicial systems simply because those countries are unable to frame their requests in language and terms that meet our present law. The hon. and learned Gentleman may be aware of the particular cases that I had in mind. The response to the case for safeguards which both he and his hon. Friends argued for, in this House when the earlier Bill was discussed, and in another place more recently, meets his concerns.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): I apologise for interrupting my right hon. Friend, but we have not disposed of the matter concerning the recent legislation introduced in the Republic of Ireland. Some of that legislation depends upon reciprocal action by the British Government. May we accept that no proposals will be made to alter our extradition arrangements with the Republic of Ireland at least in the foreseeable future and within this Bill?

Mr. Hurd: I believe that my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has made clear the difficulty that he sees in playing the part envisaged for him in the Dail's arrangements because, in his view, they do not meet our requirements satisfactorily. The question is how that legislation works in practice. My hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) would not dissent from the fact that it is very important that the back-to-back arrangements with the Republic of Ireland should work as smoothly as possible. That is in the interests of both Governments. We must see how that can be achieved now that the Irish Government have taken their line.

The impact of the Bill on international crime does not begin and end with extradition. Part VI provides for reciprocal arrangements to be made for the international enforcement of confiscation orders, thus ensuring that crime will not pay wherever the proceeds may be secreted or invested. Part III establishes new procedures for taking and receiving evidence from abroad.

Mr. John Gorst (Hendon, North): Before my right hon. Friend leaves the issue of extradition, may I state that his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) a moment ago did not go far enough in one respect because, as the Lord Chancellor said in another place, before the prima facie requirement is dispensed with

> "there must be a mutual recognition . . . that the system of justice in the foreign state is sufficiently acceptable to enable this requirement . . . to be dispensed with." — [Official Report, House of Lords, 17 November 1987; Vol. 490, c. 114.]

That begs the question of how it is decided that a foreign state has a system that is acceptable.

I draw my right hon. Friend's attention to the fact that I have found—and other hon. Members have found—the system of justice in Sweden to be totally unacceptable in the way in which it has handled not only a British national but, from the volume of correspondence, Swedish nationals. How will the process be arrived at when extradition matters are considered in future?

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend has kept me in touch with his views about the Swedish system arising from a particular case in which he has legitimately taken a strong interest. Obviously, any Home Secretary and his colleagues would form a view of that matter. However, during the passage of the earlier Bill, we agreed that extradition arrangements that dispensed with the prima facie agreement would be subject to parliamentary approval. That means that my hon. Friend and his colleagues in this and in another place would have to approve specific agreements and therefore the kind of misgivings——

Mr. Alex Carlile: Once?

Mr. Hurd: Yes, indeed, that is right — once an agreement is made.

That opportunity is a reasonable way in which to allow parliamentary scrutiny of the proposal. I hope that the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) will not be too chauvinistic about this. This is very important. Possibly the hon. and learned Gentleman underestimates the sense of affront felt by some of our friends when they are told that only by surmounting a hurdle defined purely in English terms which they find remarkably difficult, even though their systems are not inferior to ours, will they receive into their jurisdiction people that they believe have committed serious crimes. They find that very patronising. It also works the other way. It makes it difficult for us to negotiate agreements with them to allow us to bring back into our jurisdiction people we want because they have committed serious crimes. I am not sure whether the hon. and learned Gentleman has addressed himself to the serious background to the problem.

I want this country to set the pace in international agreements and action to grip international crime. I believe that this is an area in which strides have had to be made and are being made, partly because we have shown ourselves to be a Government enthusiastic for more effective co-operation in this area in the European Community and beyond. The Bill makes its own contribution in the ways that I have described.

Nearer to home, we have been increasingly anxious about the habitual carrying of knives in public. There has been a disastrous change in the street culture of our cities, which we simply have to reverse. In London, in the first half of 1987, robberies and street robberies involving sharp instruments increased by about 30 per cent. It is intolerable that, among an increasing proportion of our young people, the carrying of a knife should be regarded as normal. The police have represented to me forcefully that the present law on offensive weapons is too narrowly drawn. I am genuinely glad that the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) and his colleagues have shared our desire to respond to that concern. This is not a party matter.

As a result of amendments made in another place, the Bill contains in clause 128 a new offence of possessing a bladed or sharply pointed article in a public place without good reason, together with the necessary associated police powers to stop and search. That is a substantially more wide-ranging offence than the law contains at present. It is in my view no more and no less than the circumstances demand. The old, the vulnerable, the whole of the law-abiding community must feel confident that it is safe to go out on the streets without being stabbed. It follows that we must use this Bill to restrict the carrying of knives.

Yes, we are reversing the onus of proof. Yes, I understand that this a serious step to take. My colleagues and I searched in vain for an answer that would cause less offence to legal opinion but still prove strong enough. I firmly commend this clause to the House.

Mr. Robert Hayward (Kingswood): My right hon. Friend will be aware that I wrote to him and to the Lord Chancellor a few weeks ago about the carrying of knives and sentencing policy. Sentencing policy is covered in clauses 33, 34 and 35. Is it not the case that those powers will be substantially undermined unless strong powers of sentencing are provided and used? Otherwise, the public will feel that the powers provided in the Bill are not worth the paper on which they are written.

Mr. Hurd: The police have raised that aspect of their powers to stop and search. I shall ask my hon. Friend the Minister of State to deal with both those points, which deserve explanation. Having looked at both those powers — that of the police to stop and search, and the sentences available for the new offence of carrying a knife, but not the criminal use of it, which is a much more serious matter—one has to think carefully about the right level of penalty. My hon. Friend will explain the circumstances that were in our mind.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): Has the Home Secretary considered putting a ban on the sale of lethal weapons through mail order in circumstances in which no one could contemplate those weapons used for anything other than aggressive purposes? I have taken soundings from the members of the Advertising Standards Authority, and if Parliament gives a lead on the matter the ASA will not have the slightest difficulty in banning advertisements for brutal and lethal weapons which anyone can obtain through the post.

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Member wrestles with serious incidents of that kind far too often in his constituency.

In the Bill, we are taking power to prohibit, not only through mail order but absolutely, the manufacture, importation and sale of certain other types of offensive weapons. Knives have many legitimate uses, and I cannot see the logic of forbidding the sale through mail order of knives which have legitimate uses. As for other weapons, such as knuckledusters, death stars and handclaws, which have no conceivable legitimate use, we intend to block their supply at all points, whether through manufacture, sale or advertisement.

Mr. John Morris (Aberavon): Leaving aside the sale of knives by mail order, or weapons such as knuckledusters, is the Minister aware that there is a general concern that, apart from pocket knives, any child, however immature, can buy a large knife with impunity? How does he propose to use the regulations in clause 130 to limit at source the sale of such knives?

Mr. Hurd: We have thought hard about that. Many Governments have thought hard about it, and it is not easy. Many objects, including knives, have a perfectly legitimate use. In those circumstances, it is difficult to forbid their sale to particular categories of people, or through media such as mail order.

The Bill attempts to deal with the actual mischief, which is the carrying of such knives in a public place. For other offensive weapons for which there is no legitimate use, we propose to extend the list of those weapons and to clamp down on them in all their mainifestations. That is better than trying to establish, in every small corner shop, a system of licensing and control under which customers can buy a knife. There would be difficulties about the administrative complications of such a system. However, that point will rightly be argued in Committee and I have set out the conclusions that we believe are sensible.

At the heart of the Bill is a set of proposals for strengthening the procedures of justice. I would include in that category the abolition of peremptory challenge, a modest but important move to make people between the ages of 65 and 70 eligible for jury service, and the extension to other profitable offences of the scheme for confiscation of the proceeds of crime, which is already making its mark in drug trafficking cases. I shall forbear to rehearse my strong views on peremptory challenge, which certainly would bring the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery to his feet again. I expect that we shall hear from him on that point. I am encouraged by the readiness of their Lordships in another place to accept the reasonable proposition that we put to the House in the former Bill, which is repeated in this Bill.

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): Will my right hon. Friend confirm that that opinion was expressed not only in the other place but in the House on 31 March 1987? On Report, the House carried by 176 votes to 69 — a majority of more than two and a half to one — the abolition of peremptory challenge, an end desired by all sensible people except criminals, some lawyers and those on the extreme Left who have a temperamental liking for guilty people to be acquitted.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend is leading with his chin. I acknowledge that he has been a robust pioneer of that argument. I agree with his conclusions.

I shall concentrate on two aspects in which the Bill has been significantly strengthened. During the past few years, we have had many debates on how to deal with the occasional sentence that is too lenient. That is not a problem which has been raised by the Government for their own purposes. Unduly lenient sentences are few and far between. In the vast majority of cases — far more cases than the casual reader of newspapers would suppose —judges impose sentences which are in tune with what the public expect. In cases of serious crime, they have been steadily increasing the severity of their sentences. That is right and natural.

However, when a manifestly over-lenient sentence is passed, the damage to public confidence in the system is out of all proportion to the significance of the case. That is why the problem, though small in scale, is of great importance, and that is why we have been grappling with it so vigorously during the past three years. Both Houses of Parliament have had difficulties with that problem.

In the earlier Bill, we proposed that in such cases the Attorney-General should be able to refer the sentence to the Court of Appeal for its opinion, but without the offender being at risk of being dealt with more severely. The Minister of State, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), defended that proposal brilliantly in the House, and there was much more to be said for it than has generally been supposed. However, as compromises often are, it was poorly received.

Clause 34 contains a similar proposal, but with the vital difference that the Court of Appeal should be able to increase the sentence, if it thought it right to do so. That is a stronger proposal, both in effect and in logic. If a mistake has been made, it is clearly sensible that there should be a way in which it can be put right, not if the newspaper or if the Attorney-General want to do so, but if the Court of Appeal decides that it is right to do so.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): Does my right hon. Friend accept that my constituents thought it quite inadequate that someone should not have his sentence increased if that was found to be desirable? They are grateful to him for changing the Bill so that that can now be done.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend has followed this long and occasionally weary argument right through. I am glad that she is pleased with our conclusions.

The second procedural change to which I would draw the House's attention can be found in clause 41. At present the Court of Appeal can order that a case be tried again only in strictly limited circumstances, where new evidence has come to light. There is a strong case for a wider power to order a retrial — where, for example, a conviction would otherwise have to be quashed on a pure technicality, but the more just course would be for the matter to be tried again. The Bill therefore allows the court to order a retrial whenever it thinks it would be in the interests of justice to do so.

Perhaps at this point I should make a point about the right of silence.

Dr. Alan Glyn (Windsor and Maidenhead): There is a great deal of concern in the country that, when the driver of a motor vehicle kills somebody, there appears to be no machinery, even in this Bill, by which he can be charged with manslaughter if that is appropriate.

Mr. Hurd: It is for the prosecuting authorities, and particularly the Crown prosecution service, to decide on the appropriate charge. That is not always an easy task, especially in the circumstances that my hon. Friend has in mind. There is a wide choice available, and it must be for the independent prosecution service to decide what charges should be made. It will have regard to the evidence before it and what it thinks might succeed.

I deliberately provoked a discussion, beginning with a lecture to the Police Foundation in July, not on the right to silence, but on a recommendation made by the Criminal Law Revision Committee in 1972. The question in my mind is not whether a suspected or accused person should have a right to remain silent throughout investigation and trial—he has that right and should continue to have it—but whether, when an accused person ambushes the prosecution by producing at his trial a line of defence which he has not previously mentioned to the police, the court should be precluded from drawing reasonable inferences.

I have listened carefully to the lively discussion that has followed that lecture. I am not convinced by the argument in favour of continuing the right to ambush. The case for change is strong. I am also persuaded by some of the detailed points that have been made that more careful work must be done if there is to be change. This long and detailed Bill is not, I believe, the place for the provisions that would be needed.

I shall give the House particulars of the further work which I believe is necessary before the Bill leaves the House so that it has an opportunity to judge.

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): I am interested in the Home Secretary's expression. He said that, before the Bill leaves the House, he will give it particulars of his work. Does he mean that he proposes an amendment on Report?

Mr. Hurd: No, I do not propose an amendment on Report. I do not believe that this or any other long and detailed Bill is the place for the provisions that would be needed. Further work is needed. I have given the House an idea of the direction in which my mind is moving. I believe that the case for the right to ambush as it stands at present is not made out, but I also believe, in view of some of the points that have been made to me by people of many different strands of opinion, that, before the Home Secretary can tell the House that a certain change is the right one, we need some further work. I shall let the House know before the Bill leaves the House how I believe that work should be set in hand.

Mr. Alex Carlile: Is the right hon. Gentleman saying that, before the Bill leaves the House, he will tell us what work is to be done and what measures he wishes to achieve, or will he take the more appropriate course and have a period of consultation during which formal representations can be made?

Mr. Hurd: In effect, there will be both. I have had a good many formal and informal expressions of opinion from the Law Society and other legal bodies. When the work that I have in mind proceeds, those representations will continue. I am saying that there will not be an amendment to the Bill on the subject. I have told the House the line along which my mind is moving and I shall give further details of the work that I intend to set in hand.

One of the Bill's main aims is to improve the circumstances of victims of crime. It contains measures to encourage the courts to use compensation orders in a wider range of cases. It creates, for the first time, a statutory right to compensation, under the criminal injuries compensation scheme, for the victims of violent crime.

The group of victims who command greatest sympathy are probably children who suffer physical or sexual assault. That has been imprinted on our minds recently by a string of cases. I do not think that any hon. Member can read accounts of those cases without horror. Revulsion at the victimisation of children leads to a determination to do whatever we can to tackle it. We all feel that. It is true that legislation has only a limited part to play, but there are measures in the Bill which deal with this problem to which I should like to draw attention.

Clause 43 increases the maximum penalty for child cruelty or neglect from two years' imprisonment. When a child is assaulted, more serious charges will normally be brought, but we noticed fairly recently — perhaps it should have been noticed before — that cruelty and neglect can take many forms other than assault, such as starvation, and two years seems to us wholly inadequate in the worst cases. We therefore propose to substitute a maximum of 10 years.

Clause 30 would make it possible for a young child to give evidence by closed-circuit television in cases of violence or sexual assault. This was widely welcomed when the Bill came to the House before the election. For a young child to give evidence in a busy Crown court, perhaps in the presence of somebody who has cruelly assaulted him, must be a tremendous ordeal. The ability to give evidence from outside the court room should help to lessen the ordeal. It should be a humane step forward.

Clause 32 abolishes the strict requirement that the unsworn evidence of a child must invariably be corroborated. This is new. I made the proposal believing that it might be challenged but, on the whole, I have been reassured by the welcome that it has received. There is no evidence to suggest that children are inherently less reliable as witnesses than adults.

We intend to bring forward an amendment in Committee to make it an offence to possess indecent photographs of children. Child pornography victimises the children who are exploited by it, and I am afraid that it feeds the instincts which give rise to sexual abuse. It is already an offence to take, show or distribute indecent photographs. We are persuaded that it would be justified to criminalise simple possession in the hope of stamping out this degrading trade.

I should like to mention two other changes — one which we have already made, and one which we plan to make in Committee. Clause 118 creates a single custodial sentence for young offenders, to be known as detention in a young offender institution. It is strongly favoured by the Magistrates Association. It allows more effective use of the available accommodation, which is a crying need, and it is an idea whose time has come. We have made it clear that young offenders who have relatively short periods to serve after sentence will experience the brisk, structured regime which has been developed in detention centres.

I think that the Opposition know that we shall bring forward in Committee an amendment to provide a statutory right to compensation for those who have been wrongly convicted. We already comply with the spirit of our international obligations in non-statutory arrangements which have been outlined to the House previously. During debates in another place, we agreed to put those obligations on a statutory footing, and we intend to do so. As now, compensation will be payable when some new fact has emerged and when the normal working of the judicial system has not revealed the wrongful conviction.

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): I warmly welcome the single sentence, but am I to understand that it is to take the same form as that which we experienced heretofore in detention centres — a sentence which was used less and less by magistrates courts because of allegations about what happened in detention centres and the fact that it seemed to do the children involved little good?

Mr. Hurd: The proposal that we have made in the Bill has been warmly welcomed by the Magistrates Association. What I said was that, where a relatively short sentence is to be served, the regime will include the brisk, structured arrangements developed successfully in the detention centres.

Mr. Wheeler: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for having given way to me twice. I, too, welcome the concept of the single sentence. However, may I take my right hon. Friend back to the penalty for possession of indecent photographs and other material concerning juveniles and children? Will he consider extending that penalty to make such possession an arrestable offence, which I believe would be particularly welcome?

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend the Minister of State may have something to say about that when he winds up the debate. In any event, I shall consider it and write to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler).

I am grateful for the spirit of the interventions that have been made so far. On occasions such as this, the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) used to cast around for reasons to justify the fact that his party would vote against reasonable proposals. It sometimes seemed a matter of mere chance whether he would have thought of our proposals first, whether they were the most tyrannical proposals that anyone had ever put forward, or whether they were completely irrelevant to the real needs of the situation. I could write a tasteful anthology of the orations that he produced, but I hope that the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook will show a little more imagination.

I would not dream of claiming that any single measure could be the answer to crime, but that is really not an argument against single measures that contribute to such an answer. We must act on a wide front. We have in hand a programme of crime prevention on an unprecedented scale, with several new initiatives which we are hatching this spring. We are engaged in a substantial expansion of police strength. We have carried out a series of legislative reforms, such as the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, the Public Order Act 1986 and the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. But changing the law is only part of the picture. No change in the law was required to establish 42,000 neighbourhood watch schemes, to create 8,500 places on crime prevention projects under the community programme or to expand the police by nearly 19,000 officers and civilians since 1979.

The Bill is not — and could not be — a cure-all. However, it fits firmly within our general strategy. We have used the time created by the election to fashion a stronger and more complete measure. Across the broad sweep that I have described this afternoon — international crime, safer streets, the procedures of justice, children as victims and several other matters — the Bill reforms and strengthens. I believe that it will buttress the ramparts of the criminal justice system, and reinforce the protection of the citizen and his family. I commend it to the House.

4.42 pm

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): I beg to move, to leave out from "That" to the end of the Question and to add instead thereof:

"this House declines to give a Second Reading to a Bill which, by proposing changes in the law governing extradition, the selection of juries, remand and sentencing, would result in a substantial reduction in civil liberties, yet fails to address the fundamental question of equal rights under the law and equal access to the process of justice."

It is nearly two years since the Government published the principal White Paper on which the Bill is primarily based. Since then, the unremitting increase in crime has continued. On a year-by-year basis, the latest figures show that violence against the person has increased by 8·6 per cent., robbery by 7·2 per cent. and theft by 3·4 per cent. Over the same time, the proposals in the principal White Paper have been changed, revised, increased and reduced, and all sorts of other ideas have been canvassed.

Let me begin by asking the Home Secretary about the matters that we might have expected to appear in the Bill —because he initiated debates, because others made off-the-record briefings to newspapers or even as a result of reading the principal White Paper and the secondary White Paper concerning discipline in prisons.

I want first to press the Home Secretary on the half-answer that he gave on what, until today, was called the right of silence. The right hon. Gentleman has rechristened it the ambushing of the prosecution. I take it from what he has told the House that not only will he not introduce amendments on the subject at any stage, but that the Government would not support amendments of the cruder sort, which I have no doubt will be presented in Committee. If the Home Secretary will give me an assurance on that, I shall rest content.

I understand the right hon. Gentleman's difficulties. I realise why, having changed his mind on the subject, he must keep some of his Back Benchers optimistically believing that he will sooner or later change the law in this particular. However, I should like to ask about another subject, which has been canvassed not by the right hon. Gentleman introducing lectures, but by his Minister of State making a statement to yesterday's The Mail on Sunday at dictation speed, I assume that it came from the Minister of State—described in The Mail on Sunday as who, it said rather revealingly, had spent the last year tackling the symptoms of crime. That is certainly true: it is one of our charges against the Government. I assume that the statement was given to the newspaper by the Minister, because it portrays him as a combination of Elliot Ness and Dixon of Dock Green. That is a view that he may have of himself, but it is not widely shared in the House.

What the piece says — on, I believe, the Minister's authority — is that the Government are soon to introduce the electronic tag. That proposition is wrong in principle, and, on the evidence of the United States, farcical in application. Were we to be presented with such a proposition, I am advised that a change in the law would be needed. No such suggestion, however, appeared in today's Bill. Can we be told that this little bit of self-publicity does not represent Government policy, and that we can forget about that as well?

As I have said, I understand the Home Secretary's difficulties. Junior Ministers on the make normally cause such difficulties. In my time, I had the leader of the S Democratic party as my junior Minister, and, before the previous leader, which was even worse. But, i Home Secretary will make the position clear, I do think that any of us will wish to pursue it as if the Mi were a serious figure.

Other omissions, however, need to be pursued in r more detail, particularly the omission of any of proposals that appear in the second White Paper prison discipline. It was, I think, reasonable to assume they would surface in the Bill. I doubt whether there be another large Bill of this sort in the immediate fu but some of the matters that appeared in that sec White Paper abut directly on the question of crim justice. The loss of remission in a prison sentence i effect, the commitment to a prison sentence as lon some of those awarded by the courts. This is a matte the administration of justice.

The White Paper on prison discipline recommen substantial changes in the way in which, for insta remission was removed, recommending that the board visitors should lose their disciplinary function and th new code of disciplinary offences should be created, should be administered by a prison discipline tribuna is much to my regret that those matters have not appea in the Bill, and I hope that the Home Secretary can tel what are the prospects of that White Paper eventu finding legislative form and coming to the House.

Comparing the Bill to the principal White Paper criminal justice, we see one of the reasons why Government's record on crime and conviction is deplorable. The Government vacillate over their policy. comparing the White Paper with the Bill, we see both nature of those vacillations and the cause of some of the The White Paper, for instance, promised measures enable less serious offenders to be dealt with effectively the community. Yet we read in clause 139 that juveni who have not carried out the specific activities provid under a supervision order may in future be committed prison. That does not seem to me to be an attempt to fu the provisions and promises in the White Paper.

Similarly, the White Paper promised an efficient a effective court system. The Bill provides for the end peremptory challenge for jurors, and for extraditi procedures which deny people the rights which they wou find available if they were tried in British courts. I wa to return to this subject because the Home Secreta wholly missed the point made in the intervention from t Liberal Benches. Most important, the Bill provides for t Attorney-General, with the leader of the Court of Appe to refer cases to that court when he considers that t sentences are unduly lenient.

I want to deal with the unduly lenient provision, wholly subjective matter upon which it is difficult for th Attorney-General or anyone else to make an objective an common judgment. I want to deal with the provision i some detail, for two reasons. I regard the proposal a wrong in principle. It seems to us wrong in principle tha a man or woman, when convicted, should, in effect, ris the jeopardy of being sentenced twice and then be force to serve whichever of the two sentences was the mor severe. It also seems to us wrong in principle that ther should be political influence and political pressure o sentencing. I know that the Home Secretary attempts t argue that the political influence will not be there, but I as him to consider the reality of the proposal.

A particularly lurid crime will be committed, a tabloid newspaper will announce that the sentence is insufficient and then a campaign will be built up. There will be questions from the hon. Members for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) and for Littleborough and Saddleworth (Mr. Dickens). We can be assured that that will happen every time a tabloid newspaper says that an individual has been sentenced unduly generously. The newspaper campaign and the House of Commons campaign will build up so that, in the judgment of reasonable people considering the Government's behaviour over the past two years, it appears that the Prime Minister will not allow the Attorney-General to do anything other than appeal for a longer sentence.

That is the case because so much of what the Government now do about law and order and crime and punishment is intended not to reduce the incidence of crime or to convict the guilty, but to produce the right sort of headlines.

Mr. Hayward: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: I shall give way in a moment.

If I had any doubts about that, they would have been removed when the Home Secretary stated that this was not got up by the Government for their own purposes. I have never heard a more obvious expression of a guilty conscience than that. Before we had accused the Home Secretary of that crime, he was denying that the crime existed.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman will know that this matter was discussed in great depth in Committee. Very strong arguments were given by lawyers on both sides for the right of the prosecution to challenge. Will the right hon. Gentleman explain why, if he supports the defence right of appeal against the sentence which is too harsh—as I assume he does — he does not also support the prosecution right of appeal against a sentence which some consider too lenient?

Mr. Hattersley: I shall repeat the two reasons that I have given. It is quite wrong that a man or woman should be required to serve the longer of two sentences imposed on them. It is wrong that the obviously political intrusion which this provides should be introduced into our legal system. It is wrong that the Attorney-General should be subject to the campaigns inside and outside this House. Those campaigns epitomise much of what is wrong with the Government's penal and judicial policy.

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment.

This item has been introduced into the Bill for blatantly political reasons. It is concerned not with reducing crime, but with creating headlines. The Home Secretary said today that the courts award sentences which he regards as appropriate far more often than newspapers claim. The Earl of Caithness, speaking for the Government in the other place, said that unduly lenient sentences were few and far between.

There is no reason, based on the deterrence of crime and the conviction of the guilty, for justifying this clause. The clause is intended to enable Conservative Members to go back to their constituents and claim that the Government are being tough on crime. That is wrong for several reasons, one of which I shall try to develop when I have given way.

Mr. Devlin: In spite of the right hon. Gentleman's reasoning, he has not answered the point about the equity of the situation. Is it not equitable that, if the defence can appeal, the prosecution should be able to appeal too? The right hon. Gentleman's arguments may be entirely reasonable, but I should be grateful if he would answer that point.

Mr. Hattersley: It is not double jeopardy for a defence to make a plea in mitigation and hope for a reduced sentence. The jeopardy is on the man or woman who is subject to what amounts to two sentences and must serve the longer of the two. The equity of that situation is obviously wrong.

Mr. Bermingham: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the difference between the prosecution and the defence and, indeed, between the judge and members of the public, is that the judge, unlike the prosecution, has often seen the contents of social inquiry and psychiatric reports and of other confidential documents? The contents of those documents may be reflected in the sentence, yet that information is not available to the prosecution or members of the press or the public.

Mr. Hattersley: I agree with my hon. Friend's point, and I go further. If we wish to change the system so that prosecution counsel become involved in suggestions about the length of sentence, we must go all the way and do what happens in other countries, where prosecution counsel have been known to suggest, after considering the reports to which my hon. Friend refers, that a long sentence would be inappropriate and a short sentence would be more correct. If we get that system, we shall get quite a different regime. The Government now have an opportunity to say that they are taking a tough line on specific crimes. That is deeply undesirable for several reasons.

Mr. Michael Irvine (Ipswich): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: Like the Home Secretary, I must go on, but I shall give way in a moment.

It is deeply desirable, for a number of reasons. By encouraging this idea that the fight against crime is conducted by headlines in newspapers, the Home Secretary is perpetuating the basic error which lies at the heart of the Government's failure to combat crime. That failure is in no small measure dependent on the atavistic belief that the best way, and perhaps the only way, to reduce crime is to increase the severity of the sentence.

The Home Secretary will have noticed that more than half the interventions from his hon. Friends on the Back Benches, or in the backwoods—whichever way he may like to describe them — concerned the severity of sentencing. By continually talking about the severity of sentences, as if it were the sovereign remedy for the increase in crime in this country, the real enemies are ignored, the causes are neglected and we simply attack the symptoms of the mounting crime wave. As a result of that, crime continues to increase.

Perhaps it is the necessity for the Home Secretary to introduce policies which have no merit other than to quieten the opinion on his Back Benches, which does an enormous amount of harm to the real drive against crime.

[Mr. Hattersley]

That weakness is inherent in all Conservative Home Secretaries. Lord Whitelaw thought it necessary to talk about the short, sharp shock before he introduced reforms. The right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) decided to change the parole system on the eve of the Tory party conference, before he said some progressive things about other parts of the penal system.

The present Home Secretary, who has some radical and reasonable instincts—I say that gladly and willingly—finds it necessary to look continually both ways to placate the opinion behind him. That opinion will prevent those improvements which, given a free hand, he would want to carry out.

Mr. Irvine rose——

Mr. Hattersley: The Home Secretary is trying to look both ways in a fashion which can only be described as assuming Heseltine proportions. Last Friday he told south-east London magistrates of his concern about the prison population, both sentenced prisoners and prisoners on remand.

The Home Secretary's concern, which I believe to be genuine, could have been reflected far more effectively in the Bill if he had chosen to reflect it in action. Let me give him some examples of what he could have done in the Bill to make his speech last Friday more of a reality. He could have speeded up the application of section 22 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, which requires trials all over England and Wales to be completed in a statutory time. As the right hon. Gentleman knows, there are some pilot schemes, but he could have speeded up that process a great deal.

Mr. Hurd: The power is already there in the legislation, and I hope to make an announcement to that effect fairly soon.

Mr. Hattersley: I congratulate the right hon. Gentleman, and wish that he had been that forthcoming without my pressing him on the subject.

Let me ask the right hon. Gentleman another question. If, as he said on Friday to the south-east London magistrates, it is his wish that the remand population should be reduced, and if he is concerned, as he said he was, that the remand population has virtually doubled over the past eight years, how does he justify coming to the House three days later and introducing a Bill that allows defendants to be remanded in custody, not for eight days, but for 28 days at a spell? Those two things seem to be in conflict.

When the right hon. Gentleman was speaking to the magistrates last Friday he said that, as well as being concerned about remand, he was concerned about the use of custody in the sentencing of offenders. I have talked about juvenile sentencing, where the right hon. Gentleman is extending the possibility of custodial sentences. Before I talk about other areas where his proposals will have the same effects, in fairness, I should like to deal with the parts of the Bill that will reduce the prison population.

Clause 56 will reduce the length of prison sentences for unpaid fines. Clause 47 will limit the custodial sentences in police cells. Clause 126 will encourage the use of bail hostels. Clause 118 will create a new sentence of detention in a young offenders' institution. Those are four admirable proposals. I wish that the right hon. Gentleman c brought himself to mention more than one of th not doubt that he would have been criticise moderation by Conservative Back Benchers, but get this right, he should stand up against those wh that prison and prison sentences, especially long sentences, are the only answer to the crime wav

Let me remind the right hon. Gentleman that tries to stand up against unreason, he gets little th compromising with those who think that prison is answer to the problems. He made an equivocato on Friday and followed that with a Bill that support even the better parts of that speech. But read in The Daily Telegraph that Conservativ Benchers are angry at the complete reversal of the that the Government ought to be sending out to offenders.

The Home Secretary should stick to the princi he holds, rather than feel that he must co compromise between common sense and th Committee.

Mr. Hurd: The right hon. Gentleman is not a my speech properly, but, as he is doing so, he will r that its philosophy is clear. I welcome—to som the Bill buttresses it — the increasing seve sentences passed by the courts for serious and offences. I do not think that the right hon. Gentle dissent from that. If so, I should be grateful to h what particular. That is one thing. It is quite anoth one enters the boundary area, which we all k difficult, where the court—not the House—has to whether prison is the right penalty for less serious o I was addressing that particular area at Bromley. right hon. Gentleman said, it is addressed in part Bill. There is no contradiction in that approach.

Mr. Hattersley: That is why I shall try to explai right hon. Gentleman why that contradiction exi before I do so, having begun to congratulate him parts of the Bill that are welcome and that we con I should like to mention two other areas where th more than worthy of support. The change of the st the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board is ri general, the right hon. Gentleman's proposal on k right. My only regret is that it was not included in th legislation. If it had been, the provision would have more speedily through the House.

With regard to knives, I have two reservation right hon. Gentleman is right to say that we—cert do—look upon the change in the onus of proo great concern. I suspect that he shares my concern. that he will endorse the view that, while the change i is justified in this extraordinary circumstance and difficult conditions, nobody could think that that be a precedent for change in onus in other directio

The second area of concern is the stop-and- provision. I hope and believe that as the police app new law governing knives, they will apply it moderation that does not open up again all the old about sus and stop and search. I want tough p against knives, as anybody who represents an inn constituency must want. For that reason, I prop support the clause on that subject, allowing fo reservations on those two points. It is absolutely ess that in those two particulars the law is operated in that does not stir up legitimate and widespread fears in the inner cities about its misuse rather than proper use and proper application.

Clause 118, which I also support and commend, aims at tightening the criteria against which courts measure their sentences, and thus attempts to encourage uniform sentencing. When he replies, will the Minister of State explain why that admirable provision applies to young offenders, and young offenders only?

Wide discrepancies in sentencing are wrong in every way—for example, in terms of natural justice. They make a considerable contribution to the overcrowding of prisons, which the Home Secretary rightly wants to bring to an end. Let me remind the House and the Minister of State of some of the figures. In Rotherham, 8·79 per cent. of defendants found guilty by magistrates courts are sent to prison. The figure is 34 per cent. in Plymouth, 32 per cent. in Blackpool and 28 per cent. in Brighton. Those discrepancies cannot be right. Therefore, I ask again why the Home Secretary does not use the Bill in an attempt to unify sentencing and reduce sentencing in general—not only for juveniles.

I believe—I suspect that the Home Secretary shares my view—that in the United Kingdom we send too many people to prison and we send many of them there for far too long. The Bill was an opportunity to rectify those mistakes. For example, it could have resuscitated the supervised release scheme of 1981, which the Opposition supported when the Home Secretary proposed it. It was lost during one of those conferences when law and order policy is made by delegates to the Conservatives' annual gathering. The Home Secretary missed the chance to re-introduce that provision and to introduce other provisions that could have reduced the prison population. I repeat that the right hon. Gentleman has done so without getting much credit for it from those whom he tried to placate.

The right hon. Gentleman will continue to be harried over the need for longer sentences. I fear that unless he stands up against that harrying he will continue to bow to that pressure and put into Bills such as this proposals which are wrong in every particular, but which are warmly welcomed in Tory party caucuses.

Let me give the right hon. Gentleman another example. The Bill provides a life sentence for carrying a firearm while committing a crime——

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): Quite right.

Mr. Hattersley: As far as I can make out, nobody believes that it is "quite right" except a small proportion of Conservative Back Benchers.

Mr. Hind: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: I shall give way to a small proportion of Tory Back Benchers.

Mr. Hind: Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that a small proportion of Conservative Back Benchers have a large amount of support among the general public on this matter?

Mr. Hattersley: There is no support among the police force——

Mr. Hind: That is not true——

Mr. Hattersley: Certainly not among the Police Federation. The federation is seeing me tomorrow on this and other subjects. It is absolutely clear on this proposition, which is self-evident. If a man committing crime carries a weapon, and if he is about to be arrested by an unarmed policeman, under the new provision, the man will know that he faces no greater penalty for shooting the policeman than for throwing his gun away. [Interruption.] I hope that if the Home Secretary were on a rooftop facing a gunman and he realised that the new law meant that the gunman could shoot him and incur no greater penalty than if he threw the gun over the side of the building, he, translated into policeman, would rationally think, "What a pity he did not leave the gun behind."

The Police Federation says that this proposal will put the police in extra jeopardy. The proposal is in the Bill to make the Government appear to be tough on crime; it is for no greater reason than that, which is a squalid and disreputable one.

So, too, is the reappearance of the removal of the peremptory challenge to jurors. It is a requirement of a free and democratic society that the defence is able to protect its client from trial by a jury that it fears is prejudiced against its client. The inconvenience that it may cause the courts, the small delay that may result from peremptory challenge and the occasional miscarriage of justice that may result, do not do anything like the damage that is done to our democratic reputation by removing a provision that, in the United States, would be considered as an inherent part of a proper judicial system.

The same rule applies to the removal of the prima facie evidence that is required before extradition. The Home Secretary completely misunderstood the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile), who was not saying, in any chauvinistic way, that we must protect offenders in Britain against trial by incompetent courts in western Europe. As I understand it, the hon. and learned Gentleman was saying—I am certainly saying—that the man or woman who is to be tried in a court outside the United Kingdom should receive about the same protection and should go through the same procedures as he or she would receive if he or she were to be tried in a court in the United Kingdom.

The truth of the matter is that if somebody commits a crime covered by this clause at Madrid airport, and the man commits the same crime at London airport, they will have to go through more complicated procedures before being tried in England than they would have to if they were tried in Spain. There will be no committal procedures as such because there will be no obligation to provide prima facie evidence.

Once more, this matter is being brought into the arena of political decision-making. I believed, perhaps naively, that the Conservative party had been spending a good deal of its time over the past five years saying that these great judicial questions should be kept out of the political arena as much as possible. Much of what the Home Secretary has done today brings these matters into the political arena. I regret that, not only because of its effect upon the Conservative party but because it is the wrong sort of constitutional progress.

Extradition without demonstration of a prima facie case is intolerable. It is generally irrelevant to the major fight against crime in this country. I do not diminish the importance of us taking part in the international drive against crime, and I know that the Home Secretary has made a point of doing that in Europe and elsewhere. However, what he should be concentrating his mind on at crimes that particularly affect British people—muggings, crimes of violence, burglary and all the other categories of crime that have so increased over the past 10 years. By and large, the Bill hardly touches any of them. Nor does it touch adequately the growing size of the prison population.

It is an inadequate Bill and it contains many matters of which we disapprove. For that reason, we shall vote for our reasoned amendment and struggle to improve it in Committee.

5.14 pm

Mr. Greg Knight (Derby, North): I am grateful to have the opportunity to take part in the debate. This is a wide-ranging measure, and I particularly welcome the inclusion of clause 30, which relates to the video link.

I also welcome clause 34. I accept that it is controversial among lawyers, but I have no hesitation in saying that it has my full support. It seems odd that a defendant can appeal if the sentence passed on him is too severe, yet there is no corresponding right for the Court of Appeal to consider a sentence that is considered to be inadequate.

As long ago as 1972, Parliament accepted that it would be appropriate for the Attorney-General to refer points of law to the Court of Appeal when an acquittal had resulted from an alleged misdirection by the judge—for example, where he had accepted an application at half-time that there was no case to answer. I have long believed that a similar provision to allow reference of an allegedly lenient sentence to the Court of Appeal would fill a gap in our judicial system, and that it would greatly benefit the public.

I was a little surprised by the vivid picture painted by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). As I understood it, he gave the example of my hon. Friend the Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth (Mr. Dickens) going around the country whipping up public indignation at a perceived lenient sentence. He said that this might involve the Prime Minister, who would then nudge the Attorney-General to ensure that the matter went to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Hattersley: Exactly.

Mr. Knight: The right hon. Gentleman should read the Bill. It is still for the Court of Appeal to decide whether it will accept a referral. I hope that the right hon. Gentleman is not suggesting that the Court of Appeal is likely to be influenced by my hon. Friend the Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth. The right hon. Gentleman left his argument halfway through, because the Court of Appeal is the final arbiter of whether it accepts a referral.

Mr. Hattersley: Of course I am not saying that the Court of Appeal will be affected. What I am saying is that when the hon. Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth comes to the House and says, "Is it not a tragedy that the sentence is so light?", the Prime Minister will say, "Do not blame me; we referred it to the Court of Appeal." The Government will be represented as being tough when the Court of Appeal will be represented as being weak.

Mr. Knight: The final safeguard is in the Bill. The Court of Appeal will be able to determine the sentence to be imposed. I regard the right hon. Gentleman being in the realms of fantasy, and I still safeguard is in the Bill and it is for the Cou to say whether it wishes to hear the applica

If the court decides that it wishes application, the matter should proceed not is at issue in the case but on what are then of public importance with regard to sentencin the future. I can find nothing objectionable

Mr. Hind: Does my hon. Friend agree suggested that in some way my hon. Friend for Littleborough and Saddleworth (Mr. D influence my right hon. Friend the Home S way to deal with the matter is to give the powe to decide whether the appeal should be sent of Appeal to the Crown prosecutor who w when the case was originally heard?

Mr. Knight: I am satisfied with the inte Attorney-General, which is why I opened my saying that I supported the provisions in the

Some of the other clauses have not been m far. Most solicitors will welcome clause 49, w the Crown court to deal with summary offe same time as it deals with offences on indicten the most unprofitable, annoying and unrewa that most solicitors have is to trot along to the court two or three months after one of their been dealt with by the Crown court—that i and no doubt sentenced to a period of cus listen to the prosecution open some mino matters, perhaps to do with motoring offence

The defendant must be produced from p taking up the time of the authorities, and invari not have the benefit of legal aid. The solicitor regards it as a duty to his client, be in attendan to mitigate. Having done so, the court says, " defendant £10 on each charge or seven days' im concurrent." That is a waste of time. I think members in my branch of the legal profession w welcome clauses 39 and 40.

All Members receive representations from I have received hundreds of letters about the bu Friday when the House is to consider the Bill Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alt received between 50 and 100 letters about business, the Firearms (Amendment) Bill. Bu past months and years I have received many tions — perhaps this is contrary to the exp other hon. Members—about some of the m which this Bill seeks to deal. These representa focused especially on increased sentences for cl the sale of offensive weapons and the use of f crime. I believe that there is warm public su clauses 42 to 44.

I am aware that clause 113 is undoubtedly controversial of all the clauses. The House kno deals with peremptory challenge. I hope that the Member for Sparkbrook will forgive me when his comments on this issue went over the top. It the right of peremptory challenge is no longer It is not something that has been an unchanging since time immemorial. The right of challenge reduced over a period, and I believe that in 1988 an unacceptable tilt in favour of the defendant

The reason for the existence of the right are historical. They may have been justified in the past but they are not now. A few hundred years ago, it is likely that the average defendant was poor and illiterate. He went to court to face a jury that had been chosen by the property qualification. I am sure that hon. Members will know that that qualification was removed only as recently as 1972. The defendant of a few hundred years ago could well have been on trial for his life. If that were not the position, he could well be facing a severe or savage sentence. Clearly, in those circumstances the defendant should be able to exercise the right of peremptory challenge.

However, the oppressiveness of our legal system against the defendant has diminshed over the years. Penalties have been reduced, the death sentence has been abolished and through the abolition of the property qualification for jurors, the justification of the peremptory challenge no longer applies. The corresponding tilt in the other direction has been adjusted and it is my view that the need for the peremptory challenge has disappeared.

Mr. Alex Carlile: Will the hon. Gentleman give us his comments on the announcement made by the Earl of Caithness, Minister of State, Home Office, in another place on 2 November 1987 on proposed restrictions on the prosecution's right of standby?

Mr. Knight: The hon. and learned Gentleman credits me with a position of importance that I do not hold. I am not privy to the thinking of Home Office Ministers. I am aware that in February 1987 the Home Office issued guidelines on the exercise by the Crown of peremptory challenge. I understand that those who prosecute have been advised to use the right sparingly and subject to the contents of the guidelines. If the hon. and learned Gentleman wants to know more, I am sure that he will address the point to my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office, who is to reply.

In his report on the peremptory challenge, Lord Roskill stated that in his view the electoral roll for the catchment area around the relevant Crown court was likely to remain the only practical and acceptable basis on which jurors should be summoned for jury service. What is wrong with that? The issue that divides Members is the view that is held by some within the legal profession that we should allow an element of gerrymandering to secure a jury that will be more sympathetic to the defendant than the one originally empanelled. We are not divided on the way in which the random principle operates.

The element of gerrymandering to which I have referred runs against the random principle of our jury system. It allows attempts to be made to turn it into something else. That is why I have no difficulty in saying that the Government are right to pursue the issue of peremptory challenge in the Bill. It can be said that the random principle sometimes produces odd results, but I do not accept that that creates a case for continuing the right of peremptory challenge. Life itself often leads to odd results.

The defendant will still have the right of challenge for cause.

Mr. Peter Archer (Warley, West): The hon. Gentleman has referred to Lord Roskill in support of the proposition that we should maintain random selection of jurors. Is he aware that Lord Roskill has clearly expressed the view that some jurors are not appropriate for certain types of offence?

Mr. Knight: That may be, but that is a slightly dif argument. Lord Roskill has made it clear that in his the only acceptable way of continuing the random pr is to use the electoral roll. There is, however, a diver of opinion when it comes to the way in which fraud for example, should be tried. There has been a debate a number of years about whether certain cases of co fraud should go before a jury, but that is an en different matter. I was addressing myself to clause 11 not to that point. Our jury service generally has serv well and I believe that it will continue to do so witho tilt of the peremptory challenge.

The Bill is a comprehensive measure and in many It is far-reaching. Its proposals are to be welcomed commend it to the House.

5.27 pm

Mr. Peter Archer (Warley, West): As the H Secretary reminded us, it is 13 months since Government introduced the earlier edition of the Bill is now before us. I imagine that for some right hon. hon. Members this will be an experience of déjà vu.

I come to the House for this debate with a sens adventure.

Mr. Alex Carlile: The right hon. and lea Gentleman will get over it.

Mr. Archer: Of that I have no doubt.

When the Bill was discussed earlier my mind wa other matters. It is only now that I am returning to for most of my life has been my spiritual home.

The Bill has been improved since it was first introdu and I believe that it could be made substantially better We live in the hope that there can be a meeting of m in the subsequent stages of the Bill's consideration. hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) will not himself alone throughout his support of all propositions in the Bill, because there are some matter which we can agree. Equally, I suspect that there wil fundamental disagreements on some issues. Perhaps should be looking for the reasons for those disagreeme

This is a Second Reading debate, and before we fo on detail we should take a synoptic view of the Bill. is an occasion for considering the Bill in its context, what we regard as relevant to that context may be on the principal issues which divide us. We should be aski "What is the philosophy behind the Bill? How far doe fit into considered policies? What are its objectives? H far is it calculated to achieve them?" I doubt whether is an accurate description of how a Criminal Justice sees the light of day. I imagine that when someone r into the Home Office and says, "Hooray, we hav Criminal Justice Bill coming into the new legisla programme," there is great rejoicing and those concer say, "This is great. We can now decant our files on j challenges and on the various other things."

As a result, a Criminal Justice Bill is a nightmare for practising profession. It is a terror for students, who h to try to remember which Criminal Justice Act conta which provisions. If I may echo the cri de coeur in anot place by the noble and learned Lord Simon, I hope t those responsible for the Statutes in Force will incorpor the amendments as quickly as possible before we all h a nervous breakdown.

If Criminal Justice Bills usually have a bewilderi assortment of provisions, some give more evidence th others of coherent thought about legal and penal policy. I confess that I had hoped to hear from the Home Secretary of some of the principles alleged to connect the Bill's provisions. The Bill purports, as we have been reminded, to implement the proposals of the White Paper, so we need to go back to the White Paper to see how far it achieves those objectives. But if the legislation falls short of those objectives, that is not the full measure of our criticism, because we are entitled to ask whether those objectives measure up to the nation's needs. Before we ask whether the Bill hits the target, we are entitled to ask whether we approve of the target's shape. Does the treatment reflect a proper diagnosis?

I have no doubt that, when some future Radzinowicz chronicles the history of crime in our time, he will speak of two crises. The first, about which we have been reminded, is the crime wave. I do not think that there is any dispute between the two sides of the House about the existence of the crime wave. There is no need to prove the obvious; but if one wanted figures, they were quoted during the debate in the other place. In 1980, about 55,000 cases were committed to the Crown courts and in 1985, over 84,000—an increase of over 50 per cent. The police have not been able to cope with that increase. In 1985, two thirds of those who committed crimes got away without being detected and of those who committed burglaries five sevenths were left free to enjoy the proceeds of their crimes. The courts, the probation service, the prisons—all the services related to crime—have been swamped by that massive increase.

I wholly agree with those who have said—I think that the Home Secretary said it—that the public are seriously concerned about the problem. I imagine that other hon. Members share my experience. When I return to my constituency, I am always harangued about the matter. But I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). Those who have talked to me in the clubs about the crime wave do not perceive it in quite the same way as the Home Office. When those people speak of the crime wave, they are not concerned with City frauds or the distinction between murder and manslaughter. They are talking about burglaries by petty local burglars operating on the estate in which they live, about violence to the elderly, about vandalism and damage to lifts in blocks of flats.

Next weekend, when I am asked in one of the local clubs, what we have been doing in the House and I say that we have been discussing the Criminal Justice Bill, people will ask me what it contains. I suppose that I shall have to tell them about the abolition of jury challenges and about documentary evidence. I do not envisage that there will be dancing in the streets. Those people will say, "We want more policemen on the beat. We should like more street lighting in the Oldbury road. We should like burglar-proof locks on the front doors of flats and locks on the windows. But we cannot afford them. The council tells us that it cannot afford them." Perhaps the Home Secretary should tell the Secretary of State for the Environment that he is working in direct opposition to what the Home Secretary is trying to do.

We have heard little discussion about strategy. Are we directing our resources to the right crimes? If we cannot eliminate all crime, can we at least make sure that we pay attention to the activities which really trouble the community? It has been some years anything about official thinking on whic be regarded as crimes and which ac unfortunate or unpleasant, should be de

This bring us to the second matte historians will record about our generatio the prisons. Assuming that sending pe reduces crime, there must be a point additional custodial sentence adds to the cr which outweighs its value as a deterrent. I Home Office carried out some research in research study No. 64. It estimated that, imprisonment reduces crime, a 40 per cen the prison population would lead to convicted crime of only 1·6 per cent. Conve the number of offences by between 17 and would be necessary to increase the prison a factor of between four and seven times. inference that we can reduce the present pri without being overwhelmed by a further crime wave which would totally disrupt so

Mr. Archer: I have the misfortune to dis hon. Gentleman. The fear of prison may b but that fear disappears the moment people prison doors. After that, they have simp college for teaching the technology of crim them to prison earlier, one has given up h might be brought back into honest society.

Before embarking on a considera appropriate penal tariff for particular offen is worth considering how far the courts shou from the consequences of the sentences that right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbro the proposals for the removal of remission. I the judge knows when he specifies a length of it will bear no relation to what actually happens and indeed that he is required by law to close his mind to the provisions which govern the date of release.

Clearly, some account must be taken of matters which arise after sentence has been passed—for example, the prisoner's reaction to imprisonment. In 1967, his Honour Judge Stockdale told us that in Denmark it was possible for the court to pass an indeterminate sentence and that the court retained control over the subsequent process, so the court decides the date of release. If the proposal to remove remission is simply a method of increasing sentences, it does not seem to be a constructive approach, but if it is a way of looking again at the whole way in which the system operates, perhaps it is time we did look at it.

There have been debates in the course of the Bill's passage about how far the prosecution should have a role in the sentencing process. Judge Stockdale revealed that, in Holland, an important part of the prosecution's task is to ask for reports and to formulate proposals as to how best to deal with the offender. Frequently, it is not asking for higher and longer sentences. The judges are then involved, in various ways, with the offender's subsequent treatment.

I can understand that, since 1967, we have all lost our enthusiasm for reforming criminals. But presumably, even now, the penal process is intended to have some purpose and direction. Perhaps we could be told what the Home Office's thinking on all that is. I am making a plea for the Home Office to tell us how it wants to achieve what we should all like to achieve—the protection of our citizens from crime.

The amendment mentions our legal services. The House will not be dismayed to hear that I do not propose to embark on that subject tonight. There may be an opportunity to discuss it when the House discusses the Legal Aid Bill. But if we are urging people to respect the law, perhaps we should try to find ways of persuading them that the law respects them.

The first objective set out in the White Paper is "to ensure that the courts have adequate powers to punish. That is a reaction to the problems that confront us, but it is not the only possible one. As my right hon. Friend pointed out, it could be a reaction, not to the problems, but to sensational headlines in the tabloid press. Before we assume that higher sentences are necessarily an answer, we should ask whether we are using custodial sentences to the best advantage now, having regard to the crime that we want to deter.

I remember that my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley) in a publication some years ago entitled "Politics and Prisons", compared the loss to the Treasury from income tax frauds—then running at £4 billion a year—with the loss from social security frauds, which were running at £200 million a year. In the period under review, he contrasted the fact that there had been four sentences of immediate custody for income tax frauds and 404 for social security frauds. So is it not possible that the most effective discouragement for crime might be found in other directions?

I should have thought that the most effective discouragement—this might secure universal agreement in the House—from crime for any individual would be the disapproval of his peer group. Young unemployed people belonging to a minority group on a London housing estate are most likely to abstain from crime, not because Members of Parliament disapprove of it, but because we had managed to arrange things such young members of the minority group on th disapproved of it. So there might be an argumen Government re-examining "Faith in the City", wh dismissed in such a cavalier fashion some time ago them looking again at the recommendations Scarman.

The foreword to the White Paper states Government want to ensure that the court system effectively and efficiently. The most talked about in the Bill which seems to relate to that is the one already been discussed — to remove per challenges to jurors. When I talk about the Bill of my constituents who want to discuss it—I imagine that the conversation will get out of han will want to know what relevance that has to th Paper's objectives. Many will understand that depriving the defence of a right such it has enjoy before the days of Blackstone, and which wa intended, and has operated, to maintain confiden jury system.

This is not an occasion for rehearsing all the ar —I shall contain myself until some other opp arises—but the public have been repeatedly ass the virtues of the adversarial system, which means tries to maintain a balance between the prosecut the defence. The public will not easily understand defence is to be deprived of a right that is availabl prosecution, and which the Government propo remain so. When it is explained that it must available to the prosecution because the Crown sor needs to ask a juror to stand by and it wo embarrassing to explain the reasons for that, the will agree that that is true. If the prosecution w remove a juror because he is illiterate, for example, wants to stand up in open court and say, "Th cannot read." But the public will not understand w less embarrassing if it is the defence which wants to an illiterate juror.

When the right of the defence to challenge cause is under discussion, the public are told that i hurt someone if the defence suggested that he wa proper person to try a case. I can understand that so who is asked to leave the jury box might feel that been the subject of some unspecified criticism. Appa however, the juror suffers no similar blow to hi when the Crown says he is not a suitable perso public may wonder, if it would strengthen the jury and improve the court system to withdraw serious from consideration by people who are not accou why it would not strengthen the system also to re member of the National Front from the trial of a defendant without the need to go into a detailed a of his political views. Perhaps together we may be find some solution to that problem if we all keep minds. I promise that my hon. Friends and I will keep open minds; perhaps we may have a undertaking from the Government.

The next objective in the White Paper rela extradition. I would like to say a great deal, for reaso House may well know, about that, but, again, restrain my exuberance—except to say, as the was raised by the Home Secretary, that what is at i not whether the legal systems of specific foreign co are better or worse than ours. Certainly I hope th Government will not attempt to dispose of the is saying that we can talk about whether the legal systems of some countries are good or bad when we get an hour and a half to debate an order at 11.30 some night. Not only would that be distasteful; it is not what is at issue. Something far more traditional and fundamental than that is at stake in this country.

The final objective is to include provision for the victims of crime. We have all thought for a long time that they should receive more attention than they do, and we support the victim support schemes which provide help at an early stage, when the victim is shocked and bewildered and unsure of where to go. People in that position need support. I am delighted to be able to assure the victim support schemes that the Government, too, approve of them, and will bear that in mind when the schemes come for more resources. So the test of the Government's sincerity was how they dealt with a proposal on the victim support schemes in another place.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board is to be placed on a statutory footing, which is good, because that is intended to improve its effectiveness. At present, when the board assesses compensation for the victim of a crime of violence, it includes the cost of damage to clothes. That might be a fairly minor matter to us, but to a pensioner it can be quite an important one. When the matter was raised in another place by the noble lord, Lord Morton, we wondered whether it had been left out by an oversight; but it transpired that the Government had left it out deliberately because it would save them £400,000 a year. So, in Committee, we may want to discuss the Government's commitment to supporting the victims of violence.

It would have been pleasing to know the Government's thinking on such issues as bringing together offenders and their victims. Of course, one must be selective and sensible. It cannot be done in every case. But the Home Office may have studied the victim-offender research programme in Kitchener, Ontario, where it was discovered that some offenders, on meeting their victims as people, realised for the first time the consequences of their crimes, and that had an important effect on their future conduct. Sometimes, the victim was less insistent on harsh sentences when he knew how the offence came about. Schemes such as that may make everyone wiser, and, if wiser, more likely to be law-abiding.

There is a great deal of common ground in the House about what the Government should be trying to achieve. Some provisions in the Bill merit our approval, but it must be judged as a whole. It fails to show a consistent policy. It gives less evidence of a constructive attempt to reduce crime than of a response to the baying of the tabloid press. It contains a number of proposals which are unfair and counter-productive. If we are looking for reasons to vote against the Bill, those seem reasons enough.

5.50 pm

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): I disagree with the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer). The Bill has a consistent policy that is supported by the people. It contains so much that will improve the ability of our legal system to contain and, one hopes, to reduce crime and to secure the conviction of the guilty, that it is difficult to know where to start one's speech. I hope that I will know when to stop.

We should remind ourselves that cla number of important protections. It is n of another state being able to take offender whenever it asks, because under cannot do so if it is for a political or a purely military offence, or if there is any intention to persecute the fugitive. That state cannot get him back if he is likely to be prejudiced at his trial by reason of his race, religion, nationality or political opinion. It cannot do so if his conviction in the foreign state was in absentia and it would not be in the interest of justice to return him. That state cannot have him returned if he has previously been acquitted or convicted of the offence, or if the object of returning him is for a prosecution or detention in respect of previous offences not covered by the request, or for lesser offences. Therefore, built into the provisions of the Bill there are certain substantial protections. On balance, I support the Government's extradition proposals.

I have considerable doubts about the proposed method of dealing with offensive weapons. I have tried, unsuccessfully, to urge on the Home Secretary that the better solution is to get at the knife carrier at the point of sale. What appals British juries is the thought that so many of these wicked weapons are openly on sale in weapon shops, especially in London but probably in other great cities as well. It may be that the proposals for dealing with possession of these weapons ought to be in the Bill, but I have real doubts about whether they will have any more effect on stopping possession than does the existing law with its provisions, which are far less offensive to the principle of burden of proof. I feel that we shall have to come back to this issue and introduce some kind of licensing scheme for shops.

It does not seem to be beyond the facilities of a police station that has in its locality a shop selling these weapons — and there cannot be many shops — to require the proprietor to submit a list of the weapons. A local police officer could then go to the shop and have a look at the catalogue or list. If he takes objection to any of the items on sale or to be sold or thinks that the chief of police would take objection, he could raise it with the shop owner. If, notwithstanding the advice that he has received, the shop owner wants to take the risk of putting the item on display, the chief of police could have it confiscated if permission is not given to sell it. After all, in the firearms legislation we are proposing substantially to widen the need for licensing of shotguns and firearms. The sale of weapons from a few shops would place very little extra burden on the police.

I shall now turn to the peremptory challenge provisions. It hurts me to say it, but here I agree with the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook. With 25 years of practice in the criminal courts behind me, my views are well known, and I shall not burden the House by giving a detailed explanation of them. It is, of course, complete nonsense to say that guilty people are acquitted wholesale because defendants are tailoring juries merely by having the right to say no three times. A jury cannot be tailored just by the defendant removing from the jury somebody he does not like the look of, unless he could decide which juror would be next and he knew in advance what their predispositions were. That never arises under a peremptory challenge, but it will arise if we have challenges for cause and we go down the very slippery path that the United States of America has gone down. The peremptory challenge should be left as it is because it is a safety valve. Neither hon. Members nor lawyers who do not practise in the criminal courts seem always to understand what goes on in those courts.

The defendant, who very often has been in a long time and thinks that the whole system against him, sits in the dock throughout the t he wishes to be there. Criminal trials are process.

If we make it look to the defendant as system is weighted heavily against him, he can difficult to conduct a criminal trial. Juries d when a defendant is taken down below, so he d the evidence adduced against him and is not i to instruct his counsel. With a peremptory c defendant knows that he has the right to as against the system; to say to three jurors wh been selected deliberately, as far as he know official somewhere, "I do not want you." He c three times and it takes three minutes. For tha price, the defendant feels that justice will be trial.

The Bill will sweep all that away, but it w than that. The illogicality and unfairness of defence challenging the jury, but allowing the the right to stand by for the Crown, was discus the Bill was debated, and the Government sai very important to maintain the right to stand Crown." The House of Lords forced the Gov modify the right to stand by for the Crown an absurdity to these proposals. If the prosec reasonable ground for thinking that somebody — perhaps because they have been convicte criminal offences, have had rows with the p some other reason — will favour the defend regard to the evidence, he will be able to do no it. With this absurd provision we shall build in of the prosecution, when justice would deman somebody stand by for the Crown and have a take his place.

The peremptory challenge provision is no a confidence trick on the British public, wh because the defendant will be screwed down a right which now exists, we shall convict m Everybody knows that in a criminal trial, if any reason to think that the state is being unf predisposition to acquit. The prosecution in trial must convince the jury at every stage tha else it may be doing, it is being wholly fair.

I come to the right of appeal by the prosecu inadequate sentences. It hurts me to go on ag the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook, but much of what he said. Our traditions mean particularly in our legal system, which is grea by countries which have changed the system a they had not done so. The tradition of double very important. We would transgress the rul jeopardy by giving the prosecution two bites o an opportunity to second-guess the first judg heard all the circumstances of the case — judge in the Court of Appeal — before sentence. It is contrary to our traditions t prosecution to do too much in regard to senten will be invited to do more if the provision go

We ought to have enough political nous to pressures, whether we call them political or ot Attorney-General will be under when the t goes to town on the alleged inadequacy of a the Attorney-General stands at the Dispat lawyer and says, "I have looked at the matter; is not inadequate," too often, the Government will have a rotten reputation for always saying no to public clamour for reference to the Court of Appeal for increased sentences. If he comes in and refers a case to the Court of Appeal for consideration, the Court of Appeal will look at all the circumstances and in many cases will say that the sentence is right and that the press did not know what it was talking about because it was not there throughout the trial.

[Mr. Ivan Lawrence]

The press often comes in for the opening of a trial and the conclusion and it wants to whip up public feeling about a matter. It does not know about the social inquiry report and did not see the demeanour of witnesses or hear the defendant and other people who give evidence, who may have thrown a completely different light on the balanced facts of the case as opened by the prosecution. I can hardly remember taking part in a case where the evidence was exactly as the prosecution said it would be when the case was opened. The press is very seldom in the Central Criminal Court, so I do not suppose that it is any more often present from the beginning to end of trials in other courts. The press gives a completely wrong impression.

The provision is absolutely unnecessary because the Court of Appeal has developed guidelines. Recorders, assistant recorders, circuit judges or High Court judges, before they sentence, take out a great big book with all the guidelines in it. The guidelines on the types of offence that the public feel most upset about—child abuse, rape and drug offences—are all set out thoroughly; decision after decision of judges of the Court of Appeal saying, "If this is the situation, that should follow." We may as well abolish the guidelines if we are going to ask the judges of the Court of Appeal to review the sentences. It is unnecessary to change the system which has developed.

It has been said in the debate that it is inequitable that the defendant but not the prosecution should have the right to appeal against sentence. But there is no inherent balance between the rights of the prosecution and the rights of the defendant in criminal trials. It is because the powers of the state are so great — the power of investigation and of calling witnesses—that we redress the inherent imbalance by placing the burden of proof on the prosecution and by giving the defendant the right to remain silent. Those measures are in our criminal system to ensure balance where there is a natural imbalance, so the argument that it would be fair to have the same balance for the prosecution as for the defendant is irrelevant. I shall support or even table an amendment to change that provision and if a three-line Whip is imposed, I shall ignore it.

The life imprisonment provision for carrying firearms during the commission of a crime is another con on the public. The public think that the Government are somehow being macho. Nobody wants severe sentences for violent criminals more than I do—I want capital punishment for those who murder—but this is a crazy measure. If a gun is not used and is just carried, 14 years is an adequate sentence. If it is used for attempted murder or murder, the sentence is life imprisonment anyway, so this provision is not necessary.

What worries me is the possible temptation of a criminal caught with a gun to use it in order to escape identification and being brought to trial because the sentence for using it will be the same as for not using it.

A second worry concerns a young policeman faced by an offender with a gun. What on earth do we expect him to do, knowing that the man with the gun can escape if he shoots the young policeman dead and that if he is caught his sentence is the same for using the gun as for carrying it? Whether or not the public think that this would be a good measure, it is preposterous. The police are opposed to it and I hope that my right hon. and hon. Friends will think again.

We are changing the procedure to confiscate the profits of serious crime, which is good and long overdue. It started with the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 and is now being extended. The problem is that its administration through our courts does not seem to have been working too well under that Act. I should rather like the Minister to tell me in just how many cases orders have been made and how much money has been collected by this administrative measure for enforcing the law on drug trafficking offences. I should also like him to explain to the House if he can, and if he cannot perhaps to write to us or to publish the answer in the Official Report, what improvements he is proposing to make in the administration of this measure to ensure that it works better than the Drug Trafficking Offences Act. Obviously, the principle is good, but if in the administration of the law this turns out to be a waste of time, we must take cognisance of that fact.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary came briefly to grips with the question of the right to silence. I am one of those who believes that the right to silence is now largely mythological and may even be dangerous. A jury might think that an innocent man would have given an explanation and may not be impressed in the least by being told that the solicitor has told him to say nothing. If he had explained his defence, he might not have been charged in the first place. That may not impress juries now, even if it did in the past. There is a risk of somebody who is innocent being convicted merely because, when he had an opportunity to give his defence, he did not do so. In some cases that may be the most significant piece of evidence in a trial. If there is that sort of risk, the right to silence has become a danger rather than a protection.

I say that the right to silence is largely mythological because what one says to somebody who is not a policeman or a customs officer without a warning is admissible against one. I was involved in a trial where it was held that the police did not have to caution a suspected offender until they had a prima facie case against him. Although the law has been slightly changed in recent years it is still open to a judge to pass an adverse comment in a case where a defendant has not given evidence. The judge will say, "There is one person who could have told us what happened, but he has chosen not to tell us. It is his right, but what a pity." In those and other circumstances the right to silence which a man can take advantage of and be criticised for is hollow.

However, I should like to see how the other improvements which the Government have introduced into our legal system, particularly the tape-recorded interviews of suspects, work out before I recommend to my hon. Friend that we interfere with the cherished right to silence. Therefore, I welcome the Home Secretary's statement today that he would want to delay any decision about any interference with the right to silence until there has been much more consultation and thought.

Finally, I turn to areas in which I should have liked to see some action, but, alas, there is none. I have already mentioned capital punishment and I have no doubt that its introduction would do more to reduce crime and violence in our society than any other single measure. Capital punishment is a deterrent I talk from some knowledge. In the early years of my practice at the criminal bar there were many heavy villains who may have done a bit of killing here and there and I used to ask them in the cells, where they fortunately were, whether they were deterred by the threat of the rope, and they used to say that they were. They were deterred from carrying weapons which might go off and from going on enterprises with juveniles on whom they could not rely to keep their heads in a tight corner.

I have little doubt, from anecdotal experience, together with a certain amount of common sense which I seem on this matter to share with the overwhelming number of people in our society, that capital punishment is a deterrent. Apart from that, people would believe that it was safer to walk the streets if they knew that at the end of the line they had the protection of the threat of capital punishment to deter violent criminals. But I know that that will not be included in the Bill, however much I suggest an amendment.

Secondly, the courts would like the power to suspend youth custody orders. At the most recent of the judicial boards' seminars there were about 60 or 70 judges, recorders and assistant recorders. I asked the judge in charge if he thought it right to ask the assembled gathering what their views were, and unanimity would not be too strong a way of describing their support for the right to suspend these orders.

Courts can suspend any other form of custodial treatment, so there is nothing wrong in principle with suspension. It would be the sword of Damocles over the head of a potential young offender who, having been convicted and having had a youth custody order suspended against him, might be deterred from acting in such a way as to bring the order into effect. It would help relieve the overcrowding in young persons' institutions which now occurs, because if a judge has no right to suspend a youth custody order and the appropriate sentence is a youth custody order, the judge sends the offender inside.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): My hon. and learned Friend has much experience in these matters both as a Member of Parliament and, like the hon. Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile), as a recorder. If suspended custodial orders were permitted, is there not a danger that they might be substituted for other forms of non-custodial disposal lower down the tariff?

Mr. Lawrence: That is always a problem. We have been over this before, when suspended sentences were introduced. On balance, however, suspended sentences have been thought to be right despite that possibility. If we can avoid sending into custody a reasonable proportion of young people who are currently sent into youth custody where they learn to become criminals, that would be a good thing. I think that there is a reasonable likelihood that there would be a significant saving, whatever might happen further down the line.

Mr. Alex Carlile: Does the hon. and learned Gentleman agree that when a young person is being sentenced there is often no money to pay a fine and a conditional discharge seems an absurdity for what may be a serious offence, with the result that many judges pass youth custody sentences? Does he agree that suspended custody orders would mean that many people would serve shorter terms or no immediate term at all?

Mr. Lawrence: I entirely agree with the hon. and learned Gentleman. There could also be partially suspended sentences. I ask the Government to think again about this. I have made representations to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary in the past, but clearly they have no magic effect on him, as in this and other measures I have signally failed to persuade him. Nevertheless, judges want this not as a brutal and nasty thing to do but as a helpful and constructive measure both for the sentencer and for society.

Thirdly, there is no provision in the Bill to deal with people resident in Britain who may have been responsible for the mass murder of civilians or the killing of British soldiers captured by the Nazis in the last war. There is considerable concern about the continued presence in this country of a number of war criminals. I have heard one Home Office Minister say that if one such monster remains he should not be allowed to remain untried. That raises the question of how such a person can be tried for an offence committed outside the jurisdiction and when that person was not then a British citizen. Under our existing law, that is simply not possible, so the law must be changed. I ask, therefore, that consideration be given to an amendment to this Bill to achieve that.

Mr. Devlin: Retrospectively.

Mr. Lawrence: My hon. Friend says that it would be retrospective, and there would indeed be an element of retrospection in such legislation.

There are two kinds of retrospection, however—one that is unacceptable and one that is not. The unacceptable kind makes criminal an act that was not criminal at the time when it was committed, thus punishing people who had every reason to believe that they were innocent at the time when the act was committed. That is unacceptable retrospective legislation and we in this country are against it.

The other kind of retrospection involves bringing to trial a person who knew at the time that he was committing murder or, indeed, mass murder—we are talking here about genocide. It does not involve bringing to criminal trial a person who had reason to believe that he was innocent. The retrospection involves merely the procedures whereby the person is brought to justice. In matters of genocide, the law should always have been that the alleged perpetrators could be brought to trial by the forces of law and order wherever the act may have been committed. I do not believe that that form of retrospection is anathema to the British people. We could then bring to trial people who committed mass murder but got away with it because our system did not allow us to prosecute, either because the person was not a British citizen at the time or because the act was committed outside the jurisdiction.

Mr. Bermingham: Does the hon. and learned Gentleman agree that, regrettably, our law deals only with offences against the state and not with offences against humanity of the kind that he has described?

Mr. Lawrence: I agree entirely. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman.

Faced with the same problem, other countries such as Canada and Australia have changed their laws in the way that I suggest and are asking why this country — the great legal force of the western world—has not yet done so.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has said that he is considering all these matters and I know that he is most sympathetic and wants only the best. He has said that he does not intend to let the matter drop but that the time to deal with it is "not now". In the old rabbinical phrase, I ask my right hon. Friend, "If not now, when?" If we cannot introduce an amendment to this Criminal Justice Bill I am sure that those who run the affairs of this party in Parliament may find a thousand and one reasons why other legislation should take precedence over a specific measure to deal with this issue.

Mr. John Patten: My hon. and learned Friend may not have heard my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State say earlier that he intended to make his views known before this Bill had completed all its proceedings in this House.

Mr. Lawrence: My right hon. Friend also said that this Bill was not the place to make such a change. I ask him to reconsider that and to make the change in this Bill because I do not believe that legislative time will willingly be given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Patronage Secretary for a specific measure to deal with this matter.

Mr. Devlin rose——

Mr. Lawrence: If my hon. Friend will forgive me, I will bring my remarks to a close, as I have already taken too long.

This debate may have seemed to lack lustre because we have been going over ground that we have trodden before. Nevertheless, there is a great deal of good in the Bill. In my view, it is a pity to spoil it by including the parts that are bad. In my respectful submission, the Bill could be improved by including the provisions that I have mentioned. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has listened intently to speeches from all parts of the House. I hope that he will ask my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to think again about some of the matters I have raised.

6.18 pm

Mr. Alex Carlile (Montgomery): The right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer) said that, as a newcomer to this Criminal Justice Bill, he viewed it with a sense of adventure. He is not the only one. The new Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office—the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) —and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) viewed it with such a sense of adventure that they took off to the Gaza Strip to take part in a little exercise in competitive aggression.

I view this Criminal Justice Bill mark 2 with a sense of the inevitable. However, I hope that it includes the inevitability that we will have as honest and earnest a debate on this Bill as we had on the Criminal Justice Bill mark 1. We have now the advantage of the expert hand and eye of their Lordships to guide us on certain points, although I will take strong issue with them on at least one.

I believe that no Criminal Justice Bill or law reform legislation is worth a pinch of salt unless it is part of a coherent strategy to achieve four aims. I would characterise the first aim as strengthening the rule of law; and the second as enhancing the regard in which the law is held by its consumers. After all, the law is the one commodity which the public are forced to consume every day of their lives, like it or not. I would characterise the third aim as increasing the efficiency of the law as a guarantor of justice to all; and the fourth as avoiding partisan political prejudices which, in my view at least, and I suspect in the view of most hon. Members, should have no place in any Criminal Justice Bill. I consider this Bill against that four-point test.

I am afraid that I believe that, although this Bill has many points to recommend it, it fails the test on a number of specific items. I want to begin by considering the item that strikes me as most offensive in that it falls prey to the fourth consideration — partisan political prejudice. I make no apology for returning to the matter of the peremptory challenge.

I listened with fascination to the debates in another place on the right of peremptory challenge. I stood at the Bar of the House in another place with the Minister of State and others. We heard some riveting speeches from several of their Lordships who have great experience of the criminal law. However, I must confess that I felt that some of those speeches were delivered with a rather shaky hand. Some of their Lordships were speaking about an area of the law in which they have not operated for 20 years or more, although partly of course because of the great distinction that some of them have achieved within the judiciary. It seemed to me that some of them were out of touch with the reality of the practical considerations of criminal trials about which the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) spoke so eloquently a few moments ago, in a speech which lasted just over the 10 minutes he promised.

The debate in another place did not answer the question of how the alternative would work, and by that I mean the alternative from the point of view of the defence. No answer has been given to the proposition that we are about to embark on an unseemly procedure in which some judges will consider challenges for cause in the absence of the jury panel, while others will consider challenges for cause in the presence of the jury panel. Some challenges for cause will be couched elegantly and eloquently in terms which the jury cannot understand but the judge can: it is clearly offensive to the legal system to conceal what is being said from those concerned in the case, through the use of lawyers' code. Some judges will be prepared to hear applications, for example, on the ground that there should be more black people or women on a jury, but other judges will refuse to hear such applications. We will have a mess on our hands.

One of the points emphasised in previous debates on this issue was the inequality between the prosecution and the defence in the light of the Government's proposals to abolish the defence right of peremptory challenge. I should be grateful if the Minister would pay close attention to my next point. The Government have recognised that there is some force in the complaint of inequality between the defence and the prosecution based upon the previous proposals before the House. They have purported to deal with those objections. However, this time they have produced a severe handicap to the Crown.

Criteria have been laid down which were referred to in another place on 2 November 1987 by the then Minister of State, Home Office, the Earl of Caithness. He said that stand by would be permitted only in two sets of circumstances:

"The first is where a jury check has been authorised by the Attorney-General". — [Official Report, House of Lords, 2 November 1987; Vol. 489, c. 819.]

That applies to jury vetting cases. It encompasses an insignificant number of cases and we can forget about it for all practical purposes. The other category involves a juror who is manifestly unsuited for jury service. The example given by the Earl of Caithness involved an illiterate juror. That means that in the ordinary run of case, where juries are not vetted, the only right of stand by for the Crown will be if the juror is manifestly unsuited for jury service.

I have done a lot of prosecuting in my time and have attended many courts as a prosecutor when that ubiquitous figure of knowledge, the court police liaison officer, has sidled up to me and said, "Can I have a word please, Mr. Carlile? You see that fellow in the brown hat over there — he is known to associate with criminals. He's got no form, Mr. Carlile, but he is pretty high up our criminal intelligence list." Like a responsible prosecutor, I believe, I stood up without giving cause and said, "Stand by for the Crown." That juror is not manifestly unsuited for jury service under the criteria set down by the Earl of Caithness. He is certainly unsuited for service, but he will not be liable to exclusion under the guidelines which have been set down.

The Government have now introduced measures that will create difficulties for the prosecution, albeit in a commendable effort to create equality with the defence. The result is that there will be a complete dog's breakfast to replace a wholly practical system which has been operating for a very long time.

I am afraid that, like the hon. and learned Member for Burton and others, I will be returning to the issue of peremptory challenge to claim that there is no better solution than the current practice. I hasten to add that that is not an iconoclastic view. It is a practical view based on everyday experience in Crown courts all over the country.

I now want to consider extradition. We have reason to be proud — perhaps this is slightly iconoclastic — of the principle underlying our extradition law, the prima facie rule. That means that, before a foreign country can obtain extradition it must show that there is a case to answer on the charge. It has to show not that there is guilt, but that there is a case to answer. That is rather like what happens to a person who is sent for trial in a British court. Before he can be committed for trial, whether to the Old Bailey or Caernarfon Crown court, it must be shown that there is a prima facie case against him.

Surely it is justifiable to say that we should apply the same standard before we send a British subject or anyone else to a foreign country and foreign jurisdiction where there may not be legal aid and where he may even be left in solitary confinement for nine months while he awaits trial. Surely there should be a prima facie rule in his case as well. It is not a demanding rule. As the Heysel stadium case showed, the problem is the procedure, not the rule, and I welcome any measures to improve the rules of evidence to enable foreign states to achieve, by simple means, proof of their prima facie case.

Let us not forget that the present situation is not one in which a foreign country has to flounder in the British legal system. Every foreign state is represented by the Director of Public Prosecutions when it seeks an extradition. It has the whole machinery of the DPP's office at its disposal before it appears in court.

Mr. Lawrence: Is it not an unwarrantable interference in the internal affairs of other countries if we insist on having rules that they do not want for the production of their accused?

Mr. Carlile: I turn the hon. and learned Member's question on its head. We would welcome the introduction of a prima facie rule in other countries so that we could feel sure that a fair standard of justice was applied before extradition to Britain.

Of course there is another point. Comity is extremely important. When an order is passed by the House, we may be looking at a foreign state and at a system of government that we applaud, but the time may come when that changes. The most dangerous phase is when we are unsure about the system of government in that state. If a shocking dictatorship were introduced we should withdraw the order, but in the interim period, when we were not sure about the fairness of a judicial system, there would be a real risk of injustice. We are safer with the prima facie rule.

In regard to extradition, I am also concerned about the removal of the speciality rule, which would enable the Secretary of State, by an executive act, having extradited someone for one charge, to agree that he should be tried for another wholly different charge. I do not think that that should be left to executive action.

I turn to another aspect of the Bill that causes me great concern. As I hope I have already made clear, I am concerned that criminal procedures should be simple; but I am equally concerned that they should be fair. The part of the Bill that deals with documentary evidence in criminal proceedings goes much too far. Although judges would exercise control over their use, the Bill allows experts' reports to be given in evidence without the expert giving evidence in person. In criminal and civil cases, I have seen too many experts' reports which were simply wrong. The Minister of State should know that it is the experience of practitioners—if I can use a term of art—that some experts are on the game. They are prepared to give expert evidence according to the party asking for that expert evidence. This part of the Bill pays no regard to that fact.

A further piece of evidence which could well be let in as a result of changes introduced in the Bill is the note in the policeman's notebook—for example, of the remarks made by a witness in a police car. That is a form of hearsay evidence which is often not credible. Of course, most police officers prepare their notebooks fairly, but there are police officers who turn up in court using fair copies of notes made at the time. Those copies are fairer in writing than in justice. There is a great danger of the hearsay evidence contained in policemen's notebooks being introduced and causing great injustice, albeit in a minority of cases. We shall have to look closely at that category of documentary evidence which can be given in hearsay form before assenting to it.

I turn to the removal of certain types of case from the jury. Criminal damage of £1,999 or less, common assault and unlawful taking of a motor vehicle are no longer triable by jury. A person with no convictions who is tried for criminal damage amounting to £1,000 or £1,500 will usually be in jeopardy of a gaol sentence. He may well be in jeopardy of losing his job, and he will certainly be in jeopardy of losing his reputation and the respect of all around him. That is much too serious a case for the defendant to be deprived of his right to trial by jury.

Common assault is an offence that often arises in highly emotional situations. It is often dealt with rather too summarily by magistrates courts. Cases of common assault are two a penny, and most defendants plead guilty. However, a defendant who is charged for the first time in his life with an offence of violence against a person, even if he is charged only with common assault, surely should have the right for his peers to decide whether he has committed the offence.

The same applies to the unlawful taking of a motor vehicle. I have seen such cases in which the issues have been extremely complex—for example, those involving terms of employment. The professional skill of the judge has often been needed to sort out those issues and enable the matter to be fairly decided.

Mr. Devlin: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. and learned Gentleman in the middle of his flow, but would he be interested in tabling an amendment to cover his point about a first-time offender, allowing all other cases to be dealt with in the magistrates court?

Mr. Carlile: I used the example of the first-time offender as the starkest illustration of the point. My direct answer to the hon. Gentleman is no, although I should like to think about it further. If it is the best that we can salvage, and if the hon. Gentleman is offering to take part in such an effort, he may well find me, and other hon. Members, on board. I am grateful to him for his question.

I welcome many parts of the Bill. I welcome the fact that the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board has been put on a statutory footing. I welcome the tentative beginnings of video links for children, although I think that we will hear more radical suggestions from the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding). I welcome, too, the parts of the Bill that deal with forfeiture, compensation, knives and child cruelty.

Like the hon. and learned Member for Burton, I should like to see a provision for suspended youth custody sentences. I introduced a ten-minute Bill on the subject a long time ago. The argument that more young people would end up in custody is wrong. The problem in sentencing a youngster of 17 or 18 is that usually there is no money with which to fine him. A conditional discharge sounds terribly weak and namby-pamby, so he ends up going straight inside for a short youth custody sentence. It is in those cases that a suspended or partly suspended sentence would be used. In this context, I reassure the Minister of State that the regular bulletins which are now sent round by the Judicial Studies Board are read by judges, who pay attention to them.

I agree, too, with the hon. and learned Member for Burton about war crimes, which need to be dealt with in a positive way. There is a world of difference between retrospectively rendering a crime something which was not a crime and making a jurisdictional change which, as the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) suggested, would deal with crimes against humanity. Surely every right-thinking person expects the He take measures to enable those guilty of crimes humanity to be tried, even long after the event. W heard a good deal about comity today in relat extradition, but a good number of our friends abroa dealt with this situation satisfactorily. It is possible criminals to be tried, and I suggest that it would be of comity if we did the same.

The Bill represents part of, if it is a strate incoherent strategy, in that it fails to build confid the rule of law and the legal system for the reasons have given and others. It weakens civil liberties nothing to deal with the problem of a burge population in the prisons, does not enhance respect law and can only earn the description, disappointment".

6.51 pm

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): Although th has been gone through in some detail before, I was to take part then. I am grateful to the House for de its discussion of the Bill so that I could take part.

I do not have any children but, if I did, I think tha many parents in my constituency and the country whole, I should be feeling quite anxious about the pro of their being abused physically or sexually in some sordid corner of our society when I was not on ha keep an eye on them.

That web of fear and doubt has thickened throug the nation during the past year as those who care a children have brought more of this horrifying phen into the open. Some elements of the abuse—we may it passive abuse—has always gone on and all of us been vaguely aware of it. I refer to the taking of photographs of children and various exposures in fro them. The subject has not, however, been a matter of worry to the majority of people.

The sudden trumpeting by interested professiona the truly nasty cases—perhaps I might call them active cases—such as the baby battering, the phys sexual acts and the violence, have made the public rig anxious, especially when the perpetrator might be a tru or respectable person such as a teacher, vicar, s worker or doctor.

The prospect is frightening. Many of us grew u innocent children, unaware until comparatively late o ugly world that surrounds us. It is perhaps those who h had that privilege who express most horror when they the chilling statistics presented by the National Society the Prevention of Cruelty to Children or the Natio Children's Home and learn of the prolonged misery degradation of other children's lives.

The shift in attitude requires us to contemplate th matters within the bounds of the family, and often on perpetration of a deception of, perhaps, a spouse. O natural reaction is to rebound in horror or leave problem to someone else.

In my early days at the bar I took that attitude, beca I felt that child law was too complicated, too emotio and too difficult for careful and dispassionate conside tion. We cannot shy away from our responsibilit however. It is our responsibility to protect these sadden violated children, and that task is set about in the Bil welcome clause 43 wholeheartedly. Clause 30, on clos circuit television, is a much-needed improvement an commend the Government on bringing it forward. T suggestion that we should bring in an extra amendment on the possession of child pornography is most welcome. I look forward to seeing the Government's proposals. Sorting out the law relating to the detention of children is also highly to be commended.

Clause 32 causes me the most unease in the light of my recent experiences in Cleveland. I should like to consider the scale of the problem. National estimates provided by the NSPCC are that 6,330 children were sexually abused last year. The MORI poll, which has often been quoted, failed to distinguish between what might be called active and passive abuse. The definition was very wide and, in an article in The Times last year, Roger Worcester, chairman of MORI, took the poll to show that one female child in 150 was sexually abused by her father and that only one child in 220 suffered sexual intercourse by a father or brother.

Our next difficulty is bringing to book those responsible for these horrible crimes. My hon. Friend the Minister and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary have shown tremendous zeal in this respect. Calls have been made by many bodies which deal with children for a range of reforms to increase the conviction rate. One important reform that is not included in the Bill, and which should be, is a provision to lay a statutory duty on social service departments to consult the police and inform them of any relevant facts before action is taken to rescue a child.

The use of a live video link in court would also be a major advantage to the prosecution of these cases. The trauma to the young child, now separated from his or her parents, can only be heightened by having to reveal all the humiliating details in open court. Last year, we saw the terrible prospect of a trial collapsing because the children were too upset to give evidence. All the court could do to improve the situation was for the barristers and counsel to take their wigs off.

Children's and adult survivors' most vivid memories of these occasions are that facing the perpetrator and his lawyer is their worst ever experience. We must achieve a balance, however, and not tip the scales of justice out of line. We cannot allow children's evidence to go unchallenged and we cannot refuse a defendant his right of cross-examination.

We should for a moment imagine that some of my constituents in Cleveland are absolutely right — a possibility that is being determined by a judicial inquiry. We should put ourselves in the position of an ordinary loving family man whose children are thought, for some reason—a denunciation or a faulty medical diagnosis—to be abused. He might be a doctor, teacher or vicar. The accusation is made. He must, in the name of justice, be given a fair trial. He will suffer suspension from his job and be reviled by his neighbours, his friends and perhaps even his wife. The children are taken away. He wakes up one day to find himself in a situation not dissimilar to Kafka in "The Trial". That is what is alleged to have happened in my constituency.

We should imagine what will happen when, having legislated safeguards into the system, we have also removed the ability to cross-examine the accusing child. We should imagine what would happen if we did not build in the legal safeguards proposed by the Bill. The uncorroborated evidence of the child would be accepted as the sole evidence on which somebody could be convicted. Would we not be moving from Kafka to Arthur Miller?

The hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) said last summer when we met two anguished parents together, "This is Salem." He was wrong, but I fear that, with children being able, unchallenged or insufficiently challenged, to accuse parents of vile and hateful things, and with social workers prepared to read and believe papers which say that children do not lie about things that they have not experienced, we might indeed move to Salem. Will we then be back with a protection from false prosecution Bill to remove this anomaly next year? I hope not.

We must press forward with all due diligence to catch and successfully prosecute child molesters. I welcome many of the features of the Bill which will help to do that, but I warn the House against overlooking essential safeguards in pursuit of desirable ends. I warn the Committee against turning children to behave like Abigail Williams in a witch hunt which could burn the innocent as well as the guilty.

6.59 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): Some of us who served on the Standing Committee on the previous Criminal Justice Bill feel what is almost a sense of déjà vu. No doubt, if I am lucky enough to be selected to serve on the Committee on this Bill, I shall see one or two new faces on the Government side, but I do not expect to see too much of the Home Secretary, who appeared only towards the end of the previous Bill.

That is no criticism of the right hon. Gentleman. However, some effort was made to improve the original Bill through the spirit of that Committee. Various Ministers accepted a number of Opposition amendments, and, indeed, often cross-party amendments, and a number of ideas were taken on board. I had hoped that, during the long summer that lay behind us, the Home Secretary and other Ministers would have looked again at what was said in that Committee, and thought again about some of the ideas that it discussed.

Over the past couple of months, I have floated one or two ideas on sentencing policy, in the hope that they will be taken up when the Bill continues its passage through the two Houses. It contains a number of features which are, sad to say, retrogressive, rather than progressive. When there are more than 50,000 people in prison and more than 10,000 on remand, we ought to take the opportunity to ask ourselves why that is. Why do we appear to be the most criminal country in Europe? Why do we incarcerate more people, for longer periods, in quite appalling conditions, than any other country in the civilised world? Is it, perhaps, that we have got our sentencing wrong?

You will recall, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that a few months ago, when a certain well-known jockey obtained his just deserts for trying to defraud the taxman, I suggested that there might be another way of sentencing him: it seemed an appropriate example at the time. I agree with everything that has been said today about vicious and violent criminals. They deserve to go to prison, and they deserve to go there for a long time, as do those involved in sexual offences. I am not speaking of them; the statistics show them to form a minority of the offenders who are to be found in our prisons. Research has shown that the vast majority are the thieves, the fraudsters, the car thieves, burglars and other non-violent persons.

For many such people, the most effective part of a prison sentence is the first 14 or 28 days. I suggested 28 days in a recent speech, and promptly received a shoal of letters from experts, who told me that the first 14 days were the bit that hurt. The remainder of the sentence is not constructive, as was said here earlier. All that it does is teach the chap to commit, perhaps, a different type of crime. He is kept in conditions in which he learns nothing, and his family is supported by the state. We keep him there at enormous cost, and then chuck him back again at the end.

Why should we not try to be constructive? If the short, nasty taste of the prison cell is required, let the sentence be for, say, 18 months, but with only 28 days to be served. During the balance, the offender would be expected either to repay the victim of his crime—after all, the victims are the people whom we mostly forget in the administration of criminal justice—or, perhaps, to repay society through an extended community work programme.

It can be done, it would not require much alteration of our laws, but it would at least be positive sentencing. During the period that the offender spent in the community, under, as it were, the sword of Damocles—the combined, rather than the single, sentence — he would be expected to put back into society what he had taken out, and, at the same time, to maintain his family. The probation service is quite capable of administering such a sentencing policy.

That is constructive, but it is not very populist. It is populist to call for longer and longer sentences. I agree with much of what the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) said — for example, about extending to life imprisonment the sentence imposed for possession of a firearm in the course of a robbery or other indictable offence. Where, in that case, would be the point in not shooting? The sentence would be the same either way. That is silly and will not achieve anything. Judges, of course, do not have to impose certain sentences; they are quite capable of imposing the appropriate sentence. The current sentencing powers of the judiciary are wide enough for that.

Over the weekend, I have to admit that I read The Mail on Sunday, which mentioned the idea of tagging. We did not receive a clear and definitive answer on that today. [Interruption.] Ah, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Naughties are happening. The Minister has indicated that he will answer the question on tagging.

It would be nice if we knew at the beginning of a debate what would come up during it. Surely the purpose of a debate is for the House to be able to give its views. If the Minister is to make some suggestions about tagging, I shall be glad to give way to him for a moment so that the matter can be placed before the House and before other persons.

Mr. Hurd: Give us your view.

Mr. Bermingham: The Home Secretary asks for my view: he can have it. If the system is to be anything like the Massachussetts system, it is barmy. I took the trouble to go and have a look.

If "tagging" means a system of reporting, with a machine that is coded so that the telephone can pick up the code, I can see some sense in it. However, to confine people to their houses 24 hours a day for 12 months—if I have understood The Mail on Sunday corr frankly barmy. It is useless, and will achieve not merely sending people to prison in their own h

The object of keeping people out of prison m be to reform them, educate them and lead them i direction. I have no objection to people having at such and such an hour, or to a means of chec they are ringing from where they say they are which could be achieved very easily by as telephone number of the works where they shoul ringing them on that number. That may be too be politically attractive, but the Americans seem it a better method than a magic bracelet worn ar arm, enabling the person to be contacted at an ap time.

I fear that we must wait until the Minister speaks at about half-past nine to learn the mys what he proposes. I think it a little discourteou proposals are to be made, for us to be told of the end of the debate, rather than during it. But old-fi manners are, I fear, a thing of the past.

Clause 128 deals with knives. Under the cla defence rather than the prosecution case must be One of the grounds on which a defence can be under subsection (4)(a), is that the knife is "fo work". I suggest that the drafting of that tiny pa be looked at again. Let us suppose that a man t kitchen knife from his home to his car parked in th perhaps to deal with a problem in the upholstery, some screw or other tiny part in the ignition technically not at work, so technically the defen Perhaps the words "for work" rather than "at should be used. It is only a tiny amendment, but overcome that minor problem. We shall have to rec the drafting of the Bill with great care.

I wish to mention two other points. I welcome 41, which contains the retrial provision, but the po the Court of Appeal should have been widened respect a long time ago. I should have liked the pr to go a little wider. Perhaps we can discuss Committee, but the principle is welcome. It may the occurrence of cases in which there has been miscarriage of justice and people have had to go Court of Appeal several times. The classic example Cooper v. McMahon case in which the Home Se ultimately opened the doors and out they went, bu a situation should be avoided in the future. I ask the Secretary to reconsider the Select Committee's repo remands in custody and then to reconsider clau which grants the power to remand in custody for u days, rather than up to eight days, as at present.

One of the saddest sights is to go to a prison at v time and watch the remand prisoners being visited b wives and families. An even sadder sight is to end whether in a magistrates court or in a Crown cou declare an interest as a practising barrister—and a man acquitted when he has been in custody for time.

It is time that we reconsidered the position with r to theft. Of course the person accused of murder, rap other serious offences must be remanded in custod there should be some way of reviewing the lesser off and the remand period. When sentences are settled remand period, we must ask ourselves questions how we deal with bail.

I note the provision in respect of bail hostels. I appreciate that an increase in the number of bail hostels may lead to fewer people being remanded in custody. I appreciate that, under section 20 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1979, it is proposed that trials now proceeding——

Mr. John Patten: I have listened to the hon. Gentleman's speech with great care. On the issue of bail hostels, is he aware that, when the nine new bail hostels announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary are fully occupied, it could mean that up to 900 people a year should be free of the need to be in gaol and should be in the bail hostels?

Mr. Bermingham: Yes, I am aware of that. I welcome the nine new bail hostels. Perhaps there should be more, given that there are more than 10,000 people on remand today, more than 500 of whom are in police stations. The situation is appalling and any improvement is welcome. There is no justification for more than 500 people being remanded in custody in police stations. The Home Secretary's predecessor gave an undertaking that they would be emptied and that no people would be remanded in custody in police stations.

The Home Secretary has made several attempts to improve the situation, including early release, but too many people are on remand and too many are receiving too long sentences. However, I shall not seek to trespass down that alleyway tonight.

I hope that the Bill will be given a Second Reading and that, when it goes into Committee, Government supporters will approach it with an open mind, ready to make changes and to listen to arguments, not necessarily from the Opposition but from interested parties outside who often have much to offer. I hope that the Government will not set their mind against any ideas that will help to achieve the essential elements of a criminal justice system. Fairness is an essential part of such a system and leads to a conviction which is not challengeable. When that conviction occurs, the sentence should reflect both the crime and the needs of society and of the victim. If we can work towards that, we shall go somewhere, but I fear that the Bill contains many of the sins of previous legislation. Perhaps some of us will be lucky enough to have a second bite at the cherry, if we do not find the stone completely bare.

7.15 pm

Mr. Chris Butler (Warrington, South): I welcome the Bill and the strong warning that it will give to any knife-happy thugs. There is a stronger warning implicit in it than the one I read when I was in Florida last year in the code given to children before they start school. They are told that they "may not commit any criminal acts at the school. Bringing a gun, or another weapon such as a razor blade, ice pick, nunchakus"— goodness knows what that is—

"mace or any chemical or electric weapon will result in expulsion, as will selling alcoholic beverages or drugs, murder or rape."

I am sure that it will be a great consolation to the victim of murder or rape to know that the schoolchildren will be expelled.

I studied physical anthropology at university and I know that there is a credible theory that Neanderthal man never died out. Some inadequate people bolster their inadequacy by the use of knives. They mistake the fear tha they engender with their blades for the respect which the cannot secure. When they wield their blade, they believ that they are big, but in fact they are pygmies. They shoul be dissuaded from carrying their symbols of power. Som of them are rather dense and a couple of pints of lager ca convert boastful bores into punchy paranoids.

Only last Saturday night, there was a stabbing in a disc in my constituency. A young man was stabbed twice an his life was saved only by the quick-witted action of Mr Roy Aspinall, affectionately known as "Ocker", who pu his fingers in the gaping wounds. The culprit was caugh at the door and was found to have two flick knives. He should never have been carrying any knives at all. The message of the Bill should be not only that people who carry knives are inadequate but that they are mugs becaus the law will bear down on them if they are stupid enough to carry knives.

I welcome clause 34 and the right to refer unduly lenient sentences to a higher court. The knee-jerk reaction of the Opposition is to oppose this. They purport to represent the working class. I sometimes wonder how long it is since they were in a working-class club or pub and listened to the good sense that is occasionally talked over a few pints of bitter. The verdict of the ordinary man in the street about some of our daft, lenient sentences is very clear. Legal academics, too—Nigel Walker, for example—have been quick to point out that the one-sided English system is "quixotic". In 1965, the Donovan committee found that there was a strength in these arguments, but eventually it dismissed the idea because it was "a complete departure from our tradition."

In my view, tradition is an insufficient cause for not doing justice in these cases.

I have one reservation which I share to some extent with the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley), despite his rather disparaging remarks about Elliot Ness, whom I have always greatly admired. That reservation concerns the potential role of the press. Mostly, our attention is drawn to soft sentences by the press. There is a certain section of the press that wallows in the gutter. I trust that the Attorney-General will have an objective system of review, and that we shall not be subject to the "objectivity" that is associated with the denizens of the gutter.

The Bill is a response to popular concern about the surging crime rate. It is designed to strengthen the forces of law and order. It is an unashamed attempt to punish and deter more severely those who commit the more severe crimes, and to lessen the opportunities for malefactors to exploit the system as it stands.

The Labour party has heard that outcry as well. On 27 November 1986 the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) put forward his own solution. Predictably enough, it was the election of a Labour Government, to provide the policies and

"to unite the nation against crime."

"to bring the British people together as partners against crimes."—[Official Report, 27 November 1986; Vol. 106, c. 484.]

—whatever that may mean. In the same speech, the right hon. Gentleman opposed the abolition of the right of peremptory challenge. He opposed the raising of the limit on sentences for those who carry firearms in the commission of crime, and he opposed the referral of lenient sentences to higher courts.

We in the Conservative party are arguing that the balance in our criminal justice system should be turned further against the criminal. I may be reading the runes wrongly, but it seems to me that the Opposition tend to argue the case of the malefactor.

If the public are to judge the theme of partnership, and if they are to judge the way in which political parties approach that theme, we need to look at who partners whom — who partners whom in Manchester, not far from my constituency, where the ruling Labour group spends hundreds of thousands of pounds every year on its "Police Watch" magazine, which attacks the police, who partners whom on the Broadwater Farm estate, and who partners whom in the Lobbies tonight.

Mrs. Llin Golding (Newcastle-under-Lyme): Since the Bill last appeared before the House for consideration, many words have been written, and indeed spoken, about the need to reconsider the law on the giving of evidence by children in courts. The emotion, anger and disgust expressed by so many people about the abuse of young children have led to a public outcry on the need to change the law.

It now falls to us to see that the laws can no longer be described as a child molesters' charter. We in the House have the opportunity in the Bill to change the law, to start to help not only those children, but their families and those convicted of abusing children, for if we cannot prosecute them and help them, how can we even begin to halt the increase in child abuse?

Much progress has been made in the past year. The attitude of many in the legal profession has changed. The Government have suggested that they are prepared to consider a change in the law on corroboration and video evidence, which is most welcome.

I followed with care and a great deal of interest the debate on the Bill in the other place, but I am far from satisfied that there is a full understanding of what needs to be done. However, I should like to pay tribute to the many Members in the other place who battled long and hard on the issue in an effort to convince the Government of the need for radical change.

To understand the giving of video evidence, we must first understand what a video link is. What it most certainly is not is a " closed circuit television", which was the amendment accepted in the other place. What it most certainly is is a "live audio-visual link", which is capable of being used as a means of communication during a trial and for the transmission of other sounds and images in connection with the trial — that is, without the intervention of another person to control or operate the system during the giving of evidence; and in such a manner that a witness giving evidence by means of the system may be seen at the trial throughout the giving of his evidence; and in such a manner as to permit the transmission to persons present at the trial of any sounds and images transmitted by means of the system. That is what a video link is and that is what I am reliably informed by Datapoint UK, a firm that produces equip courts in more enlightened countrie successfully does.

I should like to refer to the proposed corroboration of children's evidence. T welcome the Government's proposals, th evidence of a child shall now be admissibl if it is uncorroborated. The provision that understand the duty of speaking the truth stumbling block to the giving of evidence children. The essential point is that a chil telling the truth virtually from the age whe talk, but as the law stands the court will n story until she understands the concept of which could be not until she is very much

That a very young child is capable of information is known by everyone who young children. There is the well-documen American girl of three who was abducted, dropped in a cesspit to drown but survive account of her experiences, which her attac confirmed in every detail. Much research h which comes to the conclusion that there is n between a child's reliability in describing an child's knowledge of the difference betwe "falsehood" and "truth".

In France, Germany and many states States of America, child witnesses of all ag to. It is right that their evidence is treated wit it is right that in this country the courts sh listen to a tiny child. I hope that the Govern further consideration to that in Commit important that all evidence should be listen

I now refer to the use of audio-visual li Bailey case last September, when a nine-y broke down in the witness box and was unab evidence, resulting in 23 charges against the dropped, has won the argument that to subj such mental torture makes the law cruel and forward to seeing the Government's proposa visual links, which I hope will allow evidenc by children in all cases where there is a likeli being intimidated when giving evidence.

Mr. John Patten: I am following closely the thought-provoking speech. I she aware tha things that has disappointed us in the Home having circulated a consultation document on issue, we have had, alas, fewer responses fro might be interested in the correct conduct of cross-examination than we had hoped? We kn Lady's views. If she can do anything to enco to make their views known during the Commi shall be grateful.

Mrs. Golding: I thank the Minister information. It is the quality that counts, not t I assure him that the quality was good when support on audio-visual links. I shall not go full list now, but if the hon. Gentleman wants of the quality, he may have it.

The proposal that very young children allowed to give evidence through a fit per acceptable to the court would be in the inte accused and the child. A tiny child is likely completely if questioned directly by a strange sympathetic that stranger may be or however sympathetically the questions may be put. If the question is put through another person—the so-called child examiner—whom the child knows and trusts, it is sensible to suppose that the child would find it easier to understand and answer the questions. It should not do away with the right of defence counsel to question the child directly should the defence so wish. I hope that the Minister will see the sense in the provision of a child examiner and include it in the Bill.

I shall now deal with the proposals for the admittance of video tapes in the giving of evidence by children. I cannot understand how, with agreed safeguards, anyone could object to such a proposal. Surely it must be acceptable that a video recording, made as soon as practicable after the events, is likely to be of greater use in the search for the truth than the cross-examination of a child months after the events, when much effort will have been made by concerned people to help the child come to terms with what has happened. Surely it must be possible for the police and social services, with the appropriate training, to obtain a statement that would be admissible in evidence. The Nottinghamshire constabulary and those working on the Bexley experiment are two groups that have done much work on the subject. The reports that they have presented have convinced me that it could be done and that a code of practice could be drawn up.

It would be essential that the video recording be available in complete form, with nothing added, omitted or altered, and the accused person and his legal representatives should have the right to inspect and view it. In Texas, 221 out of 235 accused people have pleaded guilty having seen the video recording of the child's evidence, thus saving the child the ordeal of a court hearing. If video tapes are not to be admissible as evidence, more children will suffer the trauma of court hearings, which cannot be what the Minister wants.

The change that is proposed is for the video tape to be used as the child's statement to the court, and that cross-examination would be directed to what she or he has said on the tape. It is intended to be used in the same manner as a written statement.

I should like to think that, in the Bill, we shall take the opportunity to change the law, to do away with the accusation of having a child molester's charter, to help young children and to support the family. We must seek the truth to find the answer to protect the child and the accused.

7.32 pm

Mr. Michael Irvine (Ipswich): One's approach to a Second Reading debate of a Bill that contains no fewer than 154 clauses and 14 schedules must inevitably be selective. I propose to concentrate on three issues, the first being the extension of the powers of the Court of Appeal as set out in clauses 34 and 41 of the Bill.

In his speech, the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) attacked clause 34 on the basis that it would lead to a convicted offender being sentenced twice and having to serve the longest of those two sentences. That argument—the so-called double-jeopardy argument—is fatally flawed. The issue is not whether the offender should serve the longer of the two sentences: or for that matter whether he should serve the shorter. What is important is that the sentence tha offender serves is a just one. Clause 34 will help to e that the sentence he receives is a just one.

Reform enabling the Court of Appeal to inc unduly lenient sentences is long overdue. Standar sentencing by the judiciary are generally very Occasionally however, even the best of judges can a mistake. If they get it wrong and pass an unduly s sentence, the matter can be put right by the Cou Appeal; justice is done and the anxiety of the pub allayed. It seems absurd to argue that, if a judge g wrong the other way and passes an unduly le sentence, the matter cannot be put right. When happens, not merely is justice not done, it manifest seen not to be done. Not only is the victim of the c wronged and resentful, but public confidence in judiciary and the legal system is undermined.

The hue and cry among the media that follow sentence that is perceived to be unduly lenient b intolerable and undesirable pressures to bear on the j in question and may deter other judges from acts of m in instances where they are merited. It may deter ju from passing lenient sentences that, in the partic circumstances of the case, are proper and right.

I see clause 34 lessening the hue and cry among media. It will help to maintain public confidence in legal system and, above all, it will lead to gre consistency in sentencing. It will lead to better justice, to better justice being seen to be done.

Clause 41 complements clause 34 admirably. It enable the Court of Appeal to order a retrial w previously, because of a misdirection or because s technicality has not been observed, a guilty verdict ha be set aside and an acquittal directed, even though facts of the case pointed strongly towards the guilt of accused.

Clause 112 will abolish the right of peremp challenge. On this issue I part company strongly with hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Lawrence). The peremptory challenge is used regulari the hope of obtaining a more sympathetic jury fo defendant. It is used to obtain not a representative jury an unrepresentative jury.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn): Is the h Gentleman aware of a recent report that showed tha 45 per cent. of cases it made no difference whatsoeve

Mr. Irvine: What about the 55 per cent. in which it d

Another important factor that cannot be separa from the peremptory challenge is the growth of ju nobbling—the practice of identifying members of jury who it is thought might be pliable and then bring to bear one or more kinds of pressure or inducement them. Last summer, the Metropolitan police's assist commissioner and head of special operations, Mr. Dell drew attention to the development of this problem. claimed—it was reported prominently in The Time that the Mafia and other organised gangs were employ professional jury-nobblers to pervert the course of just and obtain acquittals.

We would be foolish not to heed the warning. With growth of organised crime and the massive resour behind some of the international drug-smuggling a other criminal rings, that sort of pressure could extremely great and could be a far greater danger a threat to the maintenance of trial by the jury system than the abolition of the right to peremptory challenge. I say that abolition of the right to peremptory challenge will make it just that more difficult for such gangs to operate effectively.

Mr. Archer: I am trying to follow the hon. Gentleman's reasoning. On the face of it, abolition of the right to peremptory challenge would make it more likely that people would attempt to nobble juries.

Mr. Irvine: Not at all. If peremptory challenges are used to secure juries that are thought to be more sympathetic to a defendant, and if that assessment is accurate, it follows that such juries may be more pliable and a much more acceptable target for the nobblers who are employed by criminal gangs. That is an important factor when we are considering the effectiveness of the jury system. I contend that the abolition of the peremptory challenge will make it just that much more difficult for gangs such as the Mafia and other international drug-running organisations to pervert the course of justice by bringing improper pressure to bear on juries.

Clause 128 introduces the offence of having with one in a public place an article with a point or blade. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary spoke about the appalling rise in the incidence of robbery in London and the increasing degree to which knives are being used in such robberies. They were strong words and I was glad to hear them. I was glad earlier when it was announced that this special offence would be included in the Bill.

However, subsection (5) states:

"A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) above shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale."

So the penalty for the offence of carrying a knife in a public place is to be a fine. That is a slap on the wrist, and a limp one at that. Knife-carrying is a dangerous and reprehensible habit and it needs to be stopped in its tracks. Deterrent sentences are needed that will trumpet out that to carry a knife carries the risk of a severe sentence from the courts. I hope that this flaw is remedied in Committee. It is a flaw on the face of what is otherwise, on the whole, an admirable Bill.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): Anyone who represents a constituency such as Brixton lives constantly with the problem of crime. I have always taken an interest in these matters because I want to represent the interests of those who should be able to live their lives peacefully and who do not deserve to have that right interrupted by assaults either on their person or on their property.

I have learnt over the years that the battle against crime is won by partnership, co-operation and confidence within the community in the proper enforcement of the law and the judicial system. There were times when we had considerable doubts about the way in which the magistracy behaved. That was partly because of selection and partly because of inopportune comments that were made about defendants and, sometimes, prosecution witnesses. We worked hard to overcome those difficulties and the changes that have taken place since the Scarman report have done much to reinforce co-operation between the community at large, the police and others who are concerned with the enforcement of law and order.

I think that there is agreement on House that the peremptory challe opportunity for a defendant to challenge way to ensure that it is reasonably rep defendant's peers. We know of the de took place in the southern states of Am people were tried by juries composed of I have in mind the outcry that would member of the National Front were offence of racial harassment in Brick la jury composed entirely of people of Ba

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): the hon. Gentleman's argument. Is it not a member of the National Front should by exercising the right of peremptory cha a coloured juryman?

Mr. Fraser: It is much better that one g be acquitted than that several innocent convicted. That, however, is not the centr that people should believe in the credibili system, and I am sure that overall the rem of peremptory challenge will weaken c system rather than reinforce it. In the bro removal of that right is likely to have a rather than a favourable one.

My constituents, along with oth concerned about the carrying of knives. R has been urged by the Lambeth po consultative council and by an organisa Helpless Youngsters—WHY—which ha my constituency and throughout Londo

There has been co-operation between council, WHY and the local authority. I authority has mounted exhibitions of dan local libraries. We have reached a co community that something needs to be about the carrying of knives. This is partl increase in the number of robberies that the use of knives in which terror is struck e into the heart of the victim and partly number of altercations that result in de injury that might have been comparatively knives had not been carried. For three w my constituency last year persons were k of fights with knives. In two instances th did not include the proposed commission involved an argument about a traffic ac carrying of a knife resulted in a death.

There is widespread concern about t knives and the deaths and injuries which consequence of it. It would be idle to pre is not some fashion in the carrying of kn some who believe that it is right to car fashionable to do so. There are many who w peer group do not meet any expression because they carry a knife. In fact, the rever the position.

There are two principal reasons why people do not commit crimes. First, they believe it to be wrong to do so. The commission of a crime would offend their consciences. There are many who would feel a sense of guilt if they committed a crime. Secondly, there is a less powerful barrier against crime. It is the belief that the individual is likely to be caught and punished, even if he does not believe that he is doing something that is morally wrong. After a while, if the law is reinforced, the fact that a person is likely to be caught and punished gradually becomes part of his consciousness.

That is true of drunken driving. At one time, there was a general tolerance of drinking and driving, but, gradually, the idea has got through to people—as we saw with the anti-social habit of smoking—that not only does one run the risk of being punished, but it is thoroughly wrong to do such a thing. We have to reinforce the law so that there is a greater chance of people being caught and punished as well as greater social disapprobation at the carrying of knives.

I welcome some of the Government's measures, principally the powers to outlaw weapons that cannot possibly have any legitimate use. A series of lethal weapons — such as death stars, flails and sharpened credit cards — are shown in some magazines. By no stretch of the imagination can those weapons have any use except an unlawful one. The Government propose to list those items in a statutory instrument to make carrying them an absolute offence, without any defence available to the carrier. I understand that the magazines that advertise those items will cease to do so not only because the pressure of the Advertising Standards Authority code will be brought to bear but because it will be a criminal offence to supply or sell them. I welcome the Government's proposal and do not think that there is any dispute about it.

There is a difficulty with some weapons—principally knives, as well as chisels and other instruments—that may be carried for a legitimate reason or an illegitimate reason. The Bill is deficient in defining a weapon that is inherently dangerous as having a blade of more than 3 in. I have seen some deadly weapons—some of which I had exhibited in the House—with blades of less than 3 in. I have seen many more weapons with longer blades. Those knives may not be on the list prescribed by the Home Secretary but they cannot possibly have any useful purpose. Other instruments, such as kitchen knives, may have a use which is unlawful or lawful.

I should like the Bill to include a number of measures. Of course there must be a defence of reasonable excuse, including use of the instrument at work, but the defence as defined in the Bill may let people out. Almost everyone has heard of the tragic stabbing of Police Constable Hammond, who while trying to prevent a robbery in a south London shop was stabbed with a kitchen knife by a young lad who worked as a kitchen assistant. Undoubtedly, that boy had the knife for use at work. People who are accused of having a knife on them often tell me that they work in a kitchen and need the knife at work, that they work as electricians and need the knife to strip cable or that they work in a garage and need the knife to cut upholstery in a vehicle. But that alone as a defence is not sufficient. The important point is whether the knife can be readily used at the time a person is found with it.

A Stanley knife is fairly lethal. If I had one locked in my tool case in the back of my car, that is one thing, but if I have it in my pocket at a dance, that is di ingredient of a person's defence should be tha was not for immediate use—for example, it w part of his work of cutting hedges or pruning t a Stanley knife was kept in a tool case or container, which meant that it could not immediate use, that ought to be a defence. I knife, which has an ambiguous use—it can injure and threaten people as well as for a purpose—is ready for use at the time it is public place, there should be a presumptio subject to any other defence of reasonable use

Such is the widespread use of knives in London that I believe that it is wrong that any s sell any knives or sharp instruments to a perso and most certainly they should not be sold t under 16. We worried for a long time about the and eventually concluded that we would n offence to sell to a person under 16 somethin inherently dangerous. Public disapproval of th of knives will be reinforced and buying knive more serious matter if we as a legislature say be illegal to sell a knife to a person under 18. bought by an adult but not by a child.

We should make it an offence for a shopke the weapon as well as for a young person to b a provision would not occasion any great di those who legitimately want a knife or o instrument for their work or hobby but would a sufficient barrier to the acquisition of knives t society's disapproval of the carrying of those

I should also like to outlaw the selling of kniv shops and magazines when the use of those kniv more likely to be for an illicit than for a legal p a tool shop, Stanley knives, chisels and other sh are on sale in the context of tools and other g to be used for a legitimate purpose. In th department of Peter Jones, Harrods or a store kitchen knives are sold in the context of p glassware and kitchenware and an atmosphere are likely to be used for a legitimate purpose. that a person who wanted to get hold of a sha knife would go to such a store and buy it, but would be sold in a lawful context.

In some shops in south London and other p country lethal knives are on sale in such a conte reason for buying them can only be for the sake knives rather than using them for legitimate purp no justification for encouraging such sales in an crimes involving the use of knives are numero the terms of the Bill, a person who goes into su buys a knife and is caught on the pavement o invariably commit an offence. Such a person cross the shop's threshold to commit an offe wrong that the person on one side of the thre carries a dangerous knife commits an offence, w person on the other side who encourages its sale with impunity. In those circumstances, it is un the knife will be sold for anything other than an purpose.

On the balance of convenience, I should like in co-operation with local authorities, to have to cause such a shopkeeper to discontinue t knives. Even more important, I should like t knives through mail order services to be bann when they are sold as part of a set of tools or are likely to be used for a legitimate purpose. These are the matters that concern my constituents.

I said at the beginning of my speech that the enforcement of the law and the working of a peaceful community depend on co-operation. I can understand the point of using stop-and-search powers when a crime has been committed and a search takes place in the immediate proximity of the place in which the crime has been committed—for instance, in a dance hall or at a football match. In such cases, there is no subjective test; a crime has been committed involving a knife or other weapon, and it is matter of searching within the proximity. But we must be careful about the use of powers of search in circumstances that would merely widen the use of search and perhaps create enmity and distrust in the community.

I am doubtful about the extra powers the Bill would provide, and they must be used with great circumspection if the law is to be respected and if we are to carry the weight of the community behind the new restrictions that—on the whole—we are quite properly introducing.

Mr. Timothy Kirkhope (Leeds, North-East): This is the sort of Bill about which many of us have had a lot of correspondence from constituents. It contains so many different clauses that people have suggested that it should also contain other things which are not to be found in it now. However, I shall confine my remarks to the issue of the victims of crime and the parts of the Bill that try to help such victims and their families.

It is important to consider who the victim is. He tends to be generous towards the person who perpetrated the crime. He is often quite undemanding of revenge against the criminal. That means that a greater responsibility is incumbent on society to ensure that whatever is done is done to help the victim; and that a crime does not result in too much deep consideration of assistance to the criminal, but rather in consideration of the victim.

Obviously there are ways in which we can assist. I am heartened to see the growth in many areas of the country of victim support schemes. In the main they have been most helpful and have arisen out of a genuine wish on the part of the community in which the victim lives to be of help in the immediate aftermath of appalling incidents such as violent crimes, and to see that psychological help, for instance, is given to the victim. It is important to establish whether a loss has been sustained and what can be done directly and quickly to assist.

However, although such schemes are successful, we owe it to ourselves to bear in mind the needs of the victim. I am pleased that the Bill has, to a large extent, taken matters further than before—in relation to the criminal injuries compensation scheme, the compensation of victims by the courts and the confiscation of a criminal's assets, which is an important feature of compensating the victims of crime.

It is difficult to know how to strike a happy medium, but although the criminal injuries compensation scheme has been in existence for 23 years, it always had about it a level of discretion which was undesirable. It was felt that its discretion might not be always exercised in favour of a claimant, for one reason or another, which was not always wholly fair. So the absolute right to receive compensation, on production of [illegible] requirements of probability, seems [illegible] as a replacement for that discretion.

Another important new introducti[illegible] now be a direct relationship between [illegible] victim through the work of the compensation scheme. It is vital that, offenders should be responsible compensating their victims. Various [illegible] forward, and victims do not necessar[illegible] person who perpetrated the crime ag[illegible] think, would be wrong; but they can k[illegible] of the crime through the compensatio[illegible] seeing that there is a direct link and t[illegible] committed the crime against them or th[illegible] responsible for the compensation. T[illegible] proposal, which deserves our support.

For many years I have practised [illegible] contact with clients was not usually th[illegible] courts but had largely to do with matte[illegible] I have found that victims are loth t[illegible] compensation. When one examines th[illegible] for compensation orders being made, [illegible] see that in future reasons will have [illegible] compensation order is made in [illegible] Previously the onus was on the victim t[illegible] wrong. Society has an obligation to see [illegible] orders are made without them having [illegible] people who might not wish to do so fo[illegible]

Although the confiscation of assets d[illegible] directly assist a victim, it is very importa[illegible] there is an attitude of mind which says [illegible] criminals—especially professional crim[illegible] able to get away with their crimes. The[illegible] and, because of the increase in police [illegible] they will continue to be caught in even la[illegible] there has always been a feeling that such [illegible] able to serve out their sentences and the[illegible] gold when they come out of prison, livi[illegible] rest of their lives, while the person who [illegible] crime—I suggest that we all lose becau[illegible] —must continue as before. He may no[illegible] well, while the criminals live it up in the [illegible] foreign country.

That is unacceptable, and it was ri[illegible] should be extended to ensure that the con[illegible] on a pre-trial basis, for instance, should [illegible] discretionary matter, and that a stronger[illegible] available to the courts to do that. Tha[illegible] people much more confidence in our ju[illegible] our system of punishment.

I said at the beginning that this was [illegible] have covered many things. Something t[illegible] liked it to cover—I hope that somethi[illegible] will be brought forward at some point[illegible] consideration should be given to provid[illegible] would allow us to prosecute someone w[illegible] suspicion of his having committed war cr[illegible] many such people cannot be dealt with pr[illegible] many victims of such people both in Brita[illegible] who look to us to try to consider, ever[illegible] discussing war crimes, [illegible] way in whic[illegible] people to book, preferably under the E[illegible] justice. For all its faults, our system of just[illegible] to the rest of the world and is much follow[illegible] enhance our reputation for justice.

8.10 pm

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn): I have listened to many of the speeches and it seems that many hon. Members have had the opportunity to debate an earlier Bill. I may be at some disadvantage in that this is the first time that I have been able to speak on this Bill. Other Members have had one bite of the cherry and have made some progress in amending an earlier measure. I am aware that the Bill has already been in another place, where it was amended. I am hopeful that in the lively debate we might get in Committee further amendments will be made.

An Opposition Member spoke about what he called the philosophy that underlies the Government's view of the Bill. Some provisions commend themselves to me and to my hon. Friends, but its fundamental philosophy is flawed. That is because the Government seem to believe that increased prosecution powers and increased sentencing powers are in themselves a way of arresting crime and preventing people from re-offending. That is a fundamentally flawed philosophy because one must look at other issues.

This debate takes place against the background of a substantially increasing prison population. It is unacceptable that the proportion of people who reoffend is very high, and that, proportionately, the prison population in the United Kingdom is much higher than in any other EC country. It is a sad reflection of our society that six out of 10 male offenders and four out of 10 women offenders leaving gaol are back behind bars within two years. It is a further sad reflection that two thirds of young offenders are reconvicted within two years of release.

I confirm the Opposition claim that the number of people on remand in prison is unacceptably high. The conditions in many of our remand centres are intolerable. I am afraid that the matters addressed by the Government in the Bill do not directly address those issues. We cannot solve crime merely by shifting the balance in favour of the state or by increasing sentences. As I have said, it involves much wider issues, such as looking at the conditions that breed so much despair, violence and crime in the urban areas and the deprived rural areas.

I shall now deal with some specific aspects of the Bill. First, on extradition, the removal of the prima facie rule is a controversial provision. If we are to have a system of justice under which anybody who appears before a Crown court has first appeared before a magistrates court in which the examining magistrate has had to be satisfied that the defendant should answer a charge in the Crown court, then that system should also apply to people who go to other countries to face charges and to citizens of the countries of Britain who face charges elsewhere.

We seem to be adopting double standards and ought to have the same approach to offences that have taken place here as we have to offences that take place elsewhere. Therefore, if in extradition proceedings we ask an examining magistrate merely to be a rubber stamp at the behest of the country seeking extradition, it is a sad day for justice. I should like to see amendments withdrawing that clause, and I hope that the progress made in another place to temper these provisions will be continued in Committee.

I should like to deal with a specific issue on the proposals about evidence, especially the increased reliance on the use of written statements and reports. That could be construed as another example of the interests of the prosecution overriding the interests of the appears before the court. The Law Society i the need for these provisions in these terms may well be irrelevant in the light of secti Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, whi certain aspects of written evidence.

The Bill introduces the possibility of writte and reports being used in evidence withou maker or author of those statements or repo from experience that much use is currently ma statements and documents in our courts and considerable amount of time. In magistrates committal proceedings are popularly known paper committals because the examining ma consider only paper statements. Even in later trials, unless the defence has made a request to be present, the statement of that witness

I know of many instances in magistrate Crown courts of the increasing use of writte The main criticism of this provision is that in it reduces and limits the right of a defenc solicitor to request the attendance of the statement or report. As some hon. Member many statements and reports can be extremel sial. Therefore, in the final analysis each def have the right to call any witness to gi especially in cases where the defendant is in criminal charge.

Mr. Hind: The hon. Gentleman must be a every case, either in a magistrates court on c in a Crown court on a jury trial, counsel representing the defence has the right, havi papers, to decide to call a witness. There safeguard for the defence and now, as a con legislation, there is disclosure of all papers in a court if that is requested. Perhaps in the light o situation the hon. Gentleman would reconsi has said.

Mr. Jones: I have read with great deliberations that took place on the Bill in an The Government, in pronouncing on the me other place, envisaged the situation where wi not available because they had absconded ab the judge could decide that the statemen admitted without challenge. That is a retrogr should not be allowed.

I accept parts of the provision on particularly those for increasing maximum offences of cruelty to young persons and insider dealings. With many other hon. Memb to the extension of the maximum penalty offences to life imprisonment. I have liste eloquent contributions of hon. Members an learned Members who have experience of cas firearms in the Crown court. It is sensible to there is the same sentence for carrying a fir using it, the person carrying the firearm ma abscond and will face the same sentence whet it or not. The Police Federation has expres about the proposal, on the ground that to same maximum penalty for carrying a firearm it would disregard proportionality betwee another.

I welcome the provisions on compensat particularly the placing of the Crimin

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions have taken place between his Department and British Telecom on the telephone exchange for the deaf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 12 January at column 243.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of women medical laboratory scientific officers working in the public health laboratory service; and what are the total numbers of women so employed.

Mr. Newton: There were 475 women medical laboratory scientific officers employed in the public health laboratory service at 30 September 1987, representing 50·5 per cent. of all MLSOs in PHLS.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mrs. Currie: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service, which was published by Cabinet Office (then Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual complaints procedures.

The Department of Health and Social Security has brought this policy, together with guidance on complaints procedures, to the attention of all staff in a departmental circular.

Records are not kept of any complaints which are dealt with by immediate line management but serious complaints are referred to headquarters for appropriate action. There have been six such complaints since 1983 all involving harassment of female staff. The penalties imposed were a local warning as to future conduct (two cases), formal reprimand by headquarters (one case), a reprimand plus promotion bar (one case), a reprimand, promotion bar and incremental reduction (one case) and downgrading and a repromotion bar (one case).

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in what percentage of social security tribunal cases in each year from 1980 to 1986 the claimant was represented.

Mr. Portillo: The tables give the information required. Prior to April 1984, appeal statistics on representation were kept only for supplementary benefit appeal tribunals. There are no comparable figures for national insurance local tribunals.

Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that appropriate capital and revenue funding needed for the development of the Royal National orthopaedic hospital at Stanmore will be forthcoming in the near future; and when a decision will be announced.

Mrs. Currie: Bloomsbury health authority, which manages the Royal National orthopaedic hospital, is responsible for setting the hospital's budget. The health authority has consulted publicly on an appraisal of options for the future role and location of the hospital; the results are now with the North East Thames regional health authority for its consideration. Ministers are committed to taking the final decision on any proposals from the region for significant changes at the hospital.

St. John Ambulance Brigade

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the St. John Ambulance Brigade centenary to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 15 February 1988 to 19 February 1988.

Nurses and Midwives

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will specify the methods used by his Department to determine the number of staff midwives in post in the National Health Service;

(2) if he will specify the methods used by his Department to distinguish between staff nurses and midwives when collecting manpower statistics relating to employment in maternity units.

Mr. Newton: Computer tapes are received from regional payroll systems. Those data for staff nurses and staff midwives are then extracted by using the particular payscale and occupation code. The occupation code enables staff nurses and staff midwives employed in maternity units to be separately identified. Information to this level of detail is produced annually as at 30 September.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has given to the request from the Medical Research Council for £700,000; and for what purposes such a sum will be used.

Mr. Newton: I have agreed to the provision of £700,000 for the Medical Research Council's programme of AIDS epidemiology research.

Brook Hospital, Woolwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the recommendation from the South East Thames regional health authority to transfer the neurosciences unit from the Brook hospital, Woolwich; what consideration he has given to this proposal; and when he plans to visit the hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The recommendation from South East Thames regional health authority to build a new regional neurosciences unit, which will replace the existing provision at the Brook hospital and the Maudsley hospital, was sent to the Department on 22 June 1987. Either my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, or my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health, will visit both hospitals after departmental officials have received and considered further information and clarification from the regional health authority on a number of important issues. This complex proposal, involving capital expenditure of at least £29 million and which would result in the closure of the neurosciences unit at the Brook hospital, is being given detailed and careful consideration.

District Health Authorities (Land)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the district health authorities which have disposed of land since 1982; who purchased the land; and what is the use to which it has been put.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information at the level of detail requested is not routinely collected by the Department and to obtain it would be to incur disproportionate expense.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of available beds in National Health Service hospitals in England for each year since 1979, expressed as totals and by specialty; and if he will break down the totals by region.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is contained in the booklets "Forms SH3, EDP4, 5 & 6—Regional and National summaries", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority, the average daily number of beds available in 1979 and 1986 for all specialties and for acute specialties.

Mrs. Currie: For the information on the total number of beds in each health authority I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 17 December 1987, at columns 699-703. The information requested on acute beds is given in the table. Between 1979 and 1986 the number of in-patient and day cases treated in the acute sector rose from 4·8 million to 5·9 million, an increase of 24·5 per cent.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each regional health authority, district health authority, and special health authority, and for England as a whole, the number of attendances in 1983 and 1986 by (a) private out-patients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day patients.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available centrally without incurring disproportionate costs as soon as possible.

Heating Benefit

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what measures his Department is taking to assist those tenants on estates designated by his Department as exceptionally expensive to heat who will lose heating benefit under the Social Security Act 1986;

(2) how many households will lose the help which they presently receive through the social security system towards their heating bills with the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Portillo: In general transitional protection will be paid to existing supplementary benefit recipients, where overall benefit entitlement under income support would otherwise decrease. This will ensure that they will not lose the cash value of the help they currently receive towards heating costs.

Benefits

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of people living in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland, (d) England and (e) each of the standard English regions is dependant upon supplementary benefit; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The available information is as follows:

Proportion of Total Population Dependent on Supplementary Benefit (per cent.).

Year	United Kingdom	England	Scotland	Wales
1979	8·14	7·82	8·66	9·51
1980	9·06	8·75	9·27	10·30
1981	11·37	10·99	11·74	13·14
1982	13·12	12·69	13·64	15·18
1983	13·45	12·99	13·84	15·58
1984	14·30	13·81	15·00	16·84
1986	15·28	14·73	16·24	17·65

Information on the numbers of people dependent on supplementary benefit is not available by standard English region.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to raise the £3,000 capital threshold used to determine supplementary and other benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The capital cut-off will be doubled to £6,000 when income support replaces supplementary benefit in April. An income of £1 for each band of £250 capital held between £3,000 and £6,000 will be assumed. The same rule will apply in family credit, which will replace family income supplement, and housing benefit.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are claiming supplementary benefit in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland, (d) England and (e) each of the standard English regions; what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979; and what was the actual and percentage increase between the latest figures and the corresponding figures for 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The available information is as follows:

Numbers of people claiming supplementary benefit (000's)

	United Kingdom	England	Scotland	Wales
1979	2,970	2,400	286	172
1980	3,247	2,627	304	186

Information on the numbers of people dependent on supplementary benefit is not available by standard English region.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his proposals to improve the conditions of medical laboratory scientific officers.

Mr. Newton: The pay and conditions of medical laboratory scientific officers are matters for the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council. I understand that the management side of that council has been preparing proposals for a comprehensive grade restructuring which are to be put to the staff side as early as possible.

Transplants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will establish a register of all transplants carried out, and all transplant organs used, as suggested by Sir Roy Calne FRS; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The establishment of such a register is under active consideration in conjunction with the British Transplantation Society, but a final decision has not yet been reached.

Medicines (Exemption from Licensing)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of time taken in each of the last three years by his Department to process applications under article 3 of the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Manufacturer and Assembly Temporary Provisions) Order 1972; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to her on 18 December 1987 at column 905.

Mentally Handicapped Persons (Written Question)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the hon. Member for Bradford, South has not yet received a substantive reply to his question tabled for priority written answer on 1 December 1987 concerning care for the mentally handicapped; when he may expect to receive a reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I apologise to the hon. Member that he has not yet received a substantive reply. It has been necessary to make inquiries to bring up to date the information held centrally. I hope to be able to let him have a reply soon.

Merseyside (Funds Allocation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the sum to be allocated to the Merseyside regional area out of the £100 additional funds made available in the financ 1987-88; and how much of that sum is to be allo the St. Helens and Knowsley district health auth

Mrs. Currie: Total additional funding for the Kingdom announced on 16 December 1987 by r hon. Friend the Minister for Health, is over £100 of which £13·3 million is to offset the costs of the caused by the severe storms on 16 October and affects health authorities in London and the south- the remainder, £75 million is for English health au and includes £10 million in further recognition particular pressures from the steadily rising nu AIDS cases which three of the Thames regions ar this year.

The Mersey regional health authority's shar additional funds is £3·4 million. It is for the re determine how these extra resources are spent loc the hon. Member may care to contact the chairman for information on how the money is bei

Medically Qualified Staff

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of S Social Services if he has any data regarding the tir by medically qualified staff who work in the con to arrange transport to and from hospital fo patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requ not available. It is the responsibility of health au locally to make arrangements for transporting to those patients who are considered by a clinician to the facilities of the NHS ambulance service. The as day-to-day operational arrangements are also f decision.

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary for Social Services (1) whether he will seek to ref Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979 two appropriate representatives from the pr professions who are not members of the United K Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Visiting may serve on the professional conduct co in order to increase flexibility and reduce dela hearings;

(2) how many cases are currently awaiting a he the professional conduct committee of the Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwif Health Visiting; and what is the current average time for such hearings;

(3) what are the reasons for the delays in hearin professional conduct committee of the United K Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Visiting; and what action is being considered reduce the meeting times and the backlog of case

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for hearings professional conduct committee of the United K Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Visiting rests with the UKCC. I understand fr UKCC that when it was created in 1983 it inherite 100 cases awaiting hearing, and that this figure h risen to approximately 150. The current average time from arrival with the committee is about 12

This build-up of cases of alleged professional misconduct is thought to be largely the result of increased public awareness accompanied by an increased understanding of professional accountability following the issue by the UKCC of a code of professional practice.

The UKCC is very concerned about these delays and is at present considering what arrangements can be introduced to reduce the backlog and facilitate a speedier clearance of these cases in the future.

We would be happy to consider any request from the council for a change to primary legislation to enable non-council members to serve on the professional conduct committee, but can give no assurances at this stage as to when time might be found in the legislative timetable.

Abortion

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to in which year the following countries introduced laws to make abortion legal, either on request or in certain circumstances (a) the Federal Republic of Germany, (b) the United States of America, (c) France, (d) Spain, (e) Italy and (f) Portugal.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the information requested is as follows:

(a) Federal Republic of Germany—1974 and 1976;
(b) United States of America—there is no federal legislation on abortion but in 1973 a ruling established the constitutional right to an abortion in certain circumstances. Individual States enact a wide range of laws;
(c) France—1975 and 1979;
(d) Spain—1975;
(e) Italy—1978 and 1981;
(f) Portugal—1984

Adopted Children

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish statistics on characteristics of adopted children as proposed in his second report to Parliament on the Children Act 1975, HC 20,1984-85.

Mrs. Currie: As reported in "OPCS Monitor" issued on 11 August 1987, difficulties have been experienced with the statistical returns giving detailed information on all aspects of adoption, including the characteristics of adopted children. Insufficient numbers of completed returns have been received to yield reliable statistical information. The results of an inquiry are being analysed to see what corrective measures should be introduced. In the meantime, information on adoption continues to be available in "OPCS Monitor" (series reference FM3), copies of which are available in the Library.

Thames Health Regions

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will express the sums of money allocated to the four Thames health regions from the £100 million extra moneys allocated to meet 1987-88 shortfall announced on 16 December 1987, excluding the moneys allocated (a) for AIDS, (b) for storm damage, (c) for the reduction of waiting lists and (d) any other specially allocated moneys.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to make sure that existing disabled claimants are protected against any reduction in their benefits after the changes in social security benefits of April in the current year.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 14 January 1988]: At the point of change, existing disabled claimants will receive protection in real terms for high domestic assistance additions paid under the existing scheme and protection in cash terms for all other shortfalls arising from changes in the rules. All real terms protection will be subject to an eight weeks linking rule if entitlement to income support is broken, as will most protection in cash terms of £10 or more. The rules governing the reduction of this protection are provided for in regulations 12 to 15 of the Income Support (Transitional) Regulations 1987.

District Health Authorities (North-West)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total per capita expenditure by the National Health Service in each district health authority in the north-west region upon (a) in-patients, (b) out-patients and (c) the total population, in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Per capita figures based on total populations of the district health authorities in the north-western region are shown in the table. For information on average treatment costs of in-patients and out-patients by type of hospital within the region, I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (the latest being for 1985-86)—copies of which are held in the Library.

Appeals Procedures (Report)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the report of the central management support inquiry team on procedures for handling appeals; what were its main recommendations; what steps he is taking to implement them; and whether a copy of the report will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 January central management support report "Appeal Local and Central Offices" has been pr recommendations are being studied and an a implementation of those which are accepted up. The report examines detailed procedu within the Department for the handling of s studies are internal and technical reviev procedures and are not normally made available outside the Department. However, I recognise that delays in the processing of appeals and ways whereby they may be reduced are matters of concern to a number of hon. Members and I have therefore arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Hospitals

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, how many beds there are in service hospitals in the United Kingdom; what is the current percentage of their occupancy by patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) on 13 January 1988, Official Report, columns 200-202.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many beds there were in service hospitals in 1979 and in the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested for the United Kingdom, which is based on average figures of beds available in 1979 and the current actual figures for beds available on 6 January 1988 is:

[2] This unit is attached to Musgrave Park civilian hospital.
[3] This unit is now closed.

Tyneham

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to restore the village of Tyneham to those remaining of its original inhabitants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 January 1988]: There are no plans to review the use of Lulworth training area which encompasses Tyneham village.

PRIME MINISTER

Windscale Fire

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 2, she will give the number of papers on the Windscale fire in 1957 withheld under the terms of the Public Records Act.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 14 January at column 353.

European Court of Justice

Q42. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to the European Court of Justice.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Bilton

Q43. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Bilton, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Efficiency Unit (Progress Reports)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the title of each progress report that has been made to her by the efficiency unit since its inception; and, in each case, when she received the report and whether it was subsequently published.

The Prime Minister: The efficiency unit reports to me from time to time on a variety of matters. The unit's reports "Consultancy, Inspection and Review Services in Government Departments", which I received in July 1984, and "Making Things Happen: a report on the implementation of government efficiency scrutinies", which I received in May 1985, were published. The unit also keeps me in touch with progress on the central scrutiny programme: topics included are listed annually, most recently in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) on 6 April 1987 at column 23.

Engagements

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister to list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister to list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 January.

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 January.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 January.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later this afternoon. This evening I am speaking at the Britain-Australia Society's bicentennial celebration at the Guildhall.

Inner Cities

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report details of measures which the Government have introduced since May 1979 to deal with urban dereliction and inner city decay; and what further measures the Government propose to introduce to improve the quality of the environment, the opportunity for employment and the encouragement of the private sector to invest in inner urban areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply because of my responsibility, under the Prime Minister, for the co-ordination of Government action on inner cities and for its presentation.

Since 1979 the Government have developed a range of policies and initiatives to deal with urban dereliction and inner city decay through encouraging development and raising business confidence. The following measures cover initiatives in England; my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales have also developed a range of programmes and initiatives to encourage urban regeneration.

Urban Development Corporations

Urban development corporations have been set up with powers to acquire, reclaim and service land, bring land and buildings into effective use, promote new development and housing and support community facilities. The London Docklands and Merseyside development corporations have been in operation since 1981. Four more were set up in 1987: Trafford Park, Teesside, Tyne and Wear and the Black Country. The London and Merseyside corporations have helped to create or retain nearly 14,000 jobs.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 7 December 1987 three new urban development corporations — in Bristol, Leeds and Central Manchester, and the extension of the Black Country development corporation to Wolverhampton;

Derelict Land Grant

Derelict land grant encourages the reuse of land which has been so damaged by former industrial or other development that it cannot be used without treatment. In assisted areas and derelict land clearance areas grants for reclamation are paid at 100 per cent to local authorities and at 80 per cent. to private sector owners. Elsewhere the rate is 50 per cent. for all applicants. Priority is given to schemes which will provide land for housing, industry and commerce. Through derelict land grant over 1,000 hectares are reclaimed every year;

Land Registers

Land registers of unused and underused land owned by public authorities are held by the Department of the Environment to help prospective developers to obtain the release of particular sites. The Department has powers to direct public owners to sell land which is registered on the open market. The land registers currently contain some 40,000 hectares; over 20,000 hectares have been removed from the registers since they were introduced in 1981;

Urban Development Grant

The Government introduced urban development grants in late 1982 to encourage the economic and physical regeneration of inner urban areas by attracting private sector investment in projects which would not otherwise take place in these areas. Nearly £130 million in urban development grants have been approved which will lever at least £526 million of private investment;

Urban Regeneration Grant

Urban regeneration grant, introduced under the Housing and Planning Act 1986, promotes the economic and physical regeneration of older urban areas affected by urban change, by enabling the private sector to redevelop large sites and refurbish large groups of buildings. Grant is paid direct to private sector owners and developers;

Estate Action

Estate Action was launched in June 1985 to work with local authorities to develop innovatory solutions to problems arising on their rundown housing estates. They included new ways of running estates such as tenant management co-operatives or trusts, measures to diversify tenure, involving private sector finance and estate-based management initiatives to give tenants greater involvement and control. Over 100 new schemes were launched in 1987/88;

Task Forces

In 1986 the Government launched inner city task forces in inner city areas to encourage local enterprise and initiatives and motivate communities. Sixteen task forces, which are currently the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry, are now operating. More than 200 companies are already working with the task forces whose business development funds, aimed at new and small businesses, have so far assisted over 160 businesses;

Enterprise Zones

As an experiment to encourage development by deregulation, 17 enterprise zones have been set up in England since 1981. These help to unlock land for industry and commerce by removing tax burdens and relaxing administrative and planning controls. The zones have led to the development of 700 hectares of land. A total of £90 million has been spent to improve their infrastructure and release their potential;

Local Enterprise Agencies

In co-operation with Business in the Community, the Government support a network of local enterprise agencies, with special emphasis on developing those inner city areas.

Since 1979 the Government have recast the interdepartmental urban programme, which supports some 12,000 inner city projects annually, to give priority to area-based regeneration involving the private sector. They have also strengthened the Government's contribution to local regeneration by the formation, in 1985, of city action teams to bring together the relevant programmes of the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of Employment and Manpower Services Commission and the Department of the Environment. Other Departments' programmes, for example, Home Office crime prevention and ethnic community initiatives and inner city school-employer and adult training initiatives supported by the Department of Education and Science, have contributed significantly to inner city regeneration.

The Government intend to build on these substantial achievements by taking further steps to involve the private sector in inner city regeneration and widen the choice and opportunities open to inner city residents. The measures proposed in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise" (Cmnd. 278), laid before the House on 12 January, include significant proposals to encourage enterprise and industry in inner city areas. For example, the new consultancy initiatives will offer higher levels of grant in urban areas to encourage the growth and development of small firms.

ENVIRONMENT

Ettingshall Park Farm Estate

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the residents of Ettingshall Park Farm estate in Wolverhampton will receive information about the results of the investigation of old limestone workings in the area; and what advice he will give the residents about the long-term stability of their homes and the effect on property values of these investigations.

Mr. David Trippier: The Department recently approved 100 per cent. derelict land grant to enable Wolverhampton metropolitan borough council to undertake further site investigations of the abandoned limestone mines which underlie parts of Ettingshall Park Farm estate. The results will be available this summer. It will be for the borough council to assess them and keep local residents informed. What happens next will depend on the outcome of the site investigations. However, the Department secured an agreement last year that insurance cover and mortgage lending will be available on normal terms for properties in limestone areas. This should help to protect the confidence of householders concerned. Further details are set out in the DOE news release of 6 April 1987.

Local Authorities (Disposal of Land)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Burnley on 12 January, if he will list in the Official Report those authorities directed to dispose of land under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 in the last 12 months.

Mr. Chope: The authorities are:

Barking and Dagenham LB
Barrow-in-Furness BC
Blackburn BC
Burnley BC
Cheshire CC
Doncaster MBC[1]
Kingston upon Hull City Council[2]
Kingston upon Thames LB
Kirklees MBC[1]
Leicestershire CC
Macclesfield BC
Mansfield DC
North Hertfordshire DC
Rotherham MBC
Sheffield City Council
Southwark LB
Sutton LB[1]
York City Council[1]

Rating Reform

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sources, other than the electoral register, will be available to those responsible for compiling the register of those liable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Howard: Each community charge registration officer will be able to require other registration officers, his own and other local authorities, and electoral registration officers to supply information from their records. In addition, CCROs will be able to obtain information from a responsible person at each address and from persons subject to the community charge.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if (a) service personnel or (b) students who use a parental address as a home base and electoral address are to be liable for the community charge.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 18 January 1988]: United Kingdom service personnel will generally be liable to pay the personal community charge at their sole or main residence. A minority of service men—those who reside in properties designated in the interests of national security or because the turnover is too rapid to make registration for the personal charge practical — will pay a contribution, similar to that paid by residents of properties designated for the collective community charge, which will be passed on by the Government to the relevant local authority.

Full-time students will be liable to pay 20 per cent. of the personal community charge at their term-time address.

Water (Privatisation)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the future of the water companies after the water authorities have been privatised.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government intend to bring the statutory water companies under the same system of regulation as the privatised water utilities and to remove current controls over dividends and related restrictions. It is also proposed to give the companies the option of becoming public limited companies. Last year the Department sent the Water Companies' Association two consultation papers on these matters:

(i) Statutory water companies: removal of financial controls
(ii) Statutory water companies: conversion to public limited companies.

Copies of these papers have been placed in the Library of the House.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his policy to direct the Nature Conservancy Council to sell off its holdings in the three national nature reserves at Whitford, Gower Coast and Oxwich.

Mr. Moynihan: I have asked the Nature Conservancy Council to consider whether there is greater scope for national nature reserves to be held in private ownership under conservation safeguards. The council's advice is expected later this year. The council does not own the reserves at Whiteford or Gower Coast, and owns only part of the reserve at Oxwich.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of each national nature reserve in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) Scotland, indicating for each reserve its total area and the proportion (i) owned by private landowners, (ii) owned by the Nature Conservancy Council and (iii) owned by other public bodies.

Mr. Moynihan: Some of this information is available in the NCC's published annual report, though not in this precise form. It will take a little time to produce the full information requested, but I will do this as soon as possible.

Merseyside Residuary Body

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present situation respecting the Merseyside residuary body; how long it is expected to remain in existence; how much it has cost in each year of its existence; what its budget is expected to be in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Merseyside residuary body and other residuary bodies are required to use their best endeavours to secure that their work is completed as soon as practicable and in any event within five years of the date of abolition of the Merseyside county council.

The cost of the Merseyside residuary body since its inception in 1985 is shown in its annual statements of accounts for 1985-86 and 1986-87, published on 18 November 1986 and 25 November 1987 respectively.

Copies of these documents are available in the Library of the House. Costs in respect of 1987-88 will not be known until the 1987-88 accounts have been audited and certified. Budget estimates for 1988-89 are matters for the residuary body.

Croxteth Hall Country Park, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards the setting up of the trust to administer Croxteth hall country park, Liverpool.

Mr. Moynihan: I am still considering this matter.

Docklands (London)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of unemployed in the three docklands boroughs in July 1981 and at the latest available date; and what is the change as a percentage.

Mr. Cope: I have been asked to reply.

On 10 December 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the London boroughs of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham were 18,737, 14,243 and 14,405 respectively. Unemployment figures for London boroughs are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Fuller Peiser

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all consultancies carried out by the London-based agents Fuller Peiser since 1983 on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 14 January 1988, c. 358]: Fuller Peiser was commissioned in September 1985 to schedule and value the assets to be licensed by the Ministry of Defence to the commercial contractors of the royal dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth; that commission was let by the Property Services Agency on behalf of the Ministry of Defence. The commercial contractors began their operations in the dockyards on 1 April 1987 and Fuller Peiser completed its commission in December 1987.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the housing benefit system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

The Secretary of State is required formally to consult only the local authority associations and we have received representations from all six of the associations on the housing benefit reforms. In addition, many comments and suggestions have been received during the process of reform from other organisations and individuals. All of these were considered carefully in the context of finalising the details of the new scheme.

EMPLOYMENT

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State fo Employment what is the present average number of hou overtime a week worked per operative in Britis manufacturing industry, ignoring short-time working.

Mr. Cope: The average number of hours of overtim per operative in manufacturing industries in Great Britai in November 1987 was 3·7, seasonally adjusted.

YTS

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State fo Employment how often, on average, a YTS scheme ma expect to be inspected by the Training Standards Advisor Services.

Mr. Cope: There are currently 3,150 organisatio approved by the Manpower Services Commission organise and deliver YTS training programmes. Th Training Standards Advisory Service expects to visit eve approved training organisation at least once within a fiv year period. The comprehensive inspections which th service carries out are additional to the regular monitorin of YTS delivery carried out by MSC area and region office staff.

Work Accidents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State fo Employment how many reported accidents at work the have been in each year since 1979 in (a) Waltham Fores (b) London and (c) nationally.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for acciden to employees is as follows:

[1] Major injuries were first defined under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurences Regulations (NADOR), 1980. Data are therefore not available before 1981. The definition was widened from April 1986 with the introduction of the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurences Regulations (RIDDOR), 1985. Figures for 1986-87 are therefore not comparable with those for earlier years.

[2] For 1979-80, over three day absences leading to claims for industrial injury benefit from DHSS, years starting on 1st Monday in June; for 1981-82 these claims as notified to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) for calendar years. This source was effectively abolished in 1983. From April 1986 the information is reported to enforcing authorities under RIDDOR. It is not comparable with that for the earlier years and may be subject to under-reporting. Data for 1986-87 exclude over three day injuries reported to Her Majesty's Mines and Quarries Inspectorate, other than those reported to them by British Coal. They also exclude such injuries reported to the Petroleum Engineering Division.

[3] Those injuries reported to the London borough of Waltham Forest (data not available for 1981 and 1983). Non fatal injuries also include those reported to Her Majesty's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates, and known to have occurred in Waltham Forest.

[4] Those injuries known to have occurred in any of the London boroughs and reported to them or to Her Majesty's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates. Local Authority figures are based on voluntary returns from the 33 London boroughs. Not all the London boroughs return figures in each year.

[3] and [4] Fatal and major injuries reported to Local Authorities will include a relatively small number of injuries to the self employed. These could not be distinguished from injuries suffered by employees, without disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for more than one year in the Peterlee and Seaham areas.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987, the numbers of unemployed claimants in the local authority wards[1] which most closely correspond to the Peterlee and Seaham areas, who were unemployed for one year or more were 1,426 and 873 respectively.

[1] Note—The wards which cover Peterlee are Shadforth, Acre Rigg, Blackhalls, Dene House, Easington Colliery, Easington Village, Eden Hill, Haswell, Hordern North, Hordern South, Howletch, Passfield, Shotton, South Hetton. The wards which cover Seaham are Dawdon, Deneside, High Colliery, Murton East, Murton West, Park, Seaham, South.

Jobcentres

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy regarding the provision of jobcentre facilities via other agencies in communities not served by jobcentres; and will he list such agents.

Mr. Lee: My Department's policy is to provide jobcentre facilities for everybody who needs them. In some parts of the country, especially rural areas, a community may be served by a jobcentre which is some distance away. Very often in these circumstances, arrangements have been made to provide a service to the community through initiatives such as local displays of vacancies and information, the use of freefone, mobile jobcentres, and the payment of interview fares for all unemployed people who travel more than three miles to attend an interview at their jobcentre.

The employment service is also seeking to provide jobclub services in such areas through agents normally chosen by competitive tender. Such agents include chambers of commerce, local education authorities and private training providers.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the jobcentres which have closed in Wales in each year since 1979, and those which have moved from their own premises to be administered by other agencies.

Mr. Lee: The following jobcentres have closed in Wales since 1979:

1980
- Abergele[1]
- Burry Port[1]
- Rhos[1]

1982
- Pembroke Dock site office[1]

1983
- Bethesda
- Llandovery
- Swansea (Castle street merged with Swansea, Grove House jobcentre)
- Cardiff (St. Mary street merged with Cardiff, The Friary jobcentre)

1985
- Bridgend industrial estate (merged with Bridgend jobcentre)

[1] Employment office offering service similar to those provided by jobcentres.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those agencies used by the Manpower Services Commission in Wales which offer on behalf of the Manpower Services Commission those services usually available at jobcentres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Manpower Services Commission ceased to have responsibility for jobcentres from 26 October 1987. From that date the employment service of the Department of Employment took control of the operations of the jobcentres as well as the unemployment benefit offices.

There are no agencies used by the employment service or the Manpower Services Commission in Wales which offer the full range of services usually available at jobcentres. There are currently 37 jobclubs in Wales which are operated by agents on a contract basis. Arrangements are being made for a list of these to be forwarded to the hon. Member separately. Jobclubs are also situated in jobcentres and operated by jobcentre staff. The employment service offers a wide range of services, of which jobclub is only one.

ENERGY

Alternative Sources of Energy

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what funding is currently provided towards research into renewable energy; and whether he has plans to increase such levels of funding in the future.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nearly 250 research, development and demonstration projects on renewable energy valued at over £60 million are currently in progress. In the financial year 1987-88 the estimated outturn of spend in this area is about £19 million. This includes external contributions from the private and public sectors and the European Commission. In 1988-89 my Department plans to increase its expenditure on renewables R and D by 15 per cent.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what criteria he uses in deciding the appropriateness of taking safeguards issues into account in relation to considerations of security and commercial sensitivity over the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel and the handling of plutonium.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply from my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the then hon. Member for Walthamstow, Mr. Deakins, on 23 July 1985 at column 474.

CEGB (Privatisation)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet Lord Marshall, the chairman of the CEGB, regularly to discuss our proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will reconsider his decision not to undertake discussions with the chairman of British Coal regarding the reinstatement of the more than 200 miners sacked during the 1984-85 coal strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The dismissal and re-employment of mineworkers is a matter for the management of the British Coal Corporation.

Fast Breeder Reactor Programme

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what forward plans exist for a fast breeder reactor programme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The commercial ordering of fast breeder reactors is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I will ask the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

British Coal Enterprise

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what loans British Coal Enterprise has given to operators of licensed mines and private opencast site operation in the county of Durham over the last two years; and if he will indicate to whom the assistance was made and the location of the mines and opencast sites.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal Enterprise Ltd., and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Power Station (Hinkley Poin

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of Energy how many objections to the propose power station at Hinkley Point have been rece (a) Northern Ireland and (b) outside th Kingdom; when he expects the public inquiry station at Hinkley Point to be held; and whether from outside the United Kingdom will be a participate at any public formal hearings into th Point proposal.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in transport in Wales at present; and what are the corresponding figures for 1978, 1968 and 1958.

Mr. Peter Walker: The data available are shown in following table. "Transport" has been defined for 1978 minimum list headings 701-707 and 709 in the 19 standard industrial classification (SIC), and for 1984 classes 71-77 in the 1980 SIC (full details of SICs can obtained from CSO publications). An indication of effect of these differences of definition is given by figu from the 1981 census of employment.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the new working party on the Welsh language to meet for the first time; and when he expects they will be in a position to report.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The first meeting of the working party will be held on 25 January, and we will report as soon as is practicable.

Acute Services

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now answer the question asked by the right hon. Member for Swansea, West Official Report, column 4, 7 December 1987 as to what action has been taken about the requirement that Welsh health authorities save 0·5 per cent. a year on spending on acute services in hospitals; and when.

Mr. Grist: Health authorities in Wales are required to increase significantly the efficiency of all their activities, and not only those in the acute sector. Since 1983 there has been a specific requirement that the proceeds of the first 0·5 per cent. of cash releasing efficiency savings, as a proportion of recurrent revenue budgets, should be reinvested to develop services for elderly people, those with mental handicaps and those suffering from mental illness. £6 million is to be redeployed in 1987-88 as a result of this initiative.

From 1988-89 no minimum level of redeployment of efficiency savings will be stipulated by the Department. However, health authorities will be expected to continue to maintain a high standard of services for these patient groups and the Department will continue to monitor as part of the annual review process the extent to which health authorities have been able to continue a measure of redeployment of efficiency savings.

Welsh Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what allocation of resources is to be made to the Welsh Health Promotion Authority for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: Subject to parliamentary approval, we propose to allocate £1·792 million in 1988-89 to the Welsh Health Promotion Authority in support of its existing functions and of its strategy development in the context of annual review. This will represent a further and substantial additional commitment of resources to the WHPA over the £1·198 million allocated in 1987-88.

Written Questions

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the 21 written questions on the Order Paper for Thursday 14 January for answer by him on that date were answered on that date; if he will distinguish between (a) questions for written priority answer and (b) questions for ordinary written answer; and if he will further indicate how many questions received (i) holding answers and (ii) substantive answers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has plans to monitor the condition of environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are in the process of establishing a monitoring programme for environmentally sensitive areas. This will collect and analyse data on landscape, wildlife, historic features, farming practices and socio-economic developments. Our objective will be to assess the scheme's effects of these inter-related items. I hope to publish a first report, as required by section 18(8) of the Agriculture Act 1986, during the course of 1988.

Beef (Intervention Stocks)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present extent of overhang of beef intervention stocks; how this compares with the situation at this time in 1986 and 1987; and what are the prospects for 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A note setting out the volume of intervention stocks in the EC and the United Kingdom on the latest available dates, which includes figures for beef, is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated monthly. Prospects for 1988 will depend on the development of the market, Commission proposals for stock disposal and sales opportunities.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage change in farm incomes in the United Kingdom for the most recent 12-month period for which information available; and what were the corresponding figures each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested set out in the table:

Milk

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers in England do not produce milk up to their allocated quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Levy liability is calculated on the basis of the net excess over quota in the England and Wales Milk Marketing Board area as a whole, and separate figures for England are not available. In the 1986-87 quota year 16,611 dairy farmers in England and Wales produced less than their allocated quota.

At the end of each quota year, unused quota is utilised mainly to offset the supplementary levy liability of over-quota producers, and thereby provides an important element of flexibility within the system.

Horse Markets and Sales

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council to improve conditions at horse markets and sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The Government response to the report on the welfare of livestock at markets, announced in October, accepted that legislation should be introduced to cover horse markets and other sales. Proposals for a new order and code of practice will be issued for consultation later this year.

39. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secreta Education and Science what represent received seeking further detail on the propo subjects in secondary schools in the Edu Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The overwhelming majority of the responses we have received were in favour of the fundamental principles of breadth and balance in the school curriculum. These principles were first set out by the Government in the White Paper "Better Schools"; the Education Reform Bill will guarantee them through the requirement for all pupils to study the national curriculum foundation subjects.

46. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received with regard to the proposed national core curriculum and the promotion of equal opportunities for girls and boys in schools and colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: Several responses to the consultation document on the national curriculum have referred to the promotion of equal opportunities for girls and boys. Many have welcomed our proposals as a means of ensuring that all pupils, regardless of sex, experience the same broad, balanced and relevant curriculum.

53. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to ensure that schools will be provided with sufficient resources in order to pursue the national curriculum to which he is committed.

Mrs. Rumbold: It will be for local authorities and schools to ensure that their spending is directed towards implementing the national curriculum within planned overall levels of resources. The Government will also assist the development of aspects of the national curriculum through the education support grants and in-service training grants programme.

59. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received further representations about the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend welcomes the fact that he continues to receive many representations from organisations and the general public on the proposals in the Bill. To date, the Department has received more than 20,000 responses, all of which, except those from members of the public, are lodged in the Libraries of the House.

65. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the religious education provision of the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received some 50 letters commenting on the position of religious education in the Education Reform Bill. The Government believe strongly that religious education must continue to be taught in our schools in accordance with the relevant provisions of the 1944 Education Act. The Education Reform Bill reinforces these provisions and generally strengthens the position of religious and moral education in the school curriculum.

68. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secr State for Education and Science what guidelines h issued for the establishment of temporary g bodies for schools to be formed as the r reorganisation.

Mr. Dunn: Annex 1 of circular 7/87, issued Department in August last year, gives guidance provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 rel the establishment of temporary governing bodies and newly-maintained schools, including new formed as a result of statutory reorganisations.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of S Education and Science how the development technical and vocational education initiative cu will be reconciled with the core curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: TVEI will operate wit framework of the national curriculum, and the co updating of the TVEI curriculum criteria will take of that framework. Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the staying-on rate in education at the age of 16 years. But he is always willing to receive representations from the association, whether on that or other issues.

72. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the Association of County Councils to discuss the staying-on rates in education at the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet the Association of County Councils to discuss the staying-on rate in education at the age of 16 years. But he is always willing to receive representations from the association, whether on that or other issues.

Children (Special Education Needs)

41. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the level of expenditure on the teaching of children with special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend announced last November that the Government would be providing for local education authorities to spend nearly £13·9 billion on education in 1988-89. Within this figure some £570 million is being provided for special education. We also announced recently an increase in the amount of Government grant available to local education authorities in 1988-89 to support in-service training for teachers and others in the education service. With that support, LEAs propose to spend £9·8 million next year on training to meet the needs of pupils with disabilities of sight and of hearing and severe learning difficulties, and training for "designated" teachers to meet special educational needs in ordinary schools. The comparable figure for 1987-88 is estimated at £7·1 million.

51. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the level of funding for the integration of children with special educational needs into mainstream school classes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend does not determine the level of funding for children with special educational needs who are integrated into mainstream classes. That is a matter for individual local education authorities. Where the child has a statement, the authority is under a duty to provide for all the identified educational needs of that child. In general, resource allocation is a matter for local priorities.

Schools (Ministerial Visits)

44. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school visits he has made over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: During 1987 my right hon. Friend visited some 44 schools, including four independent schools, in 24 local education authorities. He also saw schools in the United States of America and France. My right hon. Friend is grateful to all those who welcomed him to their schools and thus enabled him to broaden his knowledge of their work and circumstances.

Scottish Universities

47. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the future of the Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

77. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the future of the Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: There is no need for such a meeting. The Government fully support the University Grants Committee's more objective approach for allocating recurrent grant. The impact of standard criteria on individual universities has varied depending on their previous funding level and their research record.

Dyslexia

48. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources his Department devotes to monitoring the incidence of dyslexia.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not monitor the incidence of particular learning difficulties. It is for local education authorities to assess the needs of children in their areas who are experiencing learning difficulties and to ensure that provision is available for their educational needs.

Higher Education

52. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on information available to him on the financial position of students in higher education in (a) Britain and (b) other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Jackson: Students in higher education in Great Britain are more dependent on maintenance grants than those in other European Community countries. But a precise comparison of financial circumstances is very difficult because of the variety of forms that student support may take. The student support review group, under my chairmanship, is examining the available evidence.

University Grants Committee

54. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee; and what subjects he anticipates will be discussed.

60. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee; and what subjects he anticipates will be discussed.

61. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee; and what subjects he anticipates will be discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the University Grants Committee frequently in the course of normal business.

School Inspectors

55. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of Her Majesty's inspectors for schools and colleges are women; and what proportion of the total this represents.

Mrs. Rumbold: As of 1 January 1988 there were 113 women HMIs in post, representing 24 per cent. of the total.

Education Fees

56. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet in a position to make a statement on his plans to introduce the charging of fees for areas of educational provision; and if he will make a statement.

71. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet in a position to make a statement on his plans to introduce the charging of fees for areas of educational provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are considering the points made in response to the consultation document "Charging for School Activities" by some 450 organisations and individuals, and will bring forward proposals as soon as possible.

Academic Staff

57. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to increase the proportion of academic staff in each of the following categories (a) women, (b) blacks, and (c) those from a working class background; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are not involved in the recruitment of staff. That is a matter for the employers. Between 1982 and 1986 the number of women academic staff employed full-time in universities, polytechnics and other colleges of higher and further education increased by about 20 per cent., or some 5,000 teachers. The overall proportion of full-time academic staff who were women increased during this period from 19·2 per cent. to 22·3 per cent. Statistics on the ethnic origins and social background of academic staff are not collected centrally.

Teachers (Recruitment)

63. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he plans to introduce any initiatives to assist teacher recruitment in the Greater London area.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. We are planning, in conjunction with the teaching as a career unit (TASC), to mount a special careers fair to attract more people into teaching in London and the south-east, particularly in shortage areas. We are in close touch with the local authority associations and with individual LEAs involved over teacher recruitment problems in Greater London. We and TASC already have an energetic national publicity campaign, involving advertising, conferences and exhibitions to promote the attractions of teaching and to improve recruitment to initial teacher training. Its impact can be measured by the fact that recruitment to initial teacher training courses is up this academic year by 13 per cent.

Private Schools

63. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the proportion of secondary children in private schools.

Mr. Dunn: The number of pupils in England aged 11 to 15 attending independent schools as a proportion of the pupils in this age group in school in January 1987 was 7·7 per cent.

Adult Education Bursary Scheme

66. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will amend the adult education bursary scheme on mature students' additional payments to enable mature students who have been unemployed for a considerable period of time to be eligible for this payment.

Mr. Jackson: Bursaries for students resident in England and attending long-term residential colleges are made in accordance with the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations. Bursary-holders are therefore eligible for the older students allowance only if they satisfy the relev requirements of those regulations. The regulations reviewed annually, but I cannot yet say whether there be any change in the conditions of eligibility for the o students allowance for the next academic year.

Schoolgirls (O-levels)

69. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State Education and Science what is the percentage of girls v received five or more O-levels, by local educat authority, at the latest date available.

Mr. Dunn: The proportion of girls leaving lo authority maintained schools with five or more hig grades at O-level or CSE are shown in the table.

Teachers (Training)

70. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the initial training of teachers.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I recognise the importance of initial teacher training for the quality of teaching in schools. We are therefore concerned to develop a high quality, robust and cost-effective training system.

In 1984, the then Secretaries of State published detailed criteria against which initial teacher training courses would be assessed for approval, and established the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education to review initial teacher training courses and advise on whether they met the criteria. In carrying out its task, the council is able to take into account reports of Her Majesty's inspectorate which are being made on all the initial teacher training institutions concerned.

I have recently asked the members of the council to continue to serve until the end of 1989. I shall be considering what arrangements should thereafter be made for the approval of initial teacher training courses.

My right hon. Friend and I periodically review the total numbers of students to be admitted to initial teacher training courses, and the distribution of these numbers between the university sector and the polytechnics and colleges sector, between primary and secondary courses and, within secondary courses, between different subjects taking into account inter alia the pattern of the existing teaching force and the forecast requirements of the maintained system. The most recent review covered intakes for the period 1987-89.

Target entry numbers for initial teacher training institutions in England and Wales have already been established for 1988 and 1989. For later years, my right hon. Friend and I propose that intakes for 1990 should be determined for that year alone in order to allow for the conduct of a major planning exercise to cover intakes for the three years 1991 to 1993. This arrangement will allow fuller account to be taken of the teacher requirements of the national curriculum in the light of consultation on the attainment targets and programmes of study for the core and foundation subjects which may be recommended by subject working groups as and when they are established. It will also ensure that the new Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and Universities Funding Council, as well as the Wales Advisory Body, will be able to play their appropriate parts.

My right hon. Friend and I plan to bring forward early next year proposals for intakes to initial teacher training for the year 1990 which will then be subject to discussion with those concerned, including teacher training institutions, the funding councils and the Wales Advisory Body as appropriate. We would expect to bring forward proposals for the three-year period 1991 to 1993 as a basis for consultation early in 1990.

Design and Technology (Girls' Schools)

73. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will take to improve facilities for the study of design and technology in single sex girls' schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced last November a very large increase in allocations to local education authorities for capital expenditure in maintained colleges and schools—some 24 per cent. over the current year. It will be for local education authorities to decide how they will use these resources having regard to the particular needs of their area, which might include the provision of improved facilities for design and technology in single-sex schools.

School Transport

74. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will change the regulations concerning school transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to amend the existing legislation on school transport.

Special Schools

75. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how special schools, currently financed by the Inner London education authority, will be controlled if the Inner London education authority's responsibilities have been transferred to other authorities.

Mr. Dunn: Under clause 114 of the Education Reform Bill, inner London boroughs applying to become LEAs will be required to demonstrate that they can secure adequate educational provision for all pupils and students in their area, including those with special educational needs. With their applications, boroughs will have to provide a list of the property they consider necessary to carry out this responsibility. This would normally include all the ILEA schools, including special schools, within the area of the borough, plus ILEA establishments elsewhere which provide a major service to residents of the borough. When an order is made transferring educational functions to a borough, the council of that borough will become the local education authority for the purposes of the Education Acts.

Departmental Staff

76. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of civil servants at grade 5 level and above in his Department is female.

Mrs. Rumbold: The proportion of women at grade 5 level and above, including Her Majesty's inspectorate, is approximately 13 per cent.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received from local education authorities concerning his proposals for schools to opt out of local education authority control.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received formal responses from 70 local education authorities to his consultation paper on grant-maintained schools.

Maintained Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many surplus places there are in maintained schools in the primary and secondary sectors, in each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not routinely collect information about the number of surplus places in individual local education authorities.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library the relevant standard number for entry into each maintained school in 1979, and the admissions limit of each maintained school for 1986-87.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not have a central record of standard numbers or planned admissions limits for individual schools. LEAs and governors have a duty annually to publish planned admissions limits in respect of each school in their literature for parents, and some of this information is available to the Department. I would not consider it sufficiently complete to justify placing in the Library.

Children (Secondary Schools)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of Stat Education and Science how many children did not o their first choice of secondary schools in each of th three years, in each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Information is not available in the requested. From informal inquiries made of education authorities in 1983, I understand that a 10,000 parental appeals were heard against a decisio to offer a place at the school of their choice. Si inquiries conducted in 1985 suggested a figure of appeals. These figures did not however differen between appeals in respect of primary and secon school admissions. Nor did they reveal how many pa did not get their first choice for their child, but decide to appeal.

Maintained Catholic Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State Education and Science if he will estimate the full-year to his Department of increasing the grant to mainta Catholic schools to 100 per cent.; and if he will ma statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. friend pays mainten contribution to the governors of voluntary aided special agreement schools in England in respect of expenditure on both repairs to the school buildings capital projects. It is not possible to show separately contribution made to the governors of Roman Cat aided schools. Contributions are not made by my hon. Friend in respect of voluntary controlled scho these are wholly maintained by local education authori

Maintenance contribution at the rate of 85 per cen paid on governors' eligible expenditure. An increase i rate to 100 per cent. for the forthcoming financial would require provision to be increased from £74·1 mi to £87·2 million, a rise of £13·1 million.

Secondary Schools, Cumbria

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State Education and Science if he will list all secondary sch in Cumbria, stating how many pupils are currently in school and how many empty places exist in each sch

Mr. Dunn: The local education authority informs that there are 44 maintained secondary schools Cumbria. The numbers on roll as at 1 January 1987, number of empty places and the capacities based on DES work station method were:

Disruptive Pupils

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those education authorities in England which provide special schooling for disruptive pupils who have been suspended from their usual school, and those education authorities which provide no alternative to the usual school and instead suspend disruptive pupils.

Mrs. Rumbold: As local education authorities have a variety of ways in which to provide for the educational needs of disruptive pupils, I will write to my right hon. Friend explaining the position.

Primary Schools (Class Sizes)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of classes of 31 pupils and over in the maintained primary sector in each education authority for each year since 1979, showing what percentage such classes are of the total number of classes in each authority.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for each local education authority in England for the years 1979, 1983 and 1987 is given in the table. Information for all of the other years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The analyses relate to classes taught by one teacher on a selected period within the day of the census count in January of each year and may not be representative of the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Capital Expenditure Allocation (Leicestershire)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the proposed capital expenditure allocation for 1988-89 for the Leicestershire local education authority, in the light of discussions on 17 November 1987 between his Department, the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), and representatives of the authority.

Mr. Dunn: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) on 18 December. Leicestershire's allocation for 1988-89 is 34 per cent. higher than its initial allocation for 1987-88. Allocations in respect of prescribed expenditure are unhypothecated and it is for Leicestershire LEA to decide how to use the resources available to it for capital expenditure.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mrs. Eugenia Lutskaya

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Russians about the plight of Mrs. Eugenia Lutskaya of Leningrad, who first applied in 1973 to go to Israel, where her daughter and grandchildren live, and of her husband Mikhail, who has been told he can leave Russia but without his wife.

Mr. Mellor: We regularly make representations to the Soviet authorities on behalf of divided Soviet families. My right hon. and learned Friend last raised these issues with the Soviet Foreign Minister at Brize Norton on 7 December, when he handed over lists of cases about which representations had been made to the Government, including that of Mrs. Eugenia Lutskaya Kalendarev.

Nuclear Reprocessing Equipment and Technology

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the export of nuclear reprocessing equipment and technology;

(2) whether the Government intend to adhere to the agreements reached in the Nuclear Suppliers Group and published by the International Atomic Energy Authority as Infcirc 254; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on Government poli on the export of nuclear material and equipment.

Mr. Mellor: We subscribed formally to the Nucle Suppliers Group guidelines in January 1978.

Our current policy on exports of nuclear equipmer material or technology remains as set out in the answ given on 31 March 1976 to the then hon. Member f Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Carter), at columns 514-1 This policy is based on the Nuclear Suppliers Grou guidelines. It applies equally to nuclear reprocessi equipment and technology.

Detention Without Trial (Malaysia)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreig and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he h made to the Government of Malaysia concerning th detention of prisoners without trial.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer gave to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 1 January at column 289.

Children's Rights

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of Stat for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will mak a statement outlining the progress which has been mad concerning the rewording of the United Nation declaration on the rights of the child; and why such rewording is necessary;

(2) if he will make it his policy that any reworde declaration on the rights of the child should retain withi its preamble a statement on the need to provide lega protection before as well as after birth;

(3) if he will make it his policy that any reworde declaration on the rights of the child should reaffirm th principle which the current declaration contains that th best interests of the child shall be the paramoun consideration in the enactment of laws;

(4) if he will make it his policy that any reworde declaration on the rights of the child should reaffirm th principle which the current declaration contains that th child who is physically, mentally or socially handicapped shall be given the special treatment, education and car required by his particular condition;

(5) on what date the declaration on the rights of th child was ratified by Her Majesty's Government:

(6) what steps he has taken to ensure that the United Nations declaration on the rights of the child is consistent with Her Majesty's Government's policy on abortion.

Mr. Eggar: The declaration of the rights of the child was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1959. As a declaration, it is not open for signature or ratification, and there are no moves to reword or amend it. However, the UN Commission on Human Rights is currently engaged in drafting a convention on the rights of the child. This will be binding on those states which ratify it.

In our approach to the draft convention, which is still undergoing its first reading, we shall have both our national policies and the principles of the declaration firmly in mind. Much work remains to be done before negotiations can be completed.

East Timor

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that the United Kingdom vote in the United Nations will be used to support the decision taken by the United Nations sub-commission on the prevention of discrimination to include the situation on East Timor on the Commission's agenda for its February meeting.

Mr. Eggar: We do not yet know whether member states of the United Nations Commission for Human Rights will wish to take up the sub-commission's recommendation that East Timor be included on the Commission's agenda in February. Our practice since 1982 has been to abstain on resolutions on East Timor whilst expressing support for the Secretary General's role in encouraging a settlement between the parties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lever Brothers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contracts Her Majesty's Government have with Lever Brothers for the supply of its products in Northern Ireland; and what is his estimate of the effect on his Department's budget of the price increases recently announced by the company.

Mr. Stanley: None of the major public sector organisations in Northern Ireland has direct contracts with Lever Brothers. Where Lever Brothers products are used they are purchased through local suppliers on a competitive tender basis. If, as a result of this recent price increase, Lever Brothers products cease to be competitive, alternatives are readily available and these will be purchased. I do not therefore expect the Lever Brothers decision to have any material effect on my Department's budget.

Nuclear Explosions (Emergency Plans)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what emergency plans exist in Northern Ireland in the event of an explosion at a nuclear installation in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Contingency plans provide for continuous monitoring to identify any potential hazard, to determine the appropriate remedial measur provide advice and information to the public. were reviewed following the Chernoby Improvements are being made where ne particular to effect full integration within t radiation monitoring system now being throughout the United Kingdam.

Potato Cyst Nematodes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary Northern Ireland what period for consultati provided in connection with the proposed new health order in relation to potato cyst (eelworms).

Mr. Viggers: Proposals for a draft plant h were sent to interested organisations on 27 1987 with a request for comment by 22 De meeting between the Department of Agricultur organisations which have expressed reservati proposals has been arranged for 29 Jan Department will then consider the contents of t light of views expressed.

Mr. Desmond O'Hare

Mr. John D. Mr. Needham: In deciding the extent to which any posts should be advertised, Health and Personal Social Services employing authorities in Northern Ireland act in accordance with the Department of Health and Social Service's guidelines on recruitment advertising. These guidelines, which are similar to those which apply in the National Health Service, permit an employing authority to determine the most cost-effective way of advertising posts. The two cases referred to by the hon. Member fall within the jurisdiction of the Eastern health and social services board. I am assured that the board took full account both of responses to previous advertisements and of its knowledge of the likely availability of candidates locally in deciding to advertise these two posts. The posts were advertised in the Belfast Telegraph, the British Medical Journal, and the Irish Times.

Bypass (Glynn)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make financial provision for a bypass at Glynn, Larne, in accordance with the Department of the Environment's 1978 10-year plan for such a scheme.

Mr. Needham: The Glynn bypass was included in the East Antrim area plan 1975-95, which was adopted by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland in 1979. However, the intervening years have seen a reduction in the funding available for capital roads projects. It is not now anticipated that a bypass to Glynn will be constructed in the foreseeable future.

Housing Executive (Expenditure)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the likely effect on employment levels in the Northern Ireland construction industry of the new expenditure limits set for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham: Until the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the other housing agencies have determined the distribution of resources available to them in 1988-89 over their capital and revenue programmes, it will not be possible to estimate the number of jobs in the construction industry being supported by the housing programme.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds will be made available to Harland and Wolff in 1987-88.

Mr. Viggers: The Government have set the company's external financing limit for 1987-88 at £63·2 million, made up of direct cash support amounting to £58·6 million supplemented by external borrowings of up to £4·6 million to cover any work in progress costs incurred on the AOR contract.

Rating Reform

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the implications for ratepayers in Northern Ireland of the proposal to introduce the poll tax in Humberside.

Mr. Stanley: None. There has been no linkage between the levels of rates in Northern Ireland and Humberside since 1976-77.

Written Questions

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of St Northern Ireland how many of the 12 written questi the Order Paper for Thursday 14 January for answ him on that day were answered on that date; if h distinguish between (a) questions for written p answer and (b) questions for ordinary written answe if he will further indicate how many questions re (i) holding answers and (ii) substantive answers.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to reduce the backlog of applications at the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 20 November 1987 at columns 716-7.

Breath Tests

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from each chief constable in England and Wales of (a) the number of breath tests administered between 20 December and 2 January, for such other dates over the Christmas period for which figures are available, (b) the number of such tests which proved positive, (c) the number of positive tests as a percentage of total tests administered and (d) the number of road accidents recorded in the same periods, for each of the last five years up to 1987-88; and if he will also provide this information for the Metropolitan police area;

(2) if he will call for a report from each chief constable in England and Wales of (a) the number of breath tests administered in each of the past five years, (b) the number of such tests which proved positive, (c) the number of positive tests as a percentage of total tests administered, (d) the number of road accidents recorded in these years and (e) the number of fatal road accidents recorded in these years; and if he will also provide this information for the Metropolitan police area;

(3) if he will call for a report from each chief constable in England and Wales as to the number of fatal road accidents in their police authority area between 20 December and 2 January, or such other dates over the Christmas period for which figures are available, for each of the last five years up to 1987-88.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on breath tests required and results, by police force area, is published annually in a Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of Breath Tests—England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

Statistics on road accidents in the past 10 years are contained in the Department of Transport's publication "Road Accidents Great Britain 1986 — The Casualty Report", a copy of which is in the Library.

The official breath test and road accident statistics for 1987 will not be available until the second half of this year.

The Association of Chief Police Officers has, however, collated provisional figures for the number of positive breath tests in the Christmas period, and the number of road accidents involving death or serious injury, in each police force area. These are given in the table:

firefighters to attend for an average of two hours per week was, in fact, increased to three hours (though at the discretion of the fire authority) in 1987.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the training hours for retained firemen were last reviewed.

Mr. John Patten: In 1987, and by the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades. The council notified fire authorities in October 1987 that the obligation of retained firefighters to attend for training and maintenance duties for an average of two hours a week had been increased by an additional hour per week on average at the discretion of the fire authority.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per hour nationally of training retained firemen.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Hurd: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual civil service complaints procedures.

All Home Office staff have been advised that complaints should normally be made to their head of division or, where that is not appropriate, to the head of their personnel management division. Two complaints have been reported to personnel management divisions. One led to a formal reprimand and transfer to other duties, the other was found to be unsubstantiated. No central records are kept of complaints resolved by local management.

Firearms

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with which overseas Governments he has consulted on his proposals to change the law on firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make an announcement about plans for a replacement police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The outdated mainframe computers presently providing the PNC service are about to be replaced by two new processors which will run the existing applications on the basis of the existing software. This new equipment will secure the present PNC service

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Department what progress the ministerial g

Mr. John Patten: The group has agreed on a w of measures to tackle alcohol misuse. Account of the views of the working group on young pe alcohol, chaired by the noble Baroness, Lady M Ilton, which reported to the Standing Confe

Crime Prevention last November. The measures planned include legislative changes as well as steps to secure better health education and more effective local action.

The main legislative proposals are to amend the Liquor Licensing Bill to tighten the offence of selling alcohol to under-age drinkers, to increase penalties for those found guilty of doing so and to make it an offence for wholesalers to sell alcohol to people under 18. There are also plans to require both pre-packaged and dispensed drinks to be labelled with their alcoholic strength and draft regulations will be circulated shortly. The Government welcome efforts already being made to promote non-alcoholic and low-alcohol beers and wines, but will be asking the industry to do more as well as to play its part in helping people understand the relative strengths of different drinks.

The Government will be asking the IBA and the Advertising and Cinema Advertising Standards Authorities in conjunction with the industry to re-examine their codes of practice on advertising alcohol. We see no need for a voluntary ban on advertising alcohol if these codes are tightened up and more effectively applied. We shall also be asking the BBC and IBA to review the way alcohol is presented to television viewers, both in individual programmes and cumulatively.

Effective health education is a priority. The health education bodies for England, Scotland, Wales and the Department of Health and Social Security, Northern Ireland will be taking the lead on this. But other Government Departments will also be playing their part; for example, the Department of Education and Science will shortly be launching a pack to help youth workers advise young people on substance misuse, including alcohol, and, with the Health Education Authority, considering a pack for use in schools.

Another major aim is to encourage effective local action. We look to local services and organisations to work together, identifying particular problems in their area and working out a programme for dealing with them. This is not just a matter for the health services. The social services, education and youth services, police, probation and magistrates all have an interest as do local businesses, the local drinks industry and many voluntary organisations. A great deal is already being done, but there is scope for better co-ordination and targeting of resources.

Our programme includes both steps which can be taken now and longer term measures. It links in with other Government policies on health education and the health service, on crime prevention and on drinking and driving to which both the Government and the police are devoting considerable resources with encouraging results. It is also consistent with our policies that consumers should be able to have greater freedom to make informed choices about what they are buying.

Radio Broadcasting

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the Government's plans for the future of radio broadcasting.

Mr. Hurd: In February 1987 we published a Green Paper entitled "Radio: Choices and Opportunities". It set out, as a basis for public discussion, proposals for the development of new and less-regulated radio services with the aim of broadening the range of choice for listeners. There were more than 500 responses, r members of the public. I am gratef contributed their comments and idea basis for a lively future for community radio, to strengthen that combination of local identity and cultural diversity which lies at the heart of a flourishing community.

There will be a continuing need for an authority to issue licences and supervise performance. The Green Paper identified a number of options for its constitution. After careful thought we have concluded that it would be right to establish a new Radio Authority, with radio at the centre of its attention. The IBA has earned our respect and gratitude for its development of local radio services under the duties laid upon it 15 years ago. But it has major challenges ahead of it in the field of television. We have judged that it would not be sensible to ask the IBA at the same time to take on the task of developing a new and greatly expanded radio system, operating under a new and much lighter set of rules.

The authority will be assigned frequencies suitable for sound broadcasting. On the basis of these frequencies it will invite applications for licences to broadcast at national and local levels. To ensure that that spectrum is used efficiently, and that listeners have as wide a choice as possible, stations will in general be expected to broadcast on single frequencies and use equipment which meets a good technical specification. The Radio Authority will inspect equipment as necessary.

So far as the BBC is concerned, the Green Paper proposed that the corporation should continue to decide how best to meet its public service broadcasting obligations within the resources at its disposal. I can confirm that it remains our policy. We expect that BBC services, too, will increasingly in future be broadcast on single frequencies.

Our proposals are, above all, intended to benefit the listener. It may take a little time for the public to become accustomed to new kinds of service and to single frequency broadcasting. But we believe that the expansion of radio which I have outlined can only be to the good of broadcasters and listeners alike.

Passports

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the immigration and nationality department began to issue applicants with documents confirming that their passports had been submitted to the Department and could not immediately be traced.

Mr. Renton: It has been the practice for some years to issue such a letter to an applicant whose passport cannot immediately be traced. The purpose is to help the applicant, where necessary, to obtain an emergency or replacement travel document.

Public Inquiry Office, Lunar House

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he estimates to be the number of people who attended the public inquiry office at Lunar house in December 1987; and how many of those were seeking the return of passports sent to the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Renton: In December last, 50,569 people attended the public inquiry office at Lunar house, Croydon. Of the 19,978 people who made inquiries about immigration matters, 2,865 sought the return of their passports for urgent travel. The remaining 30,591 made in citizenship but corresponding figures for return of passports are not available.

Registration and Naturalisatio

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of Home Department how many application registration of adults, (b) registration of (c) naturalisation were (i) sent out and (ii each month of 1987 to the latest available d

Mr. Renton: Figures for issue of applicati in table 1. Monthly figures of bulk issues fr available only in respect of forms affecte December 1987 deadline. For other forms, year 1987 are given where available. Figure (registration of British Dependent Territories are not available at present.

Mail

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of S Home Department when he estimates that m by his Department in mid-December will be

Mr. Renton: The time taken to deal with dence overall in the immigration and department varies considerably according to the nature of the subject matter. It will, however, be some time before all the very large intake of mail received by mid-December is processed.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the budgeted expenditure on salaries for (a) the immigration and nationality department and (b) the immigration service for 1987-88; and what was the actual expenditure under both of those headings between 1 April and 31 December 1987.

Mr. Renton: The budgeted expenditure on salaries in the financial year 1987-88 for the immigration and nationality department as a whole, and for the immigration service, and actual expenditure from 1 April 1987 to 31 December 1987, are set out in the table:

Salaries expenditure in the immigration and nationality department 1987-88

Incoming Mail, Lunar House

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the procedure for dealing with and recording incoming mail at Lunar house; and at what stage applications for British citizenship are separated from applications for variation of immigration leave.

Mr. Renton: On receipt at Lunar house the IND post room separates the mail by appearance and form of address into broad categories of general letters, applications for variation of leave, and applications for citizenship. Mail sent by recorded delivery or registered post is recorded on receipt; other mail is recorded when opened and separated into categories.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff, of what grade and at what salary, were employed at Lunar house to deal with incoming mail on (a) 1 June 1987 and (b) 1 December 1987; how many extra staff were employed for this purpose between 1 June and 31 December 1987; on which date and at what grades.

Mr. Renton: Separate information about staff in the immigration nationality department post room dealing with incoming mail is not readily available. The number, grading and salaries of staff involved in all aspects of mail handling was:

	Number	Salary Range £
1 June 1987
Executive Officer	1	5,550-9,854
Administrative Officer	3	3,664-7,091
Administrative Assistant	31	3,314-5,799
Senior Paperkeeper	1	5,747-6,590
Paperkeeper	5	5,832-6,141

Executive Officer	1	5,820-10,100
Administrative Officer	3	3,664- 7,247
Adminstrative Assistant	42	No change
Senior Paperkeeper	1	6,047- 6,890
Paperkeeper	5	No change
Total	52

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of letters which had been received but not opened at Lunar house on (a) 1 November 1987, (b) 1 December 1987 and (c) 21 December 1987; what is his estimate of how many such letters are applications for variation of leave; what was the date of receipt of mail being dealt with at Lunar house on 21 December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The estimated number unopened items of mail is as follows. The estimated number of such letters which relate to applications for variations of leave is shown in brackets.

1 November 1987: 65,500 (16,000)
1 December 1987: 92,500 (24,000)
21 December 1987: 145,000 (30,500)

The date of receipt of mail being dealt with on 21 December by the immigration and nationality department post room varied, according to the nature of the correspondence, between the end of September and early December.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Developing Countries (Loans)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend the repayment period on official loans to developing countries from 10 years to 20 years.

Mr. Lawson: The United Kingdom has almost completed its programme of converting old aid loans into grants to the least developed countries. To date seven sub-Saharan African countries have been granted repayment periods of between 15 and 20 years on their officially guaranteed debts when rescheduling through the Paris club.

VAT (Education)

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the value of staff time or secondments to either a city technology college or local education authority school is calculated for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Lilley: A taxable person who supplies such services free of charge and without conditions or contractual obligations is supplying free services which are outside the scope of the tax. If the recipient educational establishment pays for the services, the value for tax is the monetary consideration. If there were any form of obligation on the recipient (whether or not there were also a monetary consideration), this would be seen as a non-monetary consideration whose value for tax purposes would be the open market value of the services.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the value of donation of computer equipment by the manufacturer or user to either a city technology college or local education authority school is calculated for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Lilley: If a taxable person donates equipment without conditions or contractual obligations, the value for tax is the cost of the equipment—that is, either the price at which the donor bought it or the full cost of its manufacture by him. If, however, there were any form of obligation on the recipient of the donated equipment, this would be seen as a non-monetary consideration and the value for tax would be the open market value of the equipment.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the value of donation of computer software by the author or user to either a city technology college or local education authority school is calculated for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Lilley: A taxable person who donates, without conditions or contractual obligations, computer software which has been individually commissioned by the recipient educational establishment is supplying free services which are outside the scope of the tax. The donation of other software is a supply, the value of which for tax purposes is the cost—that is, either the price at which the donor bought the software or the full cost of its production by him.

If, however, there were any form of obligation on the recipient of the donated software (whether the latter were individually commissioned or not) this would be seen as a non-monetary consideration and the value for tax would be the open market value of the goods or services involved.

Overseas Debt

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the levels of repayment of debt to British (a) Government and (b) non-Government institutions for Ethiopia, Sudan, Somalia, and Chad, by each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The amounts paid directly to the United Kingdom Government by Ethiopia, Sudan, Somalia and Chad for aid loans made by the Overseas Development Administration are listed in the table. Information on amounts paid to non-Government institutions is not available.

Repayment of Overseas Development Administration Loans 1979-86

Share Schemes

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many independent unquoted companies, which are not subsidiaries of public limited companies, have introduced Finance Act 1978 or 1984 share schemes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: One hundred and fifty one unquoted companies which are not subsidiaries of public limited companies have introduced share schemes approved under the Finance Act 1978. I regret that this information is not readily available in relation to Finance Act 1984 schemes.

United States Dollar

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further measures he will be prepared to take if the actions already taken fail to reduce the decline of the US dollar.

Mr. Peter Lilley: Since the beginning of the year, the dollar has risen against all the major currencies, including sterling.

Civil Servants (Merit Payments)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the number of civil servants receiving merit payments in 1986-87.

Mr. Brooke: A total of 3,828 civil servants received merit payments in the financial year 1986-87 under the performance bonus experiment.

This scheme was introduced for grades 3-7 in 1985 as a three-year experiment. It has already been partly replaced by newly developed performance related pay arrangements for grades 2 and 3 and an interim scheme for grades 4-7.

We believe that the link between pay and performance in the Civil Service should be strengthened. When the flexible pay system for scientific, professional and technical grades comes into effect this year over 80,000 staff will be covered by performance-related pay arrangements. We hope that it will be possible to bring other groups into such schemes in due course.

Building Societies Commission

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what since its inception has been the total cost of administering the Building Societies Commission.

Mr. Lilley: Between 25 September 1986, when the Building Societies Commission was constituted, and 31 March 1988, it is estimated that gross expenditure by the Commission will be about £3 million. This cost is met by a general charge levied on building societies together with fees for specific activities.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his reply of 18 December 1987, Official Report, column 847, he will indicate the grounds on which the names of companies obtaining assistance under the business expansion scheme are regarded as being confidential; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue has a statutory duty not to disclose any information concerning the affairs of a taxpayer. It is for this reason that I am unable to identify the companies which have obtained assistance under the business expansion scheme.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Treasury income during the 1988-89 financial year resulting from raising value added tax to (a) 16 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent.

Mr. Lilley: The estimated net additional revenue in 1988-89 would be:

Rate of value-added tax Per cent.	£ million
16	945
20	4,560

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue during the 1988-89 financial year which would result from imposing value added tax on (a) new building work and (b) publications, other than books, where the use of new paper is greater than 80 per cent.

Mr. Lilley: (a) It is estimated that the net additional revenue in a full year at 1988-89 prices from the imposition of value added tax at the standard rate on new building work would be £1,250 million. Because of the uncertainties involved in estimating the effects of such a change on the construction sector, this estimate should be taken as no more than an indicator of the order of magnitude.

(b) I regret the information is not available.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the light of the recent pronouncement by Lord Cockfield regarding proposed European Commission measures for the completion of the internal market in the EEC, he will make a statement on his policy towards imposing value added tax on books, newspapers and periodicals.

Mr. Lilley: [holding answer 18 January 1988] Decisions on changes in value added tax are a matter fo my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer Budget judgment. My right hon. Friend the Prim Minister has already made it clear that the Unite Kingdom will not accept proposals which restrict our rig to apply zero-rating.

Sporting Rights (Revaluation)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequ what is his estimate of the likely cost to public funds of th current revaluation of sporting rights in England an Wales; and what proportion of this is attributable to th revaluation of riparian rights.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information available a present is not sufficient for an estimate to be made of th likely costs of revaluing either sporting or riparian right

Tobacco (Taxation and Pricing)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer o what basis he has agreed to meet representatives of th tobacco industry to discuss tobacco taxation and pricin policy; and why he refused to meet representatives of th medical profession to discuss the same issue.

Mr. Lilley: Treasury Ministers generally meet a numbe of representative bodies to discuss their representations i the run-up to the Budget, including one representing th tobacco industry. I am to meet representatives from th British Medical Association shortly.

Oil Prices

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will indicate the effect on projected Government oil revenue resulting from a fluctuation in oil prices per barrel of (a) 5 cents, (b) 15 cents, (c) 50 cents, (d) $1 and (e) $5 above and below a price of $18 per barrel;

(2) if he will indicate the effect on projected Government oil revenues resulting from a fluctuation in the price of the United States dollar against the £ sterling by (a) 1 cent, (b) 5 cents, (c) 15 cents and (d) 50 cents above and below the exchange rate assumed in his Autumn Statement of 3 November 1987.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The effects on oil tax revenues of different oil prices and dollar exchange rates are subject to wide margins of error. On the basis of forecasts prepared for the 1987 Autumn Statement, a sustained change of $1 a barrel with a constant exchange rate would lead to a change of about £0·3 billion in North sea tax revenues for 1988-89. A 10 per cent. change in the exchange rate with a constant dollar oil price would give a change of about £0·5 billion. Smaller changes in prices or exchange rates would lead to approximately pro rata effects, but the results of larger changes would depend on their effect on other factors such as oil companies' exploration and investment decisions.

Taxes (European Community)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the standard rate of income tax in each of the 12 European Community countries and as to the corporation tax rate in each of the 12 European Community countries.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 January 1988]: A standard or basic rate of income tax is found only in the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom, where the rates are 35 per cent. and 27 per cent respectively. In the other European Community countries the scales of income tax rates do not include a standard or basic rate. The current ranges of nominal income tax rates are set out in Table 1:

Notes:

1. Some countries, such as the United Kingdom, have lower rates or special reliefs for smaller companies.
2. There are also local income taxes on companies in Germany, Italy and Luxembourg.
3. The following countries have different rates for distributed profits: Germany (36 per cent.); Greece (Nil); Portugal (35 per cent.).
4. Ireland has a 10 per cent. rate for manufacturing companies.
5. Greece has a 44 per cent. rate for industrial companies.

National Insurance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated full-year revenue effect in 1987-88 and 1988-89 of (a) abolishing the upper earnings limit for employees' national insurance contributions, (b) allowing personal allowances against such contributions and (c) (a) and (b) together.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 December 1987]: Estimates given in the table are based on projections of the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Full Year Reduction (−)—Increase (+) in Yield from Employees National Insurance Contributions (£ million)

	At income levels of 1987-88	1988-89
(a) Abolition of upper earnings limit	1,200	1,400
(b) Charge contributions above personal allowances only	−4,100	−4,400
(c) (a) and (b) together	−2,900	−3,000

These estimates make no allowance for behavioural or other changes.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what dollar—£ sterling exchange rate he assumed when making his Autumn Statement of 3 November 1987.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The Autumn Statement forecast assumed that sterling would remain close to its then recent levels.

SCOTLAND

NHS (Administration)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage change in the number of administrative staff in the National Health Service in Scotland since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information held centrally is not in precisely the form requested. Data on administrative and clerical staff are subdivided by pay scale, which does not coincide in all cases with grade. The available information is published in "Scottish Health Statistics", copies of which are held in the Library.

Prison Population

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the rise in prison population which took place between 1980 and 1987 was the result of increases in the number of prisoners on remand.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Prison population figures for 1987 are not yet available. Figures for earlier years are given in the Scottish Home and Health Department statistical bulletins "Prison Statistics Scotland", copies of which are in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific factors or formulae he has decided to use in order to calculate the amount of revenue support grant to be paid to particular local authorities when the poll tax is introduced in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The Government have proposed to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities that the distribution of revenue support grant should be based on the client group assessments of relative expenditure need, which are presently used for rate support grant distribution, estimates of authorities' non-domestic rate income and estimates of adult population. It is also proposed to have grant safety nets to phase in gradually some of the changes in the distribution of grant which may arise from the move to the new grant system. The details of these arrangements are subject to the outcome of discussions with COSLA, which are continuing.

Fines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the implementation of the recommendations contained within the Association of Directors of Social Work report on fines and fine default, with particular reference to (a) the introduction in Scotland of a day fines system and (b) the provision of alternative means of enforcement of payment of fines.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 11 January 1988, at column 149.

Sentencing Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of those remanded in custody by Scottish courts in 1986 subsequently received a custodial sentence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to issue a code of practice relating to the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned F appointed a working group last year to produce a code of practice. I expect to receive it shortly and be issued for comment in due course.

Operating Theatres

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of Sta Scotland (1) what percentage of operating theatre ti a weekday basis is used in each health board in Sco and what proposals he has for improvement on this f

(2) what estimates are available to him on the ext which full use of operating theatres in National H Service hospitals is inhibited by lack of properly qu nursing staff and the money to pay for them;

(3) if he will take steps to increase the number o and staff in National Health Service hospitals to in operating theatre utilisation and throughput;

(4) what estimates are available to him as to the to which loss of operating theatre time in Scotland to (a) lack of surgeons, (b) lack of anaesthetists, (c of operating theatre staff, (d) lack of beds, (e) restrictions on health boards and (f) other causes;

(5) if he will take steps to reduce the power or infl of consultants in the use of operating theatre ti Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about t utilisation and the causes of any underutilisation held centrally. Efficiency in the use of clinical reso including theatres is a matter for individual health b and their staff. The output of the acute hospital se has increased markedly in recent years and lev efficiency are now much greater. The recent report the National Audit Office on the use of operating th in the NHS in England indicates, however, that signi improvements could be made. I shall continu encourage health boards in Scotland to further effo

Remand Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of Sta Scotland if he will list, for each sheriff court distr Scotland, the percentage of those remanded by the s who are remanded on bail, excluding motoring offe

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information available.

Garnock Valley

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Sco if he or any of his ministerial colleagues have any pla visit the Garnock Valley.

Mr. Lang: Neither my right hon. and learned Fr nor I, nor any other of our ministerial colleagues plans for such a visit at present, although I hope to the Garnock Valley development executive later i year.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Sco if he will give (a) the total income of Scottish farm each of the past five years and (b) the equivalent in which would have been achieved in the event of the pound being brought to parity.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the total incomes of Scottish farmers, including income from non-agricultural activities is not available for this period. However, the aggregate net agricultural income of Scottish farmers between 1982 and 1986 was as follows:

	£ million
1982	140
1983	96
1984	186
1985	36
1986	91

An estimate for 1987 and possible revisions to 1986 and 1985 will emerge from this winter's annual review of agriculture, which is now in its late stages.

The effect of the green pound on farmer's incomes is to a large extent indirect and no estimates are available of the effects of different rates on income levels for the five-year period, during which time sterling's green rate has been both above and below its market rate.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage change in farm incomes in Scotland for the most recent 12-month period for which information is available; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Farm income figures are published in the form of aggregate net agricultural income, excluding income from non-agricultural activities. The following are the percentage changes in aggregate net agricultural income in Scotland between calendar years from 1979 to 1986. An estimate for 1987 will emerge from this winter's annual review of agriculture, which is in its late stages.

	Percentage
1979 to 1980	−61
1980 to 1981	+185
1981 to 1982	+65
1982 to 1983	−31
1983 to 1984	+93
1984 to 1985	−80
1985 to 1986	+152

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Rifkind: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. My Department's staff have been informed of this and also about how to make complaints of sexual harassment.

In the past five years seven complaints have been reported in my Department. Where the complaint has been substantiated, disciplinary action has ranged from a formal warning to forfeiture of pay.

Salmon

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will describe the formula used to assess those rating values which are based upon the annual statistical returns on Scottish salmon and sea trout catches.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Determination of rateable values is the statutory responsibility of assessors who operate independently of central and local government and who must be prepared to justify the valuations they make before the courts. Information about individual valuations is not held centrally.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to check the accuracy in the annual statistical returns on Scottish salmon and sea trout catches prior to their being used to assess future rating values; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Forms are checked to ensure that relevant parts have been completed and that there are no inconsistencies in the entries, for example between numbers and weights of fish reported as caught. As the statistics are published by salmon fishery region and statistical district it is unlikely that the information could be used by assessors to assist in the determination of the rateable value of individual fisheries.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any information which might explain the annual variations in statistical returns on salmon catches over the past five years in the Scottish salmon fishery statistical districts of (a) the Isle of Lewis, (b) Harris and (c) the Uists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland is not sufficient to give specific reasons for the variations in the salmon catches for the salmon fishery statistical districts specified. Fluctuations in reported annual salmon catches can occur for a number of reasons. These include variations in the abundance of salmon, salmon runs not conforming with the fishing seasons, variations in the fishing effort throughout the fishing season or from one fishing season to another, changes in climatic conditions and variations in completeness of reported catch statistics.

Free Milk

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children under five years of age and cared for by recognised childminders are currently in receipt of free milk; and how many childminders are involved.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available for the quarter August to October 1987 is as follows:
Number of children in Scotland under five years of age receiving free milk while cared for by a childminder: 576.
Number of registered childminders in Scotland claiming reimbursement for cost of milk supplied: 232.

Midwifery Students

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many intakes of midwifery students were cancelled in Scotland in each year ended 30 September in 1985, 1986 and 1987; and what are the most recently available staffing figures.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the years mentioned only one course, at Glasgow Northern College of Nursing and Midwifery in August 1987, was cancelled. That was because of a lack of numbers The number of qualified midwives, including community midwives and community nurses with combined duties, in the NHS in Scotland at 30 September 1987 (provisional figure) was 4,115 (3,504 whole-time equivalent) and the number of student midwives was 988.

Rural Transport

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the uptake of rural transport innovation grants, showing the number of applications, the number and value of grants paid, and the reasons for any refusals, in each region; how much of his budget for this scheme has not been used; and if he has any plans to promote public transport in rural Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information about the uptake of rural transport innovation grant is set out in the table. Grant totalling £39,601 was approved on rural transport schemes in 1986-87 and a further £41,099 has been approved in the current financial year to date. Provision of £170,000 has been available in both 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Since the scheme began in June 1986, 10 applications for grant assistance have been rejected because they did not meet the criteria. Applications were mainly rejected because the service was already operating, or duplicated an existing service, or was not in a rural area.

In an effort to encourage further interest in the scheme a publicity leaflet/poster was widely distributed in August 1987 to regional and islands councils, district and community councils and to various voluntary organisations. Further promotion of the scheme will be considered as appropriate.

The RDG I figures relate to published information for employment office areas and identify individual payments in excess of £25,000. The Department does not maintain more detailed statistics. Since Easington falls within the Sunderland employment office area a breakdown of RDG I is not available. Likewise specific records are not available on the industrial estate mentioned and therefore the figures quoted relate to Peterlee new town.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the intended capital expenditure of the British Steel Corporation by plant over each of the next three years;

(2) if he will list the following figures for the British Steel Corporation's financial performance for each year since 1978-79 in turnover, net profit or loss, liquid production, numbers employed, productivity in ter man hours per tonne and capital expenditure;

(3) if he will detail capital expenditure in each British Steel Corporation's integrated steel plants in year since 1978-79;

(4) if he will list the following figures for each British Steel Corporation's integrated plants for each since 1978-79 in turnover, net profit or loss, liquid production, number employed, productivity in ter man hours per tonne and capital expenditure.

Mr. Atkins: BSC publishes capital expenditure performance figures for the corporation as a who more detailed breakdown by plant is unavailable sinc information is commercially confidential. The same i of plans for future capital expenditure at individual p The table gives the figures since 1978-79 for corporation as published in the report and account 1986-87:

Capital expenditure £ million	261	148	164	122	164	210	220

Further to the above table, on 3 December 1987 BSC announced a half-year profit for 1987-88 of £190 million. The corporation is currently planning capital expenditure of £256 million in 1988-89, £274 million in 1989-90 and £288 million in 1990-91.

Easington

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to encourage the development of high technology industry in the district of Easington following the winding-up of the Peterlee and Aycliffe development corporation.

Mr. Butcher: Industry in Easington will be greatly encouraged by the enterprise initiative, with major new inititatives on design, marketing, quality, manufacturing technology, business planning, business information systems, exports, research and technology and business education backed up by investment and innovation grants for small firms (with fewer than 25 employees) and regional selective assistance where clearly necessary to bring about good projects.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will visit Easington to meet those industrialists whose firms have benefited from regional development grants.

Mr. Atkins: I shall be pleased if it proves possibl me to revisit Easington, where industrialists retain a to regional selective assistance, where clearly necessar bring about good projects.

Libya

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duch Lancaster what was the value of exports to Libya fro United Kingdom during 1985-86, 1986-87 and 198 date.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom exports to Liby 1985, 1986 and 1987 are £237·2 million, £260·5 million £202·8 million respectively.

Higher Educational Establishments (Equipment)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor o Duchy of Lancaster what steps have been take encourage companies to donate equipment to hi educational establishments; and if he will mak statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Government look to hi educational establishments to increase their links companies and encourages industry to further those l and donate cash, equipment or staff time. There a number of tax incentives available to encourage company donations, including donations of equipment, to higher education.

BSC (Land Holdings)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much land surplus to operational requirements is owned, whether freehold or leasehold, by the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Atkins: At the end of December 1987, the British Steel Corporation owned 1,200 acres of land which were recorded as unused or underused under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if Her Majesty's Government's provision for regional selective assistance paid from 31 March onwards includes any assessment in respect of money obtained from the EEC European regional development fund.

Mr. Atkins: In setting the levels of public expenditure on regional selective assistance, Her Majesty's Government take into account the amount of support expected from the European regional development fund. The Supply Estimates to be published in March will give details of the receipts forecast from the fund in 1988-89.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the forecast for regional selective assistance for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90, and the latest forecast outturn for 1987-88.

Mr. Atkins: Expected expenditure by my Department on regional selective assistance in 1988-89 and 1989-90 is £161·5 million and £147·6 million, respectively. The decline between the two years is mainly due to an expected reduction in expenditure on the temporary scheme of assistance for small and medium-sized firms and on the exchange risk guarantee scheme. Provision for expenditure on RSA in 1987-88 currently stands at £121·6 million.

Notes:

(1) All figures are not of recoveries and domestic receipts but gross of expected EC receipts.

(2) The following items are included in RSA for the purpose of departmental expenditure estimates:
- — project and training grants.
- — assistance for small and medium-sized enterprises in certain areas affected by rundown in steel, shipbuilding, textile fisheries and tin mining.
- — guarantees for loans from the European Investment Bank and European Coal and Steel Community.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the criteria under which assessments for regional selective assistance (a) are, and (b) will be, made.

Mr. Atkins: The criteria against which applications are appraised are set out in my Department's booklet "The Regional Initiative: Guide to Regional Selective Assistance", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any account of the size of an applicant firm will be taken in assessing eligibility for regional selective assistance.

Notes:

1. The regional development grant element of these data is comprised of individual payments of over £25,000; payments of smaller amounts cannot be attributed to a geographical area smaller than a planning region.
2. Castleford and Pontefract ceased to be an assisted area in 1982.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what checks will be made under his proposed new regional investment grant to ensure that firms achieve the promised number of jobs; and how this system of monitoring will compare with the existing procedures for monitoring regional selective assistance.

Mr. Atkins: The creation of jobs will not be a condition of the new regional investment grant but the scheme is expected to have a beneficial effect on employment and we shall be setting up arrangements to evaluate this on a sampling basis.

Under regional selective assistance companies in receipt of offers of assistance are required to submit annual audited reports on the progress of the project and to inform the Department if they fail to reach or maintain the level of jobs specified in the offer. Projects benefiting from regional selective assistance are normally visited at least once during the period in which these conditions apply.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many posts at each regional office in England, Scotland and Wales will be redundant as a result of the recently announced changes in regional policy.

Mr. Atkins: The number of posts devoted to the administration of the revised regional development grant scheme in my Department's regional offices is approximately 160. The need for work on regional development grants will gradually cease over a number of years. Depending on their terms and conditions of employment, staff will either be redeployed, where possible, or found alternative posts.

The administration of the scheme in Scotland and Wales is the responsibility of the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales respectively.

Pens (Safety)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he will introduce legislation to ban pen tops of the type that caused the death of Billie Walker of Braunstone, Leicester;

Regional Policy

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the D... Lancaster if he will list, for development and inter... areas, the various schemes that will apply as from A...

the promotion of regional policy and the encouragement of business enterprise, together with details of the level of financial assistance and any associated conditions.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 January 1988]: From April 1988 the following schemes of assistance will apply under the DTI regional initiative:

Regional Selective Assistance, available in development and intermediate areas:

(a) Project grants based on the fixed capital costs of a project and the number of jobs expected to be created or safeguarded. The level of grant is negotiated, within certain EC and national limits, as the minimum necessary for the project to proceed.

(b) Training grants at up to 80 per cent. of eligible costs.

To be eligible for assistance projects should be viable, create or safeguard employment, offer regional and national economic benefits, and need assistance to go ahead.

Consultancy Assistance

(a) A free 2-day Business Review.

(b) Assistance for consultancy projects of 5-15 man days on:

marketing design quality manufacturing strategy and systems business planning financial and information systems.

Assistance is normally at the rate of half of the agreed consultancy cost. But in the development and intermediate areas, and in urban programme areas, the assistance is at the rate of two thirds of the agreed consultancy cost to reflect the particular need to stimulate increased use of consultancy in those areas. This assistance is available to independent firms or groups with fewer than 500 employees.

Investment grants of 15 per cent. of the cost of fixed assets up to a maximum grant of £15,000, and innovation grants of 50 per cent. of the agreed project cost up to a maximum grant of £25,000, will be available to independent firms with fewer than 25 employees in development areas. These two schemes are being targeted at the development areas in recognition of the particular difficulties in those areas in raising finance for business development and stimulating innovation. Further details of these two new grants will be published nearer the date of their introduction on 1 April.

In certain parts of the assisted areas (and some non-assisted areas) the following are also available:

(a) Exchange risk cover on foreign currency reconversion loans from the European Coal and Steel Community up to a maximum of £500,000 per project; and

(b) Temporarily, business improvement service grants to help support the development of small firms.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the reforms of regional policy which he announced on 12 January require the prior approval of the European Commission before they are implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The regional policy changes which were announced on 12 January included plans to grant or alter state aid, of which the European Commission must be informed in accordance with article 93(3) of the EC treaty. The Commission has been informed of these plans and has decided to raise no objections to them.

To that end, consultations have been opened on the scrutiny recommendations including those on death registration. It is as yet too early to predict the outcome of those consultations.

Hip Replacement Operations (Barnet)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hip replacement operations have been carried out in the Barnet health authority since 1978.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information can be produced centrally only at disproportionate cost. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the health authority for the information he requires.

Obstetric Units

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of each obstetric unit for each health authority in England and if he will indicate for each unit (a) whether there is a designated consultant anaesthetist whose duties include the organisation of an obstetric anaesthetic service and ensuring that the health authority is fully aware of any deficiencies in this service, (b) whether there is a consultant anaesthetist on call and readily available on a 24 hour, seven day a week basis, (c) whether suitable facilities for the storage of blood exists, (d) whether a quantity of Group O Rh-ve blood is held, (e) whether there exists a 24 hour on-request epidural service, (f) whether an anaesthetic audit is undertaken; and (g) whether the equipment required in the labour suite and the obstetric theatre include an emergency electricity supply;

(2) if he will indicate for each obstetric unit in England whether the anaesthetic equipment includes (a) an anaesthetic machine, (b) difficult intubation kit, (c) a DC defibrillator, (d) anaesthetic gas scavenging facilities, (e) an automatic pulmonary ventilator with disconnect alarm and (f) refrigerator for the storage of drugs;

(3) if he will indicate for each obstetric unit in England whether there is (a) an ECG monitor with recorder, (b) an inspired oxygen concentration meter, (c) an automatic blood pressure measuring device, (d) an end tidal carbon dioxide meter, (e) a peripheral nerve stimulator, (f) apparatus for measuring central venous pressure, (g) pulse aximeter, (h) blood storage refrigerator, (i) pressure infusion bags, (j) a blood warming device, (k) blood filters, (l) neonatal resuscitation equipment that includes a temperature measuring device; and (m) neonatal equipment for maintaining the temperature of the neonate.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Maternity Services Advisory Committee in 1984 provided guidance to health authorities on the equipment to be included in new delivery suites and in the upgrading of existing buildings. This guidance, which has been commended to health authorities, is followed wherever possible. The functioning of obstetrics departments is a matter for the health authority concerned.

Hospital Broadcasting Services

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of Sta Services whether he will meet the chairma Telecom to discuss the threat to hospital b services from substantial increases in British T charges.

Mrs. Currie: No. The organisation broadcasting services is for local decision. I there have been no significant changes in Brit charges likely to affect hospital broadcasting s November 1986.

Lloyd George Stationery

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State Services if his Department has reviewed the u availability of Lloyd George stationery fo medical histories by family practitioners; an make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: In 1974 a joint working p Health Departments for England, Wales an health authorities and general medical p recommended the replacement of the A5 s record envelope (familiarly known as the "Ll envelope") in general practice by an A4 size f then some practices have converted their rec size. Mr. Portillo: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The Rhondda constituency is served by Porth and Rhondda, West local offices of the Department, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

The number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit, and the percentage increase between the years requested, is as follows:

	Porth	Rhondda West	Totals	Percentage increase

The staffing figures for 1979 are no longer available. Details of the percentage change in staffing cannot therefore be supplied.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1987, Official Report, column 935, if he will publish a similar table of severe weather payments which includes figures for the Castle Gate office of his Department in proportion to its Nottingham, North constituency clients.

Mr. Scott: The total and weekly number of exceptionally cold weather payments made by the Castlegate office last winter is as follows. Information on what proportion of those payments was made to claimants in the Nottingham, North consituency is not available but is likely to be very small, since only a small part of that constituency lies within the area covered by the Castlegate office.

The figures given are for the statitical weeks ending on the dates specified. I regret that my reply on 18 December, at column 935, in relation to the local offices which cover most of the Nottingham, North constituency, wrongly stated that the figures were for the weeks commencing on those dates.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1987, Official Report, column 935, which were the two weeks for which help in the form of severe weather payments was available in the Nottingham area.

Mr. Scott: Exceptionally cold weather payments were available in the Nottingham area for the weeks commencing 12 and 19 January 1987.

Nurses

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those (a) health authorities and (b) teaching hospitals which are running courses designed to retrain and possibly re-employ previously qualified nurses who wish to return to the nursing profession, giving in each case the number of places and applicants for each year since such courses have been in operation, and the steps taken to advertise the availability of the courses.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available centrally.

It rests with health authorities to match the provision of courses for those wishing to return to nursing with the service need. Every encouragement is given to health authorities to attract qualified nurses to return. Planning and organisation of these courses is a matter for individual health authorities, depending on their staffing needs.

Such courses are usually publicised within the community.

Social Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what principles area allocations of money to the social fund were decided; and for what reasons some areas have received smaller allocations than are being disbursed at the present time.

Mr. Scott: An explanation of the basis of social fund allocations to local offices for 1988-89 is available in the Library.

Mentally Handicapped People (Board and Lodging)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to make the levels of board and lodging allowance for the mentally handicapped more flexible to take account of the variety of support needs of the mentally handicapped: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Supplementary benefit assistance with residential care and nursing home fees does not, and was never intended to, provide help with all levels of needs. It is not the only source of support for mentally handicapped people. Health and local authorities have powers and duties to help where particular needs arise.

Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to conduct an overview of community care and to make recommendations on the most effective use of public resources. His conclusions are expected shortly.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to ensure that the growth in board and lodging allowances for the mentally handicapped will allow for inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: People in homes for the mentally handicapped who are entitled to supplementary benefit (from next April income support) can receive help in full with any increase in charges, subject to national limits on the overall weekly charge which can be met, which from next April will be £200 per week (nursing homes) and £160 per week (residential care homes). This represents increases of 14 per cent. and 19 per cent. respectively since April 1985 when the present system was introduced, reflecting the fact that we already take movements in homes' costs and charges into account when setting limits. The increase in the retail prices index since April 1985 has been 9 per cent.

Prescriptions (Cost of Items)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce legislation to make it a requirement for pharmacists to inform patients when an item ordered by prescription is cheaper when bought over the counter.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association, and the General Practice Finance Corporation, about changing the constitution of the General Practice Finance Corporation to allow the maximum use of private sector funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Newton: In the past year, I have met representatives of the General Medical Services Committee of the British Medical Association (GMSC) on three occasions and representatives of the General Practice Finance Corporation (GPFC) on five occasions, which included two meetings jointly with the GMSC, to discuss changing the constitution of the GPFC to allow the maximum use of private sector funds. As I said in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) on 25 November 1987, at columns 248-49, we shall be carrying forward this proposal in further discussion with the GPFC and the GMSC. Powers to enable such a change to take place are included in clauses 1 to 3 of the Health and Medicines Bill.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date he received the annual report of the General Practice Finance Corporation; and why it has not yet been laid before Parliament.

Mrs. Currie: A copy of the corporation's annual report was received on 1 December. The report is being studied prior to arranging for it to be laid before Parliament.

Invalid Care Allowance (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the number of people within the area covered by his Department's Peterlee office and Seaham office who are in receipt of invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Emphysema

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now received the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on its investigation into the cause of emphysema among coal miners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have not yet received this report. I am advised that it will now be submitted in February. Careful consideration will then be given to its recommendations.

NHS Funding (Yorkshire)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the amount of Government funding for each year since 1979 to (a) Pontefract district health authority and (b) the Yorkshire regional health authority, based on (i) actual amounts, (ii) in real terms at the current year's prices and (iii) in real terms at the current year's prices based on information he may have for National Health Service inflation costs.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is shown in the table. Information is not available on a district basis for the years prior to the 1982 reorganisation of the National Health Service. Comparable information for 1987-88 will not be available until after the end of the financial year.

It is inappropriate to revalue district health authority expenditure by reference to centrally assessed movements in hospital and community health services pay and prices as the local composition of that expenditure can differ significantly from the national average.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the sum to be allocated to the Yorkshire regional health authority out of the additional funds made available in the financial year 1987-88; and how much of that sum is to be allocated to the Pontefract district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Yorkshire regional health authority has been allocated £4·7 million from the additional £75 million available this year. It is for the region to decide how to distribute these funds amongst its districts.

Pontefract Health Authority

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has received from the Pontefract district health authority about its projected deficits from 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what action he proposes to take in response.

Mrs. Currie: I am fully aware of Pontefract's financial position. I am sure the hon. Member will have welcomed my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health's announcement on 16 December of an additional £75 million for health authorities in England for this financial year. £4·7 million of this has been allocated to Yorkshire regional health authority. Distribution of this money and of the annual allocation for 1988-89 to district health authorities in Yorkshire are matters for the regional health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to approach the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority for further information.

Ambulances

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many ambulances of the London ambulance service, per sector, were available for emergency duty on 31 December 1987, 1 January 1988 and each subsequent day until 7 January.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which voluntary organisations he intends to consult about the need to assist those severely disabled people who will receive reduced benefit from April 1988; what he will be asking them to do; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have had a number of informal and exploratory talks. Those who gave me their views did so in confidence. I shall make a further announcement when the details of the scheme have been decided.

Cleveland County Council (Letters)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his housing benefit department at New court, Carey street, will be able to reply to the letters from Cleveland county council welfare rights department dated 8 May 1987, 3 July 1987, 15 July 1987 and 4 November 1987, all of which related to housing benefit circulars.

Mr. Portillo: A reply has now been sent to Cleveland county council welfare rights department in response to its letters about housing benefit circulars.

AIDS

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will respond to the Advisory Council on Drug Abuse's report on drug addiction and AIDS.

Mr. Newton: We have very recently received the first report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on drug misuse and AIDS. We expect to respond shortly, after appropriate consideration.

Efficiency

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he will publish the statistics comparing efficiency and performance between hospitals and health authorities;

(2) if he will list the top 10 health districts in the United Kingdom for efficiency in ear, nose and throat surgery.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The Department will publish the annual set of performance indicators based on 1986-87 data in February 1988. This set, like those for earlier years, will be available in the Library. Performance indicators address some but not all aspects of efficiency. Since there is no one measure of the efficiency of a service, it is not therefore possible to publish a ranking list. Efficiency can be characterised only by analysis of a range of local data such as cost per case; manpower, capital and bed utilisation; percentage of day cases. Of these data only a few, for example bed utilisation and day cases, are available nationally at the ear, nose and throat specialty level, and these form part of the performance indicator set.

Children in Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children were in care by local authority area in 1986, or the most recent year available; how many of these children are available for adoption; and how many children in care were adopted in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 January 1988]: The information available is given in the tables. Information is not collected centrally on the number of children in care available for adoption.

Mr. B. Ingram, South Tyrone Hospital

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for what reason he has not replied to the letter of 7 July 1987 addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary on medical laboratory scientific officers from the Chief Medical Laboratory Scientific Officer, Mr. B. Ingram, of South Tyrone hospital.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Mr. Ingram's letter was one of 620 received as part of a co-ordinated campaign during the period of the medical laboratory scientific officers' pay negotiations in 1987. Ministers were fully aware of the issues involved and official replies to those letters were sent out on their behalf. The response to Mr. Ingram was sent by an executive officer in the health authority personnel division in July 1987 and Mr. Ingram responded to such a reply in a further letter dated 31 July 1987.

Chorion Villus Sampling

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many district health authorities in England provide chorion villus sampling to pregnant women; and under what circumstances;

(2) what information on chorion villus sampling and amniocentesis is available for pregnant women who wish to have screening; and through what channels the information is made available.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The information requested is not held centrally. Facilities for amniocentesis testing are available through all consultant units. The decision to offer chorion villus sampling and aminiocentesis to a pregnant woman is a matter of clinical judgment, and will depend on the risk in her particular case of the foetus having a detectable abnormality. The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant from the DES, is conducting a randomised controlled trial comparing amniocentesis with chorionic villus sampling; twenty-three centres in the United Kingdom are participating. An information booklet is available to participants and I will arrange for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member. The Department's view is that the procedures and their implications should be fully explained to the mother to enable her to make an informed decision. She should also be told who will give her the results and when she can expect to be notified.

Day Nurseries

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the percentage of (a) three-year-olds and (b) four-year-olds who have places in local authority day nurseries.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Information is not collected centrally on the individual age of children using local authority day nurseries. Over the period 1982-86, the number of children on the registers of local authority day nurseries increased from 31,700 to 34,900 an increase from 1·1 per cent. to 1·2 per cent. of the population aged under five years.

Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors (Review Body Membership)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the current membership of the Independent Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors, showing the nominating or originating body and period of tenure in each case.

Mr. Newton: Members of the Independent Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. The current membership of the review body is shown in the table:

Name	Appointed	Appointment Ends
Sir James Cleminson, MC, DL, (Chairman)	1987	1989
Sir John Herbecq, KCB, (Deputy Chairman)	1983	1990

Mrs. Suzette Harold	1983	1988
Principal Graham Hills	1983	1988
Mrs. Jennifer Hughes	1983	1988
Mr. Ian Phillips, F. Eng	1983	1990
Professor George Thomason, CBE	1983	1988

Nurses (Overtime)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services what he estimates to be (a) the perce nurses working overtime, and (b) the cost of this the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply 16 Decemb c. 598]: Nurses who are graded up to and includi nurse 7 are entitled to recompense for overtime Of these nurses, 38 per cent. received at least one during the year 1986-87 at a total estimated co National Health Service in Great Britain of £47·1

Benefits (Rhondda)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State fo Services how many people claimed supplementar in Rhondda constituency in (a) 1979 and (b) 198 percentage change that represents; and what percentage change in (i) staff handling supple benefit and (ii) all staff at local offices of his Dep for the same period.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available in th form requested. The Rhondda constituency is s Porth and Rhondda West local offices of the Dep although the boundaries are not conterminous.

The number of people in receipt of supple benefit, and the percentage increase between t requested, is as follows:

	Porth	Rhondda West	Totals
1979	2,984	5,150	8,134
1985	4,227	7,825	12,052

TRANSPORT

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office, Management and Personnel Office, in 1984.

Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through departmental complaints procedures. Guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff. I am arranging for a copy of the Department's guidance to be placed in the Library. No central record of complaints was kept until mid-1986. Since then there has been one complaint which has been fully investigated.

It is not the Department's practice to publish the disciplinary action taken in individual cases.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of ports in the national dock labour scheme in 1958, 1968, 1978 and each year since 1983, and the percentage of all United Kingdom ports those figures represent in each of these years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The scheme, when first made in 1947, listed 80 ports in Great Britain to which it applied. One port has been added to the list and one deleted from it. Over time several of the other listed ports have fallen into disuse, have ceased to handle cargo, or have been amalgamated. There are now about 60 ports within the scheme. In total there are around 300 harbours or ports in Great Britain. Cargo is handled at about one third of them.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list by each port in the United Kingdom (a) the total value of imports; (b) the total value of exports; (c) the total tonnage of imports and

(d) the total tonnage of exports, in 1958, 1968, 1978 and for the latest available date; and if he will sub-divide the list into those parts within the national dock labour scheme and those outside it and show the total figures for each category in each of the above years in each sub-division;

(2) if he will give the percentage of traffic handled by (a) national dock labour scheme ports and (b) non-national dock labour scheme ports, as a percentage of total British foreign trade in 1958, 1968, 1978 and each year since 1983.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information on value is available only for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise trade ports which in many cases include both national dock labour scheme and non-scheme components.

Tonnages of export, import and coastal traffic are published annually, for each port in Great Britain with significant freight traffic, in "Port Statistics", copies of which are in the Library. In the latest volume, table 1.3 gives the total traffic through each port for 1965, 1970, 1975 and 1980 to 1986. Table 1.6 provides the import and export detail for the latest year.

Details for earlier years, and for the intervening years of table 1.3, can be found in earlier editions. Prior to 1980, corresponding information was published by the National Ports Council in the "Annual Digest of Port Statistics", but there are no data prior to 1965. In these tables the following are scheme ports:

London
Medway
Whitstable
Southampton
Poole
Plymouth
Fowey
Par
Falmouth
Bristol
Gloucester and Sharpness
Newport
Cardiff
Penarth
Barry
Port Talbot
Swansea
Liverpool
Garston
Manchester
Fleetwood
Barrow
Whitehaven
Workington

Dundee
Forth
Blyth
Tyne
Sunderland
Seaham
Tees and Hartlepool
Hull
Goole
Grimsby and Immingham
Boston
Wisbech
Kings Lynn
Great Yarmouth
Lowestoft
Ipswich

The percentage of all non-fuel seaport tra coastal) tonnage handled by the ports listed 1968, 1978 and 1986 was 92, 89, 77 and respectively.

Carlisle to Settle Railway

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary Transport when he expects to complete his Carlisle to Settle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: As soon as we are cl extent of any local authority and private s that may be offered to help with the cost of Ribblehead viaduct or revenue support for s line.

Passenger Miles (Greater Lond

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary Transport if he will tabulate in the Offici official estimate of the numbers of pa travelled within the Greater London area f principal modes of private and public trans of the years since 1980, showing for each t variation from that or other convenient ba

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information r follows:

Passenger Mileage on Public Transport within London and the South East

	LRT Tube		LRT Bus		BR NSE

1985-86	3·7	42	2·6	—	7·8
1986
1986-87	3·9	50	2·6	—	8·3

Reliable estimates of overall traffic levels in London are not currently available. What evidence there is suggests that car passenger mileage has changed little since 1980.

Air Traffic (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he, or the Civil Aviation Authority, possesses concerning the amount, categories and general monitoring of all air traffic in uncontrolled air space below and surrounding the London terminal control area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Civil aviation safety regulation is wholly the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. There is no requirement for pilots of aircraft flying in uncontrolled air space to inform air traffic services units of their presence or of their intended routings. I understand that the authority has no comprehensive information of the amount and categories of aircraft flying in the uncontrolled air space below and surrounding the London terminal control area, but that the authority monitors air traffic in uncontrolled air space on a sample basis so as to establish requirements for specific air traffic services.

Civil Aviation Authority (Air Traffic Control Services)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is advised by the Civil Aviation Authority of the scale of charges for air traffic control services provided by them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend promulgates the Civil Aviation Authority's charges by statutory instrument for the following air traffic control services:

1. En-route navigation services.
2. Shanwick oceanic control area navigation services.
3. Navigation services for helicopter flights from any place in the United Kingdom to offshore installations in the North sea area.
4. Aerodrome navigation services at BAA plc airports.

At other airports where the Civil Aviation Authority provides air traffic control services under contract, the charges are covered by contracts and are confidential to the airports and the authority.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current annual value of contracted air traffic approach control services provided by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Gentlen table 5.1 in the Civil Aviation Authority's annual and accounts for 1986-87.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of Sta Transport how much was paid and by whom, for th upon which the London City airport was construct

Mr. Peter Bottomley: London City airport is pri owned. The terms on which the land was made ava are a commercial matter between the airport an landowners.

Road Dressing

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of Stat Transport what investigations have been undertak his Department into alternative methods of s dressing of roads, so as to minimise or avoid inconve to road users caused by flying chippings; and with result.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Research into road s dressing has been carried out by the Departm Transport and Road Research Laboratory. The resul incorporated into Road Note 39 "Recommendatio Road Surface Dressing". Trials of new technique materials are continuing and the recommenda contained in the above document may be reviewed light of the results obtained.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Tran what will be the effect on the traffic capacity of the S bridge of the strengthening work thereon.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Completion of the strength work will permit the removal of the traffic restriction had to be imposed on the crossing. For example, s lane operation in the eastbound direction in the mornings will no longer be necessary. As a result ther be some increase in the traffic capacity.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Tran what are the statistics for traffic utilisation of the S bridge, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The traffic figures on the S crossing for the last five years are as follows:

	Motor Cycles	Heavy Goods and Public Service Vehicles	Cars and Light Goods Vehicles	Total
1983	93,132	2,182,551	10,303,544	12,579,227
1984	96,365	2,240,980	10,641,587	12,978,932
1985	90,212	2,270,545	10,928,451	13,286,208
1986	72,575	2,383,008	12,017,349	14,472,932
1987	55,712	2,633,202	12,954,154	15,643,068

Note: The above figures are based on toll records: the statistics for 1983 and 1985 include estimated figures for the days on which tolls not collected.

Belfast Pilotage Authority

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the state of working arrangements between pilots and the Belfast Pilotage Authority.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that there has been disagreement between the Belfast Pilotage Authority and the pilots about the extent to which standby time should be reflected in pilots' earnings and about rota arrangements.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he intends to take to ensure that the Belfast Pilotage Authority promotes appropriate byelaws under section 16 of the Pilotage Act 1983 for duty requirements for pilots;

(2) if he will exercise his powers under section 16(2)(b) of the Pilotage Act 1983 to direct the Belfast Pilotage Authority to submit appropriate byelaws to formalise its requirements for pilots in respect of hours of duty and terms of service.

Mr. David Mitchell: Section 16 of the Pilotage Act 1983 empowers the Secretary of State to direct a pilotage authority to submit a byelaw to him for confirmation only where a body or persons set out in section 16(1) of the Act have made representation to him that such a byelaw should be brought into force. The Secretary of State has received no such representation for a byelaw to define terms of service, hours of duty or other duty requirements for Belfast pilots.

Belfast Harbour

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the proposal of the competent harbour authority in Belfast to move the boarding and landing station from its present location to a position in the main navigation channel; and if he will take steps to ensure that the competent harbour authority consults all interested parties before any action is taken.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no representations on this matter. Following implementation of the Pilotage Act 1987, the location of boarding and landing stations, and the extent to which there should be consultation on the matter, will be for the competent harbour authority to decide, subject only, where boarding and landing requirements are to be contained in a pilotage direction concerning compulsory pilotage, to the statutory obligation on the authority to consult shipowners and any other local harbour operators before giving such a direction.

British Rail (Surplus Land)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much land, surplus to operational requirements, was owned by British Rail on 30 September 1987; and what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail concerning progress in selling such land.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from the BR Property Board that the total was some 17,300 acres. We have asked British Rail to dispose of all its surplus land and property as rapidly as possible. I discussed a variety of matters with the chairman of the BR Property Bo including progress in this area. I will Friend with further information.

Heavy Lorries

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of S if he will estimate the total amount o collected from operators of all heavy go 3·5 tonne gross vehicle weight for e 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and the excise duty collected from operators of v and 38 tonnes for each of these years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following is t the United Kingdom:

Motoring taxes on licensed heavy go

	Fuel tax (on derv) on goods vehicle over 3·5 tonnes gvw
1984-85	816
1985-86	866
1986-87	959

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of S if he will estimate the cost of the addition damage which will occur in a year as a r of the gross weight limit for two-axled r 16·26 tonnes to 17·00 tonnes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This change comes into effect on 1 April 1988. The e and tear will depend on the number of v for use at the higher weight, their mileag Department will be monitoring this. Th become available in due course.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of S if he will publish in the Official Re convenient groups, the total amount of collected for lorries exceeding 3·5 tonnes years for which the information is avail

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following is t the United Kingdom:

Vehicle excise duty on lorries over 3·5

	Rigid lorries
1984-85	188
1985-86	220
1986-87	223

Rural Transport Developme

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of S how many inquiries from prospective op received in respect of grants from th development fund; how many applic made, how many grants have been gi amounts.

Dr. David Mitchell: Since the fund w the Development Commission, which behalf of the Department of Transport, inquiries and 187 applications. A total o been approved, of which 95 have been average grant approved for 81 scheduled services, mainly by minibuses and taxis, is about £8,500. Additionally, 18 county transport advisers have been appointed with help from the fund at an average grant of £6,250 pa for up to three years, and 11 other projects, such as publicity and surveys, have been approved at an average of £4,000. The commission has made grants of £650,000 so far, but has a total commitment of over £1 million.

Roads Maintenance (Statistics)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide statistics of the total cost of motorway and other roads repairs and maintenance during the years 1981 to 1986 with estimates of the percentage of roads deterioration attributable to (a) wear and tear, (b) damage caused by lorries, (c) damage caused by cars and light vehicles and (d) damage caused by other transport modes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure on carriageway maintenance in recent years has been as follows:

£ millions, at 1985-86 prices (England only)

	National roads (motorway and trunk)	Other roads
1981-82	[1]	390
1982-83	147	412
1983-84	125	386
1984-85	149	370
1985-86	123	379

[1] Not available.

The percentages of road deterioration due to weathering and traffic wear (or "damage") are not known.

Traffic wear is due mostly to vehicles with high axle loadings. These are mostly heavy goods vehicles, but also include some public service vehicles. On trunk roads the heaviest vehicles with four or more axles are responsible for three quarters of the damage. On principal proportion is about one half, and on other ro one third.

Traffic Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for T if he will provide details of the increased total traffic in the years from 1981 to 1986 for (a) (b) cars and (c) other transport modes and hi of the likely future trends in increased traffic fo five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information request obtained from table 2.1 and table 2.42 of "T Statistics Great Britain 1976-86", a copy of which placed in the House of Commons Library.

Traffic (Damage)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secreta Energy what is his policy on the siting of stations in or near large metropolitan area

Mr. Michael Spicer: The siting of each station is considered by the Health and Safe

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate against the background which is set out in chapter 5 of the booklet titled "The Work of HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many nuclear reactors will be in operation or under construction in Avon, Somerset and Dorset by 1995 under the Central Electricity Generating Board's proposals for the next power station development.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Fuel Disconnections

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any report of the Gas Consumers Council on disconnection.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I understand that the Gas Consumers' Council is preparing for publication a report on disconnections, but that it is not yet finalised.

Energy Saving

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what energy savings have been achieved by Government programmes in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is estimated that gross annual energy savings of about £700 million can be attributed to the Government's programmes covering the industrial, commercial and domestic sectors.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities (Computer Contracts)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 14 December 1987, Official Report, column 341, on what occasions in the last two years his Department has allowed a single tender to be submitted for the supply of computers or communications equipment to a British university; what were the names of tenderers involved; and which of them was foreign owned.

Mr. Jackson: In the last two years single tender action has been agreed for the following university computer procurements involving capital grants of £100,000 or more:

Birmingham University	DEC VAX 8700
Edinburgh University	Meiko
Glasgow University	ICL 3980
Kent University	Meiko
Nottingham University	ICL 3980
Open University	SUN workstations
Queen Mary College, London	AMT DAP
South West Universities Regional Centre	ICL 3980
Strathclyde University	DEC VAX 8600
University College Cardiff	DEC VAX 8530

Two single tender orders costing £100,000 or more have been agreed in the last two years for communications equipment. One was placed with GEC Computers Ltd for enhancement of packet-switching exchanges and the other was placed with CAMTEC Electronics Ltd for upgrading packet assemblers/disassemblers and gateways for the joint academic network (JANET).

In addition, IBM donated computer systems to the University of Glasgow and the Manchester business school. No DES capital grants were involved in these procurements.

Of the suppliers of equipment listed below, the parent companies of Digital Equipment Company Ltd (DEC), SUN Microsystems (UK) Ltd, and IBM United Kingdom Ltd (IBM) are based in the United States; in the case of Active Memory Technology (AMT), International Computers Ltd (ICL), Meiko Ltd, GEC Computers Ltd and CAMTEC Electronics Ltd, central control and management are exercised in the United Kingdom.

Goldsmiths' College

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the funding of Goldsmiths' college in the light of the resolution passed by the senate of London university to admit the college as a school of the university from 1 August.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Goldsmiths' college is currently funded direct by the Department. In the light of its new status from 1 August, I have today written to the vice-chancellor of London University, the chairman of the University Grants Committee and the warden of Goldsmiths' college agreeing that, from that date, funding for Goldsmiths' should be added to the funding for London university which is paid from the universities vote on the advice of the UGC. Subject to parliamentary approval, the appropriate transfer will be made to the universities vote. This includes an addition of £800,000 for 1988-89 to meet the necessary transitional costs of Goldsmiths' new status.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Political Asylum

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for political asylum were received during 1987; and if he will list the countries of origin of the applicants.

Mr. Renton: Information for 1987 is not yet fully available. It is hoped to publish the figures, by nationality, in a Home Office statistical bulletin by the end of May. Figures for 1986 were published in table 7 of Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1986" (issue 13/87), copies of which are in the Library.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will construct a table showing the average number of doses of drugs administered per inmate in each of Her Majesty's penal establishments in the latest available year;

(2) what were (a) the categories and (b) the numbers of individual doses of drugs administered to inmates at (i) Her Majesty's prison, Liverpool and (ii) Her Majesty's prison, Manchester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following table provides the available information in respect of the financial year 1986-87 for establishments served by more than one medical officer. Establishments in which medical services were largely provided by a single doctor are omitted in keeping with the long established policy of not publishing information relating to the prescribing practice of individual doctors.

Magistrates' Courts (Press Information)

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will issue fresh guidance to magistrates' courts on the provision of information to the press.

Mr. John Patten: Individual clerks to justices are responsible for the day-to-day running of courts and it is open to newspaper editors to seek to make suitable local arrangements with them.

DNA Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the Government's trial to test the acceptability and feasibility of the DNA technique for immigration work has been completed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his provisional timetable for DNA tests to be available for all seeking right of entry to Britain at United Kingdom embassies and commissions on the Indian subcontinent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Government's pilot trial is in its final stages. A report is being prepared, and a copy will be placed in the Library. No decisions have been taken yet on the policy arising out of DNA testing, but meanwhile facilities are available at British diplomatic posts in Dhaka and Islamabad for blood samples to be taken and transported to the United Kingdom in connection with commercial DNA tests in immigration cases.

Firearms

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements are in force to require each police force to keep a detailed inventory of its firearms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements are in force to require each police force to ensure that, following operations involving firearms, the same number of weapons are returned as were issued; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what arrangements are in force to require each police force to ensure that its supply of firearms does not fall into non-authorised hands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Every police force armoury is required to keep a detailed inventory of all weapons held within that force. When firearms are issued for police operations, they are issued only to those officers who produce a current authorisation certificate.

All forces maintain a separate record which details the type of weapon issued, its serial number, the name of the officer to whom it is issued and the number of rounds of ammunition issued. Each entry is signed and countersigned. Upon return of the weapon, the issuing entry is checked and a separate entry is made showing the number of rounds returned or used. If any rounds are used a report is completed by the firearms officer. Again, each entry is signed and counter-signed.

As part of its annual inspection of police forces, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary examines closely both force policy and the administrative arrangements relating to the storage, issue and use of police firearms.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now arrange for the reasons, in summarised form, for refusal of entry to those in possession of valid entry clearance to be kept centrally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. It would not be right to increase the amount of centrally collected information for this or any other group without a strong, continuing purpose.

Central Mobilising Project

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated date by which the central mobilising project being produced by Marconi will be operating on behalf of the London fire and civil defence authority; on what date it was initially planned to be introduced; whether the authority will insist upon the fixed price; at what cost other United Kingdom fire brigades have purchased other systems because of the delay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are informed by the authority that it is hoped that the new central mobilising system will be operational by the end of 1988. The contractual date for completion was 1985 which would have led to an in-service date of late 1985 to early 1986.

We are informed that the question of the price of the system is a matter of contract between Marconi and the authority, and the contract is not for a fixed price.

Neither we nor the authority are aware of any impact on other United Kingdom fire brigades resulting directly or indirectly from the delay in this case.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases there have been, of which he is aware, over the past two years involving abuse of the police national computer; what was the nature of the abuse in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not been informed of any such cases.

Video Films

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a detailed list in the Library of all video films which the British Board of Film Classification has so far refused to classify or has censored in some way, together with a summary of the reason for so doing in each case.

Mr. Renton: Arrangements have been made to have placed in the Library a consolidated list published last year by the board of decisions made under the Video Recordings Act in 1985 and 1986. The board is at present preparing a further consolidated list which will, addition, record decisions made in 1987, and a copy of t will be placed in the Library when it is available. The l shows those works in respect of which the board decid not to issue a classification certificate and those whi were given a certificate only after cuts had been made. does not record the reasons in each case, but the boar annual report for 1986, copies of which are in the Libra explains the main grounds on which the board refuse classification certificate or cuts works before classificatio If the hon. Member wishes to know the reasons in a particular instance, I am sure the board would be glad explain them to him.

Citizenship

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State f the Home Department how many citizens of the Repub of Ireland applied for British citizenship in 1987.

Mr. Renton: This information is not yet available.

Night Patrols (Prisons)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Hon Department what training is given to civilianised nig patrol guards before they first go on duty in Her Majesty prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Night patrol officers receive the induction training at the prison to which they a recruited. It includes security, the purpose of the regim statutory obligations and emergency arrangements.

Dangerous Driving Offences

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Hon Department if he will bring forward legislation to enab a charge of manslaughter to be brought against perso alleged to have caused death by dangerous driving or oth motoring offences.

Mr. John Patten: The law already permits a person wh kills another when driving recklessly to be charged wi manslaughter. It is for the prosecution to decide on whic charge to proceed in any particular case. This area of t criminal law is being examined by the road traffic la review, and we shall consider any proposals for chan which may be made in its report.

Law and Order (Grants)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for t Home Department what proposals he has for changes the arrangements for the payment of grants made by h Department to support law and order services.

Mr. Hurd: As part of the preparation for the new loc government finance arrangements proposed by my rig hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, have been reviewing the role of specific grants paid to loc authorities to support the law and order services. W intend to retain the grants paid in respect of the poli service, the civil defence service, the magistrates' cour service and the probation service. Such grants wi continue to be paid to the authorities responsible f meeting the expenditure, not into the proposed communi charge fund.

I shall, however, consult the Commissioner of Police the Metropolis and the local authority organisatio concerned about changes to the present arrangements for the imperial and national services grant and other minor direct payments presently made to the Metropolitan police fund, including their possible integration into the main police grant.

I also intend to consult the local authorities and the services concerned about the scope for modifying the magistrates' courts and probation service grant arrangements so that the amount paid out by central Government to support these services is known before the beginning of the financial year, and is distributed on an equitable basis to local authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, as a rural development area, the Isle of Wight will qualify for the new incentives to be introduced in April in development areas announced in the White Paper entitled "DTI — the department for Enterprise"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The investment and innovation grants to be introduced from April 1988 will be available only in the development areas as designated in the Assisted Areas Order 1984. The Isle of Wight travel-to-work area (TTWA) is not so designated and the new incentives will not, therefore, be available in the TTWA.

Exports

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate what proportion of British goods has an export value tied to the United States dollar, what to the pound sterling and what to the deutschmark.

Mr. Alan Clark: The percentage of United Kingdom exports tied to the United States dollar, pound sterling and deutschmark in 1986 was 18, 56 and 4, respectively. These percentages are based on results of surveys to identify currencies used for invoicing.

Arbitration Law

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the conclusions of his Department's Advisory Committee on Arbitration Law on the issues raised by the Consumer Arbitration Agreements Bill, introduced by the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth.

Mr. Maude: I have placed a copy of the committee's report in the Library today. Copies may be obtained from the secretary of the committee on (01) 215 3481.

Trade Barriers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his reply of 16 December 1987, Official Report, column 540, how many staff are employed by the overseas trade divisions to examine and advise on hidden trade barriers; how many cases they have investigated in the last 12 months; and what has been the result of these investigations.

Mr. Alan Clark: In my Department's overseas trade divisions some 57 staff years were spent dealing with trade relations, including examining and giving advice on barriers to United Kingdom exports, during 1987. A considerable number of cases were the subject of representations to overseas Governments either bilaterally or through the European Commission, who have competence for external trade issues, and progress has been made in some areas.

WALES

Hospital Closures

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met officers of the Welsh health authorities to discuss proposed hospital closures.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has not met officers of all Welsh health authorities to discuss proposed hospital closures. Officials of the NHS directorate are in regular contact with health authority officers and keep my right hon. Friend and me informed of developments, including both the many new capital programmes as well as closures.

NHS (Theft and Malicious Damage)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the value of items stolen or maliciously destroyed in the National Health Service in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available in the form requested.

The following table shows the value of losses of equipment, property and cash in the NHS in Wales due to theft, fraud or arson, neglect of duty or gross carelessness. The figures also include losses due to malicious damage.

Battery Hens

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of, and basis of calculation for, the cost to the Welsh egg industry of adapting to EEC legislation on battery cages;

(2) what is his estimate of, and basis of calculation for, the recurring costs of compliance with the additional requirements for three, two and one birds under the Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987 for egg producers in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: EC directive 86/113 places inescapable obligations on all member states. The cost of compliance will vary from producer to producer according to the type of cage in use, its age, and how the space allowance and other requirements contained in the directive are to be met. No estimate of the aggregate cost to Welsh producers is available.

The same consideration will largely apply in the context of the allowances for three, two and one birds specified in the Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the effect on the numbers of Welsh egg producers of compliance with the additional requirements for three, two and one birds contained in the Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: No information is available on the numbers of egg producers who may cease production, if any.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take to ensure that Welsh egg farmers are not put at a competitive disadvantage with their European counterparts in the implementation of the provisions of EEC directive 86/113.

Mr. Peter Walker: EEC directive 86/113 lays down minimum standards. Other than in situations where fewer than four birds are housed in a cage, these minimum standards will apply in the United Kingdom. In the majority of cases, therefore, Welsh farmers will be in an identical situation to most of their European counterparts, though it is worth pointing out that in Denmark and in West Germany national rules will be somewhat stricter than the directive. We shall be keeping the matter under review.

Agency Staff

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) of 7 December 1987, Official Report, columns 25-28, he will give the actual costs to each district health authority of employing agency staff after taking account of the rates of pay which would have been expended had the posts for which agency staff were used been filled.

Mr. Grist: The information requested cannot be provided as the Department does not receive details of all posts filled by agency staff in the respective authorities.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his responsibilities in respect of the Nature Conservancy Council in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Nature Conservancy Council is my right hon. Friend's statutory adviser on nature conservation in Wales. His main responsibilities include confirming appointments to the council's advisory committee for Wales, making nature conservation orders and designating marine nature reserves. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment consults the Department in exercising his responsibilities in respect of Nature Conservancy Council matters which affect Wales.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether there is to be any change in his Department's provision for running costs in this current financial year.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's running costs limit is to be increased by £750,000 to £38,516,000. The increase is to be fully offset through reductions in capital expenditure within my Department's Central Administration Vote (class XVII, vote 9).

Milk Quotas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State f Wales (1) whether he will introduce legislation to allow h Department to purchase milk quota which comes on t market for redistribution to new milk producers a young farmers in Wales; and if he will make a statemen

(2) whether he will introduce legislation to prevent lo of milk production to Wales through sales of milk quot

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answers 19 January 1988] No.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State f Wales if he will make a statement on the implementatio in Wales of the European Commission's 435 million ec scheme to meet management costs of dealing with ext beef during the two years following the implementation further milk quota cuts, agreed by the Council Agriculture Ministers in December 1986.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 19 January 1988] The Commission recognised that measures taken in th milk sector would have an impact on beef producers. 43 million ecu was its estimate of extra expenditure on aid for private storage and export refunds which would ari in 1987 and 1988 as a result of the extra cow beef comin onto the market. The level of refund and the introductio of private storage schemes are decided by managemen committee, but we are ready to press the Commission t ensure that the market is supported if there is any undu weakness.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State fo Wales what was the percentage change in farm incomes i Wales for the most recent 12-month period for whic information is available; and what were the correspondin figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 19 January 1988] Based on the aggregate income calculation for Wels agriculture, farm incomes in Wales rose by 57 per cent. i 1986. In each of the preceding seven years to 1979 th percentage change in incomes was as follows:

Year	Percentage change
1985	−49
1984	45
1983	−49
1982	31
1981	41
1980	8
1979	−50

River Teifi

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State fo Wales what has been the total expenditure on clearin debris from the River Teifi between Cardigan an Llechryd, during the last 10 years; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 19 January 1988]: This is matter for the Welsh water authority.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are at present employed in agriculture in Wales; and what are the corresponding figures for 1978, 1968 and 1958

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 19 January 1988]: The numbers employed in agriculture in Wales are given in the following table:

	1958	1968	[2]1978	[2]1987
Agricultural workers	39,323	23,124	23,026	19,965
Farmers, partners and directors and their spouses	[1]—	[1]—	45,687	45,666
Total labour force	—	—	68,713	65,631

[1] Not collected until 1970.
[2] Figures include estimates for minor holdings.

Patients (Conveyance)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales under what circumstances each of the Welsh health authorities expect patients to attend hospital by public transport rather than ambulance.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 19 January 1988]: All health authorities in Wales apply the guidance issued in Welsh health circular (77)4. Ambulance transport is provided for patients medically unfit to travel by other means. Patients not in medical need are expected to travel by private or public transport. Individual cases of difficulty are treated sympathetically.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Forestry Commission is presently taking to review its broadleaves policy; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A review of the Government's broadleaves policy will be put in hand this autumn.

Meningitis

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to prevent, contain and treat outbreaks of meningitis in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The evidence at present is that meningitis in Scotland is confined to sporadic cases with no significant upsurge in numbers beyond anticipated variation. We are, however, keeping the situation under close review.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being undertaken to deal with outbreaks of meningitis in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department is not at present funding any research projects relating to meningitis but assistance has been offered by the Scottish Hospital Endowments Research Trust for one such project.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation has taken place with health authorities south of the border to learn lessons from recent meningitis outbreaks in England.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials are in regular contact with their counterparts in England and are being kept fully informed on the recent outbreaks of meningtis there.

Battered Wives

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being undertaken into the incidence of battered wives in Scotland; and what steps he proposes to take to deal with the problems.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Recently completed research commissioned by the Scottish Home and Health Department into the working of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 examined, among other matters, the influence of the Act on the incidence of domestic violence. I hope soon to publish the report of this research.

The provision of services for the victims of domestic violence is the responsibility of local authorities, which are assisted by Scottish Women's Aid, a voluntary organisation which receives grant assistance from my right hon. and learned Friend.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those nature reserves situated in Scotland presently in public ownership.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: National nature reserves as at 31 March 1987 are listed, with details of the type of tenure in each case, in the Nature Conservancy Council's annual report 1986-87, a copy of which has been laid before Parliament. Since that date the following national reserves have been declared in Scotland:

Reserve	Region	Hectares	Tenure
New reserves
Mealdarroch, Strathclyde region	South-West	205	Owned by Nature Conservancy Council

Reserve	Region	Hectares	Tenure
Moine Mhor, Strathclyde region	South-West	493	Owned by Nature Conservancy Council
Adjustments to existing reserves
Clyde Valley Woodlands (extension)	South-West	[1]28	Owned by Nature Conservancy Council
Loch Lomond (extension)	South-West	[1]12	Owned by Nature Conservancy Council/ Nature reserve agreement
Kirkconnel Flow (adjustment of boundaries)	South-West	143	Leased to Nature Conservancy Council
Ben Wyvis (extension)	North-West	[1]2,339	Owned by Nature Conservancy Council

[1] Area of extension only.

One national nature reserve, Haaf Gruney, Shetland, has been de-declared since 31 March 1987.

Comprehensive information on the ownership of local nature reserves, which are declared by local authorities, is not readily available.

Roxburgh District Council (Computer System)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the findings of the Scottish Audit Commission's special investigation into Roxburgh district council's decision to replace its computer system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Secretary of State has not received any report on this matter from the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the measures taken since 1979 to improve energy conservation in commercial and industrial undertakings, local authorities and domestic households in Scotland and indicate how much was spent promoting the schemes and the estimated benefits in energy conservation which accrued.

Mr. Lang: The Government have achieved considerable success in encouraging the efficient use of energy in all sectors in Scotland through their ongoing energy efficiency campaign.

I regret that I am unable to provide a detailed breakdown of Government measures, expenditure and estimated benefits in the way suggested by the hon. Member, but I can say that there are now over 1,000 energy managers in Scotland. Commercial and industrial organisations and local authorities have, since the inception of the energy efficiency survey scheme in 1984, received Government grants amounting to £600,000 for energy surveys. These have identified potential estimated savings of £18 million per annum. In addition, since 1979, through the energy efficiency demonstration scheme £1·9 million has been provided to test new energy-saving technologies in working situations; and in the domestic sector almost 140,000 grants totalling £9·1 million have been provided through the homes insulation scheme to improve home comfort levels and provide lower fuel bills.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how much capital spending on trunk roads in Scotland has increased since 1978-79.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Net capital expenditure on trunk roads in Scotland has increased by £30 million from £65 million in 1987-79 to £95 million in 1986-87, t latest year for which final figures are available. N outturn expenditure in 1987-88 is expected to be of t order of £110 million—a further increase of £15 millio

Local Authorities (Archeological Advice)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State f Scotland what consideration has been given to t importance of local authorities having advice from exp archaeologists.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities c play an important part in heritage conservation, and this end may wish to have professional advice. It however, for authorities themselves to decide whether not to employ archaeologists.

Local Government Archaeological Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State f Scotland what steps he proposes to take to improve loc government archaeological services in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for loc authorities themselves to determine, in the light of th local circumstances and priorities, the nature and exte of their archaeological services.

Sites of Archaeological Interest

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State f Scotland what steps he is taking to extend the number sites preserved under the terms of the Archaeologic Areas and Ancient Monuments Act 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Increased effort is no being directed to the scheduling of sites, and the annu rate is between 150 and 200.

School Computers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State f Scotland what advice is being provided by the Scottis Education Department to local education authorities o the characteristics of school computers to be purchase when they come to replace the current BBC models.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have no plans to issue advic direct to education authorities in Scotland. One of th functions of the Scottish Council for Education Technology is to advise on computers in schools. I discharge of that it is in regular and continuing discussio with education authorities about the specification and th facilities which are desirable in school computer hardwar

Councillors (Remunerated)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement the Widdicombe committee recommendation on reform of the way local authority councillors are remunerated.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are giving careful consideration to all the recommendations made by the Widdicombe committee and the many comments made by all those who responded to consultation. Conclusions will be announced as soon as this consideration has been completed.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time taken to reach a decision on public inquiry reports submitted to him.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There were 38 decisions made in 1987 following public inquiries into town and country planning matters. The average time taken was 23 weeks.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public inquiry decisions are outstanding in Angus district; what were the dates of conclusion of the public hearings; and when the final decision will be announced in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Member has planning decisions in mind. The only outstanding decision is in relation to planning proposals for housing development at Small Glebe, Newtyle, which were the subject of a public local inquiry in March 1987. My right hon. and learned Friend will issue his decision on this case shortly.

Maternity Units

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small maternity units, particularly in rural areas, have been closed in each of the past five years; if he will list these by health board area; and what was the total number of maternity beds, affected in each year, also by health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only one maternity hospital has been closed in the past five years, Buckreddan maternity hospital, Kilwinning. The 26 beds were transferred to the Ayrshire central hospital when accommodation became available there, on transfer of services to the New Crosshouse hospital.

Details are held centrally only for complete hospital closures. Records on partial closures of hospitals, or where there has been a change of use, are not available.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small maternity units, particularly in rural areas, are currently subject to formal health board proposals for closure; and if he will list these numbers by health board area and indicate the number of maternity beds involved in each area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is involved in hospital closures or major changes of use only when health boards submit formal applications to him. At present no such applications are outstanding.

Housing (Basic Facilities)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses in Scotland lack at present basic facilities such as hot water, electricity and inside lavatories; and how many of these are in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the following table, which gives the numbers of dwellings below the statutory tolerable standard and, of those, the numbers lacking one or more of the standard amenities (sink, hot water and inside WC). It also shows the numbers lacking a fixed bath or shower.

Dwellings below tolerable standard at 31 March 1987[1]

	Number of dwellings below tolerable standard	Lacking one or more standard amenity [2 3]	Lacking a fixed bath or shower [2 3]
Scotland	54,791	31,389	29,406
of which in districts classified as Rural[4]	24,786	10,994	9,125

[1] Including most recent years' figures for those local authorities which have not submitted returns for 1987.
[2] Some local authorities were unable to provide information on dwellings in this category.
[3] A dwelling may be recorded in both of these columns and there is therefore an element of double counting.
[4] As defined in table 16 of Scottish Office central research unit paper "A Study of Multiply Deprived Households in Scotland", comprising Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Grampian (excluding Aberdeen district), Highland and Tayside (excluding Dundee district) regions; Islands areas; and north-east Fife, East Lothian, Argyll and Bute, Clydesdale and Cumnock and Doon Valley districts.

Greenland White-fronted Geese (Islay)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has issued licences to permit the shooting of Greenland white-fronted geese on Islay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reason permission was given to allow the shooting of white-fronted geese on Islay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Licences have been granted under powers contained in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to two farmers on Islay to shoot white-fronted geese. This step has had to be taken because substantial increases in the numbers of such geese on the island have led to serious damage being caused to grassland. The very limited issue of licences is intended to enhance the effectiveness of the scaring programme recently introduced with the aim of restricting the geese to the sanctuary areas. The effects will be closely monitored.

Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to privatise Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 3 December 1987 at column 669.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan (Plutonium)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 30 November 1987, column 372, to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on alleged black market sales of plutonium in Sudan, this issue has been raised elsewhere within the structures of the EEC.

Mr. Mellor: The matter has been discussed in political co-operation but these discussions produced no evidence of a black market in nuclear weapons material in Khartoum.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received representations and a transcript from the "20-20 Vision" television programme regarding allegations of a black market in plutonium in the Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from "20-20 Vision" television, which he is considering. We have a transcript of the programme in question, but no evidence to support allegations that weapons-grade nuclear material has been on sale in Sudan.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government to the recent suggestion by Dr. Blix, director general of the International Atomic Energy Agency, that the agency's expertise in safeguarding nuclear materials should be used in future verification of nuclear disarmament treaties.

Mr. Mellor: Dr. Blix has made no approach to us. In our view, treaty verification is a matter for the parties to each treaty. But if they needed to seek assistance from an international organisation to enhance verification the International Atomic Energy Agency's experience could be valuable.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he intends to take to encourage the nuclear weapons threshold nuclear states such as India, Pakistan, Israel, South Africa, Argentina and Brazil to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Mellor: We take every opportunity to impress upon the threshold states the importance we attach to their signature of the non-proliferation treaty.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any recent opportunity with (a) NATO allies and (b) officials from the Soviet Foreign Ministry to discuss progress in technical verification towards the completion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Mellor: The technical aspects of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty are regularly discussed in the conference on disarmament's ad hoc group of experts to consider international measures to de identify seismic events. Its next meeting is plann to 18 March. Representatives of the Soviet Un some NATO allies participate.

Sophie Desta

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what inform has on the living condition of Sophie Desta and he of the family of the late Emperor of Ethiopi representations have been made to the E Government regarding the imprisonment of these and what response was obtained.

Mrs. Chalker: We understand that the seve prisoners belonging to the family of the former E royal family are held in a cell approximately 20 ft in an Addis Ababa prison. We have made n representations to the Ethiopian authorities on t these and the many other political prisoners in E My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Deve took the matter up during a visit to Ethiopia ea month. The Ethiopian Deputy Prime Minister re that the release of the prisoners was being consi the context of the new Ethiopian constitution.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Trespass)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of S Transport (1) how many legal actions for trespa initiated by British Transport police during 1986 a and what were the results of the actions;

(2) what are the criteria employed in deciding or not legal action is initiated for trespass on Brit property;

(3) who makes the decision whether or not to legal proceedings for trespass on British Rail pro

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the Transport police initiated legal action for tres follows:

Year	Number of offences
1986	2,353
[1]1987	1,363

[1] First nine months.

Details of the results of the actions are not available. The Railways Board has also consider proceedings in a relatively small number of cases.

Decisions on offences investigated by the Transport police are made by BTP senior office take into account the Attorney-General's guideli other relevant factors as set out in Home Office ci For civil cases involving British Rail operational understand that decisions are normally taken manager level; for non-operational land, decisi taken by the British Rail Property Board. They ta account whether BR's operational activities an local landowners or residents are adversely affect

BR (Public Holiday Services)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the case for providing at least some Sunday services on Network SouthEast serving the Portsmouth area on Boxing day 1988;

(2) if he will raise with the chairman of British Rail the case for providing some rail services on Boxing day 1988.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is entirely a matter for British Rail, who are responsible for the detailed management of the railway system.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report those areas of his departmental responsibility which extend to Scotland.

Mr. Channon [holding answer 18 December 1987]: The Secretary of State has the following responsibilities in Scotland:

Railways
Overall policy towards the railway network, statutory case work, and railway safety.

Ports
All ports matters, other than marine works.

Marine
The safety of merchant ships and fishing vessels; the prevention of marine pollution by ships and arrangements for cleaning up in the event of a serious pollution incident; the work of Her Majesty's Coastguard; marine pilotage; civil hydrography; oversight of the Northern Lighthouse Board.

Shipping
Most aspects of shipping policy, including sponsorship of the shipping industry and defence and emergencies planning.

Aviation
Policy towards the civil aviation industry; airports policy; sponsorship of the Civil Aviation Authority; policy on aircraft noise and security; accident investigations.

Road traffic and licensing
Road traffic law and the Highway Code. The registration, licensing, construction, safety and testing of road vehicles; the licensing and testing of drivers; and related enforcement, including vehicle excise duty.

Road haulage and bus services
The licensing of goods and PSV vehicle operators; the issue of international permits to road haulage operators; the registration of local bus services; fuel duty rebate; and the carriage of radioactive materials and dangerous goods.

Research
Government-sponsored transport research (the Scottish Office undertakes additional research for local purposes).

International
The conduct of transport international relations and negotiations, including aviation, shipping and road freight, either bilaterally or in international organisations such as the EC and ECMT.

Plutonium

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have taken place between his Department and British Nuclear Fuels plc concerning the transport of plutonium by aircraft; and what were the results.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no need for consultation between this Department and British Nuclear Fuels on this issue until it submits a package design for competent authority approval.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to consider and take any action in regard to the Civil Aviation Authority's draft charging proposals for Manchester airport and their implications for the gateway international airport status of Manchester for the Government's national aviation policy objectives and for the future economic progress of the north-west region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under the provisions of part IV of the Airports Act 1986, the charging proposals are now a matter for the CAA alone. The authority is fully aware of the Government's published aviation policy, including its policy on the gateway status and development of Manchester airport.

NATIONAL FINANCE

BP Shares

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many ordinary shares in BP plc are held by the Bank of England on account of Her Majesty's Government following the recent buy-back offer; what proportion of the total they represent; and what plans he has for their disposal.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to my answers of 14 January at columns 384-5 to the hon. Members for Redcar (Miss Mowlam) and for Easington (Mr. Cummings).

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial consequences there have been for the Exchequer as a result of the rights issue of 459 million BP shares occurring simultaneously with the sale of the Treasury's holding.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Goverment agreed to subscribe for the issue of BP shares on a fully-paid basis and immediately to sell the shares together with the Government's existing shares. The cost of this subscription (£1·5 billion) was more than offset by the proceeds of the first of three instalments from the combined offer (£2·5 billion).

Personal Borrowing

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the source and the breakdown of the figures he gave to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on 9 December 1987, HC 197, Q.152, for the levels of personal sector borrowing other than mortgage borrowing in 1979-80 and 1986-87.

Mr. Lilley: The figures quoted to the Committee were for borrowing by the private, not the personal, sector. The same definition was used for chart 2·4 of the 1987 Financial Statement and Budget Report and the supplementary note by the Treasury published as an appendix in the Select Committee's report on the 1987 Budget, although there have been some subsequent minor revisions to the figures. The latter gives the sources of the figures quoted. The private sector includes both the personal sector and industrial and commercial companies. The most recent figures for consumer credit and other personal sector borrowing are contained in table 9·3 of the December 1987 edition of "Financial Statistics". The figures were correctly ascribed to the private sector in the oral evidence. Unfortunately, the reference to the personal sector arose as the result of a later transcription error, of which the Committee has now been informed.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for 1979 and 1986-87 the number of cases of tax fraud detected for which the amount recovered exceeded (a) £100,000, (b) £500,000 and (c) £1 million.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue do not keep records of the number of investigations opened in any particular year, but the information for the number of investigations settled is as follows:

Year ended 31 March	1979	1987
£100,000 to £499,999	53	229
£500,000 to £999,999	—	13
Over £1,000,000	—	6

The amounts shown are total amounts recovered including, where appropriate, interest and penalties as well as tax.

Unpaid Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax was remitted or written off as irrecoverable in 1979 and 1986 and what was the number of tax payers for whom the ground for non-payment was (a) that they had gone abroad or were untraceable, (b) insolvency and (c) hardship.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax remitted or written off as irrecoverable amounted to £60·3 million in 1979 and £299·8 million in 1986. The number of taxpayers for whom the ground for non-payment was (a) that they had gone abroad or were untraceable, (b) insolvency and (c) hardship is as follows:

	1979	1986
(a)	26,171	51,304
(b)	23,032	56,693
(c)	7,988	5,349

Tax Investigations

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax office and inquiry branch investigations there have been where additional tax has become due in 1987, broken down by those paying tax at a top rate of (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent., (c) 50 per cent., (d) 45 per cent., (e) 40 per cent. and (f) 27 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the year to 31 March 1987, a total of 61,656 tax office and inquiry branch investigations were settled in which additional tax became due. I regret that this total cannot be broken down in the way requested except at disproportionate cost.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wigley To ask the Chancellor of what was the total value of undeclared discovered and recouped by his Departm since 1979.

Mr. Wigley To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the ratio of current employment costs of the value added tax control officers to undeclared value added tax discovered and recouped; and what are the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The ratio of current employment costs of value added tax control officers to underdeclared value added tax discovered is 1:7·5. The figure is for the financial year ending 31 March 1987. The corresponding figures for each financial year ending 31 March since 1979 are as follows:

	Ratio
1979	1:1·4
1980	1:1·7

1985	1:6·0
1986	1:6·9

Information on the amount of underdeclared tax actually recouped is not available. However, approximately 99 per cent. of all declared and assessed tax is collected.

Relocation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list in the Official Report those members of staff or Departments which are currently under consideration for relocation to sites outside London;

(2) whether there are any plans to relocate civil service staff or Departments to Scotland;

(3) whether he will now consider sites in Scotland for dispersal of civil servants or Departments being moved out of London;

(4) if he will list all examples of decentralisation of civil service staff which moved staff or Departments to offices in Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: Since 1979, some 5,560 Civil Service posts have been dispersed from London under the Government's dispersal programme including 1,930 posts to Scotland. The Scottish posts were in the Ministry of Defence, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration. Further moves to Scotland of at least 125 posts are planned under this programme.

For the future, Departments will be encouraged to consider all suitable locations, including those in Scotland, on the basis mentioned in my answer of 18 January to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) at columns 475-6. Any specific plans will be announced as and when they are prepared.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the practice of the Inland Revenue as regards the treatment of regional selective assistance for the purpose of assessment of pre-tax profits.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 19 January 198

EC Budget

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor Exchequer what progress has been made in reso budgetary crisis of the EEC; and what is the polic Majesty's Government towards approving in prin creation of a fourth resource for the EEC b national gross national products.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 January 198
Budget Council has met four times in an effort to a draft budget for 1988, but has failed on each to reach agreement. It will renew its discussions in of the outcome of the European Council o February.

The fourth resource proposed by the Com would link budget contribution shares more cl shares in Community GNP, and hence to prosperity. It is worthy of further consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

Benefits

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of St Employment what was the total value of un benefits claims discovered and recouped Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: My Department's fraud investigatio was reorganised in 1984 and comparable figures fo years are not available.

The estimated value of benefit saved by investigation work in the Department for each ye follows:

	£ million gross
1984-85	19·2
1985-86	33·8
1986-87	54·9

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of Sta Employment what has been the percentage change value of unentitled benefits recouped per Departm Employment investigating officer since (a) 197 (b) since 1984.

Mr. Lee: My Department's fraud investigation was recognised in 1984 and comparable figures for years are not available. There has been a 67·5 pe increase in the estimated value of benefit saved pe investigator between 1984 and 1987.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of Sta Employment what has been the average change value of unentitled benefits recouped per Departm Employment investigating officer in each year since

Mr. Lee: The estimated value of benefit saved pe investigator in each year since 1984-85 is as follow

Year	£
1984-85	49,450
1985-86	73,015
1986-87	82,860

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the ratio of current costs of his Department's investigation into fraud to the benefits recouped; and what are the figures for each year since 1984.

Mr. Lee: The ratios between costs and estimated benefit saved are as follows:

	ratio
1984-85	1:2·4
1985-86	1:2·9
1986-87	1:3·7

Benefits (Fraud Investigating Officers)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many officers are employed in England and Wales by his Department in investigating fraud; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: My Department's fraud investigation work was reorganised in 1984 and comparable figures for earlier years are not available. The number of fraud investigators employed by my Department in each year since 1984 (excluding those employed in Scotland) is as follows:

	Number
1984-85	396
1985-86	590
1986-87	651

In addition a number of other staff are engaged, on either a part or full-time basis, as support staff to these investigators.

Community Programme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the reply of 11 January, what plans he has to change the nature of the community programme so that it qualifies as suitable employment within the meaning of section 20(1)(b) of the Social Security Act 1975.

Mr. Cope: None. The community programme is already covered by section 20(1)(b) of the Social Security Act 1975.

Restart Programme

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each month the spending on advertising for the restart programme since the inception of the scheme; and if he will give the reasons for the trend shown by the figures.

small hill areas were identified where some young lambs not yet ready for market had levels of radioactivity above the United Kingdom trigger level of 1,000 bq/kg. As a precaution the Department introduced controls on the movement and slaughter of sheep from these areas. Continued monitoring of sheepmeat indicates that Northern Ireland lamb products in the shops are safe.

The radioactivity found in livestock is characteristic of the Chernobyl fall out.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what systems of checks for the level of radioactive radiation are presently carried out on (a) sheep, (b) cattle, (c) pigs and (d) poultry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Agriculture monitors (at slaughterhouses) the radioactivity levels in marketable lamb. All sheep leaving three designated areas are subject to movement controls and monitoring of radioactivity levels to ensure that these animals are not slaughtered unless cleared by the Department. Monitoring during 1986 and 1987 has shown other agricultural products to be safe so checks on cattle, pigs and poultry are not currently being carried out.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for checking the level of radioactive radiation in Angora goats; whether their wool presents any risk to human beings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I have no plans to check Angora goats for radioactivity, as there is no evidence of Angora goats being kept in any of three designated areas; nor is there evidence that the wool from Angora goats presents any risk to human beings.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all members of staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Stanley: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the civil service, which was published by the Cabinet Office (MPO) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures.

Action is in hand to issue guidance to all members of staff in the near future.

In the past five years eight complaints have been reported. All have been resolved without recourse to disciplinary action.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Labelling

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Minister of A
Fisheries and Food whether, in the light of t connection between diet and health and its relevance to coronary heart disease, the Gover invoke their right under the relevant prov safeguarding public health, as laid down in artic

Mr. Donald Thompson: The EC food labellin

Rome is not available to member states to act u

We are discussing with the EC Commission a way forward within the framework of the Community rules for the introduction of fat labelling regulations only, which follows the recommendations of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy. Meanwhile, guidelines published in July 1987 by me provide a standard format for nutrition labelling of foods. This format is intended to be the basis for legislation when we have experience of its uptake by industry and EC intentions in the area of nutrition labelling are clearer.

Soil Erosion

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he proposes to continue in the current year the Agricultural Development Advisory Service scheme to monitor water erosion of arable land in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will establish a body to investigate soil erosion; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans his Department has to monitor soil erosion in upland areas of England and Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The results of a five-year collaborative project which studied soil erosion on arable land are now being assessed by a small working group comprising representatives of the main interested organisations. This group will draw up proposals for further work covering soil erosion on lowland arable land and in the uplands.

Free Food

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he is proposing to deal with the distribution of free EEC foods to those in need in the Easington area during 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 12 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) at columns 198-9.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Adoption

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was, for 1984 and each subsequent year (a) the number of children placed for adoption, (b) the number of those children who were placed for adoption while in local authority care, (c) the number of children on whom adoption orders were made, including the number made on children in local authority care, (d) the number of adoption orders made in cases where the court dispensed with parental consent, (e) the number of children freed for adoption and (f) the breakdown of age of children for each of the above categories.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that not all the figures requested are available. The available figures are set out in the tables:

Hospital Beds

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of hospital beds were on average unoccupied in the Mersey regional health authority in (a) 1981 and (b) the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

All National Health Service hospitals in Mersey region

	1981	1986
Average daily number:
Available beds	21,025	17,959
Occupied beds[1]	17,290	14,880
Percentage occupied beds	82·2	82·9
Percentage unoccupied beds	17·8	17·1

[1] Bed occupancy figures are based on a midnight count and do not therefore reflect the use of beds by patients who do not stay overnight.

The health services information steering group (chaired by Mrs. Körner) recommended in its first report that bed use data should include all patients using a ward in a 24-hour period and that aggregated bed occupancy statistics should not be used as an indicator of efficient bed use. A more useful measure of bed utilisation is patient throughput per available bed. For Mersey region this increased from 14·2 to 18·8 between 1981 and 1986.

Heating Additions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of heating additions paid by benefit offices in the Nottingham, North constituency in 1986-87; if he will break down this figure by week of payment; and if he will estimate the total number of claimants involved.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available. Statistics on the number of people who receive heating additions and the costs involved are collected on a national basis and we are unable to supply information for individual areas.

Single Payments (North Tyneside)

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the expenditure on single payments benefits for the months of April to September 1987 from the offices at Saxon house, Newcastle, Unicorn house, North Shields and The Green, Wallsend to claimants residing in North Tyneside; and what is the total sum for this period.

Mr. Portillo: The expenditure on single payments from 8 April 1987 to 22 September 1987 by the local offices in question is given in the table.

	Newcastle East (Saxon House) Amount (£)	North Shields (Unicorn House) Amount (£)	Wallsend (The Green) Amount (£)

Combined Total for 8 April 1987 to 22 September 1987 £578,165

Notes:
1. The figures given are provisional and subject to amendment.
2. The boundaries of Newcastle (East), North Shields and Wallsend local offices are not exactly conterminous with those of North Tyneside local authority.

Heating Bills (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many households within the Seaham and Peterlee area of his Department he estimates will lose help they at present receive for heating bills, with the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986;

(2) how many households in the Seaham and Peterlee area of his Department are in receipt of social security payments to help towards heating bills.

Mr. Scott: I regret that no information is available concerning the number of households in the Seaham and Peterlee area which are in receipt of supplementary benefit heating additions.

The amount of money spent on heating additions has been included in the resources for the new income support scheme. Extra help will be directed more effectively through the premiums at those in greatest need — pensioners, sick and disabled people and families. Under the arrangements we have made for transitional protection, claimants whose benefit entitlement on the introduction of the income support scheme would be less than their existing benefit entitlement will have their benefit level maintained.

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants of income support aged 60 years or over will be entitled to the severe disability premium.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that about 4,400 income support claimants aged 60 or over will be entitled to the severe disability premium.

Widows (Death Benefit)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for weekly industrial death benefit paid to widows for each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Scott: The weekly rates of industrial death benefit since 1948 are shown in table 22.01 in Social Security Statistics 1987, a copy of which is in the Library.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 12 January, what account he proposes to take in deciding the details of new arrangements for severe weather payments of the unusually mild conditions so far in the current winter.

Mr. Portillo: The details of the new arrangements will be considered in the light of the whole of this winter's experience.

Departmental Local Offices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the grants, loans, and combined grants and loans budgets of each local benefit office expressed as a sum per head of the supplementary benefit claimant case load of each office.

Mr. Scott: The information is available in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what has been the percentage rise in the value of unentitled benefits recouped per fraud detection officer of his Department since (a) 1979 and (b) 1984;

(2) what was the total value of unentitled benefits claims discovered and recouped by his Department in each year since 1979;

(3) what has been the average change in the value of unentitled benefits recouped per fraud detection officer of his Department in each year since (a) 1979 and (b) 1984.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fraud

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many officers are employed in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) England and Wales by his Department in investigating fraud; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: I am able to provide information only in respect of Great Britain. The information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Precise figures for staff investigating fraud are not available but it is possible to calculate the amount of staff time expended in the Department on fraud-related work. On that basis the equivalent full-time staff employed on fraud work have been as follows:

	England and Wales	Great Britain
1979-80	2,026	2,311
1980-81	2,092	2,336
1981-82	2,086	2,346
1982-83	1,933	2,185
1983-84	1,975	2,211
1984-85	1,946	2,204
1985-86	2,029	2,285
1986-87	2,152	2,390
1987-88	2,314	2,607

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the ratio of the current cost of his Department's investigation into fraud to the benefits recouped; and what are the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Information on which to base a reliable estimate is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement, in the light of the proposed revised social security system, of the position of 16 to 18-year-olds who (a) are single parents and (b) who are unable to secure work in suitable YTS placements, with regard to their entitlement to benefits.

Mr. Scott: Sixteen and 17-year-olds who are single parents are currently entitled to supplementary benefit if they are not in full-time work and if their income does not meet their requirements. Their position from September, when the Government's proposals for this age group are planned to take effect, will be unchanged, and they will be able to receive income support without time limit.

Under the Government's proposals other 16 and 17-year-olds, with certain exceptions, such as the severely disabled, will normally have no entitlement to benefit. Instead, if they are registering for work or a YTS place their parents will be entitled to claim an extension of child benefit in respect of them. Child benefit will run up to the end of the calendar year for summer school leavers and for up to three months for others. Our intention is that certain young people for whom child benefit is not relevant (eg. orphans and those living away from home because they would be at risk of physical or sexual abuse) will be entitled to income support, but only during the extended child benefit period.

During this period all these young people will have the opportunity of considering the job and YTS opportunities that are available to them. The YTS guarantee applies to all in the age group. After the termination of the extended child benefit period no further child benefit will be paid in respect of them, nor will income support be available.

Pension Age

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive a report on the cost and other implications of either a change in the pension age for men or a more flexible retirement age to apply to men and women.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir David Price) on 24 November 1987 at column 181-82.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's intentions in regard to the resolution on implementation of the world programme of action concerning disabled persons adopted by the United Nations General Assembly at its 1987 session.

Mr. Scott: The Government are considering the recommendations of the 42nd session of the United Nations General Assembly on implementation of the world programme of action concerning disabled persons. We have made it clear that we support the overall objectives of the programme.

Welfare Rights

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet replied to the letter sent to him on 9 November 1987 by the welfare rights team of Newham borough council.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the Department has no trace of the correspondence from the welfare rights team of Newham borough council.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why his Department has stopped sending press releases to welfare rights organisations; on whose authority the decision was taken; and when it was taken.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's press office has not stopped sending press notices to any one group of recipients. It does, however, review its long press lists from time to time. It works on the principle that press notices are designed and intended for the press and this is where they are mainly sent. Organisations, companies and individuals write in from time to time asking for press notices and these requests are considered on their merits.

The headquarters of voluntary and other charitable organisations who receive calls from the press or the public about health or social security are among those added to our press lists on request. If the hon. Member knows of any organisation which has a particular need for the Department's press releases and has recently been unable to get them I would be grateful if he would write to me.

Therapists and Midwives (Training)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of (i) trainee physiotherapists, (ii) trainee speech therapists, (iii) trainee occupational therapists and (iv) trainee midwives (Royal College of Midwives) entering courses in England during each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 15 January 1988]: Information for (i) and (iii) is not available on an England-only basis. However, the number of trainee physiotherapists and occupational therapists entering courses in Great Britain over the past 10 years is as follows:

Trainee physiotherapists and occupational therapists entering courses 1978 to 1987 (Great Britain)

Academic year commencing	Physiotherapy trainees	Occupational therapy trainees

1984	960	747
1985	967	760
1986	962	754
1987	969	814

For (ii) information on the numbers commencing degree courses related to speech therapy is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science since all courses are run by universities and polytechnics.

The information requested for (iv) is as follows:

It is important to note that the numbers of midwives intending to practise on qualifying have increased from 52 per cent. in 1978-79 to over 70 per cent. in 1985-86.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Standing Committee

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Lord President of the Council what information he has as to the number of occasions since 1958 on which right hon. and hon. Members representing constituencies outside Scotland have been nominated to serve on the First or Second Scottish Standing Committee.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 486]: No Members representing constituencies outside Scotland were nominated to the First or Second Scottish Standing Committee in the 1980-81 Session and not one Member, as indicated previously.

ENVIRONMENT

National Rivers Authority

7. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to the consultations on his proposals for a National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Ridley: A memorandum setting out the Government's policy on the National Rivers Authority was placed in the Library on 17 December, in reply to a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry).

46. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairmen of the water authorities to discuss his proposals for a National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's last formal meeting with the water authority chairmen was on 25 June 1987. He proposes to meet them again on 19 January. My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Privy Seal, when Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Water, and I, met them on 16 December.

Schindler Homes

15. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to relieve the hardship suffered by residents who purchased Schindler homes from the former NCB, which were defective under the housing defects legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Owners are entitled to assistance from their local housing authority under the housing defects legislation, provided they meet the conditions for eligibility. Those owners who do not qualify for HDA assistance but consider they face hardship should seek their own provisional advice on the courses open to them. I have recently invited the hon. Member to a meeting about this, together with other interested Members and local authority representatives.

Radioactive Waste

16. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to revise planning procedures to be used in dealing with applications for approval of sites for the disposal of radioactive waste.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Property Services Agency

17. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to increase the commercial efficiency of the Property Services Agency.

21. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what future role he sees for the Property Services Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Deloitte Haskins and Sells have reported to me proposing adoption in PSA of commercial accounts as a prelude to establishing a trading fund. I hope to reach decisions on these proposals before long in the light of consultations with my colleagues.

37. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the level of funding of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: PSA's expenditure on civil accommodation is planned to increase by £60 million in 1988-89 and £74 million in 1989-90 above the levels in last year's public expenditure White Paper.

Local Authority Services

18. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the effects of competitive tendering on local authority services.

Mr. Howard: We have received a large number of representations, the most significant of which make it clear that exposing services to competition brings real and substantial benefits to ratepayers and service customers.

24. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to bring forward proposals to oblige local authorities to charge for the services they provide, such as planning permissions and fines for overdue return of library books on the basis of the income of the user; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No, it is entirely appropriate that local authorities should levy a flat rate charge for services of the kind mentioned by my hon. Friend.

Rating Reform

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has had any representations from Dulwich regarding the proposed poll tax legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Since the publication of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" I have received six such representations, and one from someone with a second home there.

20. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will be taking on the petition against the poll tax from the people of Nottingham presented to the House on 16 December 1987.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend will be making his observations on the petition from residents of Nottingham shortly.

33. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the additional costs to hostels for homeless people resulting from the proposed community charge.

Mr. Howard: There is no need for hostels to incur additional costs under the new system. Hostel residents will pay the community charge either direct, or via their landlord in the form of collective community charge contribution. Landlords of properties designated for the collective community charge will be able to keep five per cent. of the conributions to cover administrative costs.

49. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the population of Lambeth which is likely to be unable to pay the community charge.

Mr. Howard: I hope that Lambeth borough council and ILEA will ensure by their spending behaviour that the community charge in Lambeth will never exceed a modest and affordable level. People on low incomes will, of course, be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. to help them pay the charge.

Water Supplies

22. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many derogations are currently in force to permit water authorities to have public water supplies with nitrate levels in excess of 50mg; and what estimate he has made of the size of the population receiving public water supplies in the areas concerned.

Mr. Moynihan: There are currently 48 supplies with nitrate derogations, serving some 900,000 people. These derogations were granted because the concentrations in the supplies are not a health risk. However, in the light of recent legal advice I have decided that these derogations should be withdrawn. The Government will in due course publish their proposals for limiting nitrate concentrations in water. In the meantime studies are proceeding into solutions to the problem, including water de-nitrification processes and the feasibility of protection zones.

30. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the review of the investment programmes of water authorities to meet the European Economic Community quality of drinking water directive and the discussions being undertaken with them over meeting the standards of the bathing water directive, he will announce a date by which both directives will be fully implemented.

Mr. Moynihan: I have nothing further to add to my answers to the hon. Member's questions of 2 and 15 December about the EC directive on the quality of drinking water.

The bathing water directive is being implemented. We have identified 391 bathing waters which fall within its scope. These waters are kept under surveillance and reports on quality are made annually to the Commission. Some 60 per cent. of waters so far meet the directive's quality standards and some £70 million a year is now being spent on improvement schemes to bring the remainder up to standard.

Rented Housing

23. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will meet the Building Societies Association to discuss the role of building societies in investing in rented housing.

Mrs. Roe: I have already discussed this topic with the Building Societies Association. I am pleased to see that a major building society has announced a significant initiative in rented housing, and I hope that others will also wish to involve themselves in this area.

Leigh Environmentals

25. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on which dates since 1 January 1980 inspectors from his Department have visited the works of Leigh Environmentals and its predecessors at Killarmarsh, Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement based upon his inspectors' reports.

Mr. Moynihan: Since 1981 air pollution control inspectors have made over 100 visits to the site or its immediate vicinity, and hazardous waste inspectors have made nine visits. The purpose of these visits has been to ensure that the operator uses best practicable means to minimise emissions to air from registered processes, and to help the local authority to secure proper control over other processes.

European Year of the Environment

27. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many environmental projects have been undertaken as a result of the European Year of the Environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Our national committee for European Year of the Environment has been notified of more than 3,000 events and projects taking place in the United Kingdom under the EYE banner. I warmly welcome this excellent British contribution to the year and I pay tribute to the committee for its successful campaign to increase public involvement in caring for the environment.

Cricket World Cup Final

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the decision by the Minister with responsibility for sport to attend the cricket world cup final in Calcutta in November 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received one letter from a member of the public asking for information about my attendance at the Cricket world cup final (and a letter of thanks from the chairman of the TCCB). In addition, I have answered written questions from the hon. Members for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) and for West Bromwich, East (Mr Snape).

Teesside

32. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of Teesside urban development corporation to discuss progress in attracting private investment into the area.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the Teesside development corporation on 8 December 1987.

Housing Corporation

34. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the Housing Corporation's funds are earmarked for spending in rural areas in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Information is not readily available on Housing Corporation allocations to rural housing associations other than in the 14 rural stress areas designated by the corporation. For 1987-88 the amount allocated to these associations to cover the cost of new rented and low-cost home ownership schemes approved during the year was some £9 million or 1·5 per cent. of the total for England. Forecast expenditure on these schemes, and other projects approved in the designated rural areas in prior years, is not separately available. The Housing Corporation has been reviewing the definition of, and allocation of funds to, rural areas with a view to implementing new arrangements in time for the allocations to be made within its 1988-89 programme, on which decisions will be made shortly.

Basildon

35. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses and new town commission houses have been sold in Basildon in each of the last four years.

Mrs. Roe: Figures reported by Basildon district council and by the Commission for New Towns are published in "Local Housing Statistics", copies of which are held in the Library. The relevant issues are:

	Number
1983-84	75
1984-85	79
1985-86	83
1986-87	83

Housing Land

36. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for increasing the amount of land available for housing in the south of England; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for the provision of land for housing, in so far as that can be secured through the planning system, rests with county planning authorities in preparing structure plan proposals and with district planning authorities in making local plans and considering planning applications. In approving structure plans and alterations, my right hon. Friend takes into account the likely overall need for housing and the suitability of the proposed ways of meeting those needs.

Tree Planting

38. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his Department's initiatives to encourage tree planting.

Mr. Moynihan: A number of representations have been received about various aspects. My right hon. Friend is considering the arrangements which should apply in 1988-89 and subsequent years.

Lambeth Council (Direct Labour Organisation)

39. Mr. William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his decision to limit work undertaken by Lambeth council's direct labour organisation to contracts worth £50,000 or less; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received one representation from Lambeth council. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of that, together with the Department's response.

Protected Buildings

40. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations from local authorities concerning their existing powers of enforcement against developers who threaten to demolish protected buildings.

Mr. Waldegrave: Not currently. If my hon. Friend is concerned about a particular property I would be happy to investigate the problem if he would send me written details.

Planning Policy

41. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce a new planning circular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be publishing his conclusions on the draft statement of planning policy on large out-of-town shopping centres.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend is publishing today two new series of guidance notes. Planning policy guidance notes (PPG) will provide guidance on general and specific aspects of planning policy, and minerals planning guidance notes (MPG) will give advice on the control of minerals development.

PPGs and MPGs aim to provide concise and practical guidance on planning policies, in a clearer and more accessible form than in departmental circulars, the earlier series of development control policy notes (DCPNs), and other statements. In future, advice on legislation and procedures will be given in departmental circulars, while PPGs and MPGs will be the main source of policy guidance on planning matters.

In most cases the content of the new notes will be based on extant circulars and DCPNs. An index of all the relevant circulars is also being published today — in fulfilment of an undertaking in response to the fifth report, Session 1985-86, of the Environment Committee in the last Parliament. Unless otherwise stated in the PPGs and MPGs, those circulars remain extant for the time being, but the need to retain them will be reviewed in the light of experience with PPGs and MPGs. DCPNs are now being withdrawn to the extent indicated in the relevant PPGs.

The PPG and MPG notes published today are:

PPG1—General policy and principles
PPG2—Green belts
PPG3—Land for housing
PPG4—Industrial and commercial development small firms
PPG5—Simplified planning zones
PPG6—Major retail development
PPG7—Rural enterprise and development
PPG8—Telecommunications
PPG9—Regional guidance for the south east
MPG1—General considerations and the develop plan system
MPG2—Applications, permissions and conditions

Except for PPG2, 3 and 9, these notes are being is jointly by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of Stat the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Secre of State for Wales.

Further titles will be published in due course.

Copies of the PPG, MPG, and the index of ex circulars, are being placed in the Library.

Empty Council Houses

42. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State fo Environment what is the latest available figure fo number of council houses which have been empty for m than six months.

Mr. Waldegrave: English local authorities pro information on the number of their dwellings vacan more than six months, for the first time in their ho investment programme returns for April 1987. estimated that there were then about 44,000 dwellings.

Peak Park Planning Board

44. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of Sta the Environment if he intends to pay a visit to the covered by the Peak Park planning board.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has no pla such a visit at present.

Berkshire Structure Plan

45. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of for the Environment when he now intends to m statement on the Berkshire structure plan.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend expe publish his modifications to Berkshire county co submitted replacement structure plan very soon.

Housing (Rural Areas)

47. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State f Environment what he is doing to encourage the pro of low cost housing to rent and for sale in rural ar

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper publishe September "Housing: The Government's Proposals" 214 set out the Government's proposals for h generally including proposals to expand the h association programme which provides low-cost for rent and other tenures in rural and urban area

I am currently considering whether any measures, designed specifically to help rural are needed.

PRC Houses

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department has spent on assistance under the Housing Defects Act for people living in PRC houses.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under the housing defects legislation central government contributes towards the costs local authorities incur in assisting eligible owners of designated dwellings with reinstatement grants or repurchase. Authorities claim Exchequer contribution a year in arrears, and the payments take the form of annuities, payable over 20 years. The total contribution claimed by authorities for each financial year following the introduction of the HDA scheme, and the Exchequer payments made on those claims, are as follows:—

	Claims made £	Claims paid £
1984-85	21,963	21,963
1985-86	2,250,297	2,200,659
1986-87	4,836,225	[1]2,079,997

[1] Including payments made in January 1988.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the level of prior consultation taking place with landowners, farmers and those with sporting rights before a site of special scientific interest is designated.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes. I am generally content with the present consultation arrangements, but I am reviewing the matter with the chairman of the NCC to see whether improvements can be made.

Pollution (North Sea)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will be taking, following the recent conference on North sea pollution, to monitor the reductions in pollution in the North sea agreed at that conference.

Mr. Ridley: I propose shortly to issue a guidance note concerning the implementation of the agreements to reduce pollution reached at the second international conference on the protection of the North sea.

Homelessness

31. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he proposes to reduce levels of homelessness.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 2 December last, at column 927.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list each scheme selected for an additional allocation of housing investment programme funds, under the homelessness initiative promoted by his Department's Estate Action team (a) during 1986-87 and (b) during 1987-88; how many units of accommodation each scheme will bring into use for homeless households; when these units will be available for letting; and whether they will provide permanent, or temporary accommodation for homeless households;

(2) if he will list each scheme submitted for additional housing investment programme resources, under the homelessness initiative promoted by his Department's Estate Action team (a) during 1986-87 and (b) during 1987-88; and if he will list the criteria used by his Estate Action team in selecting (i) which schemes should receive additional resources, (ii) which authorities should receive additional resources and (iii) what additional resources each authority should receive.

Mrs. Roe: The local authorities which have so far received additional allocations under the Estate Action homelessness initiative, the amount of their allocations and the numbers of dwellings brought into use for the homeless are as follows.

The criteria used in assessing the bids submitted by some 40 local authorities are based on the initiative's stated objective of bringing vacant council dwellings back into use at reasonable cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list each scheme selected for additional housing investment programme resources in 1987-88 under the initiative announced by this Department on 30 November 1987, to enable local authorities to provide additional accommodation to meet the needs of the homeless; how many units of accommodation each scheme will provide; when these units are likely to be available for letting; and whether they will provide temporary or permanent accommodation for the homeless;

(2) if he will list each scheme submitted for additional housing investment programme resources in 1987-88, to enable local authorities to provide additional accommodation to meet the needs of the homeless, under the initiative announced on 30 November 1987; and if he will list the criteria which his Department used in selecting (a) which schemes should receive additional resources, (b) which authorities should receive additional resources and (c) what additional resources each authority should receive.

Mrs. Ree: In making these allocations through the Department's regional offices account was taken of proposals put forward by authorities. The objective was to enable schemes to go ahead this year which would reduce reliance on bed-and-breakfast accommodation or would otherwise benefit the homeless. Preference was given to those authorities with the most serious homelessness problems as indicated by the number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, the number for which authorities had accepted responsibility, and the proportion of council lettings taken up by the homeless.

It is for authorities to decide how to use their allocations. However, the proposals put forward mainly related to bringing empty council dwellings back into use or to the acquisition of properties for use as hostels for the homeless.

Table 1 lists the authorities given allocations and their estimates of the extra dwellings or hostel places that would result. In total these estimates amount to nearly 2,800 extra dwellings/places.

Table 2 lists the authorities which applied but did not receive allocations.

43. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department has taken to assist young homeless people during the United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Mrs. Ree: Young people like others stand to benefit from the proposals in the current Housing Bill for increasing the supply of rented accommodation. Further specific steps taken during 1987 include the funding of the Housing Corporation's investment in hostels and other shared housing; the introduction of a new mixed-funding programme for housing association schemes for young job-movers; leaflets produced to encourage householders to take in lodgers and grants given to CHAR, First Key and other voluntary bodies for advice and assistance to the homeless. Mrs. Roe: The Department has taken up with the council the cases mentioned. The council says that it is now clearing the backlog and that it has issued approximately 1000 section 125 offer notices in recent weeks.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department with its inquiries into the cases of the Southwark council tenants mentioned in his answer to the hon. Member for Dulwich on Tuesday 3 November 1987.

Mrs. Roe: The Department wrote to Southwark about these cases on 3 November 1987 but, despite reminders, the council has so far failed to reply fully. It says that it is giving priority to clearing the backlog of outstanding section 125 offer notices. The Department is continuing to press the council, and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as the information requested is available.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report in rank order, starting with the local authority with the highest proportion of rent arrears, the total arrears of rent outstanding for domestic properties owned by each local authority in the county of Essex for the latest available date and for 1982-83.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cumulative rent arrears owed to each local authority in Essex as at 1 April 1983 and 1 April 1987, together with the percentage those arrears of the rent collectable, are listed as follows. The a are ranked according to the percentage figure.

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of Stat Environment what are the latest available figur arrears of rent outstanding to each local aut England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today arranged information to be placed in the Library. All authorities provided figures on their subsidy clai and figures for the missing 26 were provide Department over the telephone.

The figures show that, at 1 April 1987, ren owing to all English local authorities amounted £196 million, or 5·1 per cent. of the rent collect total is some £15 million less than at 1 April 19 arrears stood at £211 million (5·7 per cent. of r However, we know that, in the past, some au provided figures for all arrears outstanding—re and service charges—while for 1987 some of th made an estimate of rent arrears alone. These changes could account for the whole of the improvement, and we believe that there has b change in the total level of rent arrears between A and April 1987.

Over 150 authorities have reported arrears of 2 per cent., and some of these are below 1 per ce again it is the few poorly-performing authorities w mainly responsible for the enormous sums due. worst authorities—17 of which were on the 19 poor performers — have reported arrears collectable ranging from nearly 8 per cent. to 38 and together were carrying a debt burden of £9 in uncollected rent.

In May 1987, my Department issued a circular to all local authorities, drawing their attention to Ministers' increasing concern about the high level of arrears owed by their tenants. The circular was based on best practice observed in those authorities where rent collection methods had proved effective, and recommended steps which all authorities might take to improve their performance. It is too early to say whether this advice has been heeded: we will be better able to judge when the figures for 1 April 1988 are available.

Postal Services (Stray Dogs)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the London borough of Ealing about the suspension of postal services on the Hanwell estate, Hanwell, as a result of the dangers to postmen caused by the failure of Ealing council to control the incidence of stray dogs in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: None. I understand that the police, who are primarily responsible for the control of stray dogs, have not been informed of any particular problem with stray dogs on the estate and that postal deliveries have now been resumed.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for the reform of the law relating to dog licences of the suspension of postal deliveries to the Hanwell estate, Hanwell, W7, as a result of the danger to postmen of uncontrolled dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The law relating to dog licences is quite distinct from the legislation governing dog control, which will be unaffected by the abolition of licensing.

Floating Jetty, Coulport

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the companies which have been invited by the Property Services Agency to submit tenders for the construction of a floating jetty at Coulport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On commercial grounds it is not the Property Services Agency's policy to publish the names of tenderers until after the award of a contract.

Rate Support Grant (Oxfordshire)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Oxfordshire county council has lost in grant for the next financial year as a consequence of the rate support formula for redistribution from areas of high rateable value to areas of low rateable value.

Mr. Howard: Under the present system the domestic ratepayers of Oxfordshire will pay £9·2 million more in 1988-89 than they would in the absence of resource equalisation.

Carroll Group (Appeal)

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on his Department's public expenditure plans, following publication of the White Paper setting out the Government's expenditure plans for 1988-89 to 1990-91 (Cm. 288).

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has today laid before Parliament "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288).

The White Paper explains in more detail my Department's plans for expenditure for 1988-89 to 1990-91, announced in summary at the time of the Autumn Statement, and gives comprehensive information about what we have achieved through our programmes in past years, and about our targets for the future.

Housing

Substantially higher levels of planned gross expenditure on housing were announced in the Autumn Statement. Gross provision for housing capital expenditure in 1988-89 is now 11 per cent. higher than previous plans and £158 million higher than estimated outturn for 1987-88. In 1989-90 expenditure will be £284 million higher than previous plans. Increases on this scale have been made possible by the continuing success of the right to buy, and by the disposal of new towns land for housing, which is generating higher levels of capital receipts than previously forecast.

This year's White Paper provides more information about the housing programme than has been previously published. There is a more detailed breakdown into components of the programme and, for the first time, this detailed breakdown is extended to future years' plans. Information on the outputs achieved by the expenditure is continued from previous years and developed. The balance of planned spending between components of the programme reflects the policies set out in the White Paper "Housing: the Government's Proposals", published in 1987 (Cm. 214).

Housing Associations

Housing associations are playing an increasing role in the provision of new social housing for rent. This will be further encouraged by the increase of some £50 million in planned gross provision for the Housing Corporation in 1988-89. The Government expect some of this money to be used to attract additional investment from the private sector, thereby increasing the amount of housing which can be built for the available public resources. Details of the corporation's development programme will be announced shortly.

Local Authority Programmes

Planned local authority gross capital expenditure is £313 million higher in 1988-89 than in previous plans. After taking account of the increased spending power available to local authorities from higher levels of receipts, this leaves housing investment programme capital allocations at £1,150 million. Individual loc allocations were announced by my hon. Minister for Housing and Planning on 18 Dec As the figures show, local authorities are growing proportion of their resources on the of the existing housing stock. The plans publ reflect the Government's intention that this t continue and it will be encouraged. There is substantial increase in the size of the e programme, to allow £140 million of targeted This should permit work to begin on a furth so rundown local authority dwellings, to add t 100,000 included in schemes so far. Disposal sector owners and managers are running at about 8,000 units a year, the target for 1988- set at 15,000 disposals.

Housing Action Trusts

A new component of the housing pro expenditure on housing action trusts (HATs) for the establishment of these trusts are curr the House. The Government intend to lau programme of HATs in the first instance t problems of some of the worst areas of public designated areas they will take over the ow management of local authority housing, i programme of renovation and repair an property on to different forms of own management. HATs will also have a role in local enterprise and employment in their million has been earmarked for HATs in the years of operation.

Other Environmental Services

Urban Development Corporations

Urban development corporations (UDCs) to spend over £200 million in each of the next There are now six UDCs in England. I inter three more during 1988, in Bristol, Leeds and This reflects the high priority I give to rege inner cities, and the effectiveness of the UDC Docklands and Merseyside in regenerating the example, three quarters of Merseyside corporation's area was derelict initially—m per cent. of that derelict land has already bee In London Docklands, 1987 saw the ope Stolport and Docklands light railway, and th an agreement to develop Canary wharf.

Urban Programme and Derelict Land Grant

Despite the increased emphasis on UDC expenditure by DOE on the urban program urban development grant and urban regener and derelict land grant amounts to nearly £3 year. In 1987-88 local authorities' inner area p supported by Government grant, are forcast preserve about 31,000 jobs and support ab training places. Urban development gra approved since 1982 will generate over £50 private sector investment a gearing ratio of 4:1 same period over 6,000 hectares of derelict lan reclaimed with the aid of derelict land grant.

New Towns

The new towns programme of disposals of and industrial property continues successf private sector takes an increasingly prominent role in the future of the towns. This is reflected in the high level of forecast receipts — £311 million in 1988-89. Capital expenditure—planned at £81 million in 1988-89—is now aimed at rounding off development in the remaining new towns and bringing forward assests for disposal. Throughout the plan period capital receipts continue significantly to exceed gross capital expenditure.

Countryside

I have increased resources for the countryside agencies and the Sports Council. Next year's increase for the Nature Conservancy Council will finance the designation of 500 sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) and several new nature reserves. It will also cover the cost of 500 new management agreements with farmers and landowners to protect SSSIs, and 600 grants for voluntary conservation work. The Countryside Commission, is aiming to plant 2·25 million trees in 1988-89, in addition to those planted in the aftermath of the 15-16 October storm. Their increase in funding will allow the commission to make a start on a major programme to upgrade the nation's footpaths by the end of the century. Next year's increase for the Development Commission will enable it to continue to develop its successful job creation programmes in support of the rural economy. The increases for the Sports Council will enable it to undertake more work in areas of high priority need in the inner cities, and in particular to increase participation among young people. The council's expenditure is "pump priming" and so will help to stimulate additional private sector involvement.

Local Environmental Services Capital

Gross provision is £627 million per annum for 1988-89 to 1990-91. Capital receipts generated by local authorities on LES have risen sharply in recent years and forecast receipts have accordingly been revised upwards to £542 million per annum.

British Waterways Board

The British Waterways Board external financing limit (EFL) is increased by £1·6 million. This is intended to preserve the real value of the grant for 1988-89. Efficiency savings are expected to flow from the preparation of the waterway plans for the board's network, and the implementation of the MMC report.

Water Authorities

Water authorities continue to reduce real operating costs and this, taken with increased profitability, will enable them to finance large increases in investment proposed in their 1987 corporate plans, with a slight reduction in borrowing. Capital expenditure has already grown in real terms by 40 per cent. since 1980-81 and is currently running at about £1 billion. Further major growth is now assured in programmes to improve water and sewage treatment and to renew underground assets.

Property Services Agency

On PSA's civil accommodation programme, disposal and property repayment services (PRS) receipts are planned to increase by £86 million in 1988-89 and £136 million in 1989-90, enough to allow expenditure increase of £60 million and £74 million and net reductions of £26 million and £62 million in these years. Some of the increase in expenditure is needed to meet unavoidable demands, such as higher rents to be paid to landlords. But enoug will remain to carry out priority major new works and halt the deterioration in the condition of the civil estate 1988-89 and start making inroads on the backlog maintenance work in 1989-90.

Local Authority Capital Expenditure, England

Gross provision for capital expenditure by loc authorities under the main local authority capital ca limit, DOE/LA1, is £5,173 million, £246 million high than the equivalent provision for 1987-88. Under t Local Government, Planning and Land Act loc authorities have two main sources of capital spendi power: capital allocations issued by the Government a a prescribed proportion of their capital receipts. Capit allocations on DOE/LA1 in 1988-89 will total £2,6 million, broadly similar to this year. Because loc authorities are continuing to generate more capit receipts, particularly under right to buy, their potenti spending power from capital receipts will be £300 milli higher than in 1987-88, at about £3·6 billion. T Government's plans take account of the fact that aggregate local authorities do not make full use of th potential spending power.

DEFENCE

Irish Sea (Incidents)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State f Defence how many incidents involving fishing boats a submarines were reported in the Irish sea in 1987.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The only incident involving a Roy Navy submarine and a fishing vessel occurred in the Iri sea on 6 December 1987.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State f Defence what is his Department's policy on sexu harassment at work; whether guidance on reporti complaints has been issued to all staff; how ma complaints have been reported in the past five years; a what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Civil Service policy on sexu harassment is set out in the programme of action achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Serv which was published by the Cabinet Office (Manageme and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at wo is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary mat through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures.

The MOD is in the process of discussing and agreei departmental guidelines, on policy and procedures to followed in cases of sexual harassment, with the MO trades unions.

Cases of sexual harassment are recorded centrally MOD only if they result in a disciplinary penalty. Statist are available for the past four years; there have been fo such cases and the penalties ranged from dismissal suspension from duty without pay.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defe whether any agreements exist for military nuclear waste be (a) taken into the United Kingdom from ot countries and (b) taken to other countries from the United Kingdom; and whether any such waste has been moved under either of these two categories.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no formal agreements involving acceptance overseas of nuclear wastes from British defence operations in the United Kingdom, and none has been sent.

Nor are there formal agreements for acceptance into the United Kingdom of nuclear wastes from British defence operations overseas, but small quantities have been returned to the United Kingdom on an ad hoc basis.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many plutonium and radioactive waste related projects at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston, have been agreed by Ministers in each year since 1979; what have been the costs of each project (a) at the time agreed and (b) currently; and if he will make a statement about the reasons for changes.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on past and current estimates of the capital works programme at AWE Aldermaston, together with the progression of costs were contained in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the "Control and Management of the Trident Programme" (HC 27). I have nothing to add to this information.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which private contractor has been chosen to oversee and complete nuclear work for the Trident missile programme at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston; and what is the exact nature of the contractor's responsibilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: Tenders for the role of facilities project management contractor for the capital programme at AWE Aldermaston were received from five firms on 18 December 1987. The proposals are still under consideration. Tenderers will be advised of their success or otherwise in accordance with normal MOD practice.

Harrier GR5

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is proposed that the Harrier GR5 will replace Jaguars in the ground attack role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) on 11 December at column 307.

Military Bases and Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of (a) United States and (b) United Kingdom military bases and facilities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are approximately 700 principal military bases and facilities in the United Kingdom wholly under United Kingdom command. There are a further 66 military bases and facilities in the United Kingdom made available for use by United States forces under United States national command. In addition, there are two armament depots run by United Kingdom civilians on behalf of NATO which provide a service for United States forces.

Service Establishments, Nottinghamshire

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the medical facilities at all service establishments in Nottinghamshire, along with the number of beds available and average number occupied for which suitable figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: There is no military hospital facility in Nottinghamshire. The only service medical bed facility is eight beds at the station medical centre RAF Newton. Bed occupancy statistics are not kept for this unit which is provided only as a recovery facility for sick single personnel.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what time he expects to make a decision about the future use of RAF Molesworth after the implementation of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No decision on this is expected for some time.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect on the efficiency and effectiveness of his Department of the proposal to centralise parts of his Department at Thames house, Millbank.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans to centralise parts of the Ministry of Defence in Thames house, Millbank.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were received about low-flying aircraft in 1987 from England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Freeman: During 1987 the Ministry of Defence received 4,053 inquiries and complaints about military low flying in relation to England, 729 in relation to Scotland and 913 in relation to Wales.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of aircraft movements authorised for flying below 250 ft over the United Kingdom in 1987; on how many days such low flying took place; and if he will provide a breakdown of these figures for (a) the northern Scotland tactical training area, (b) the central Wales tactical training area, (c) the Borders tactical training area and (d) other areas.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested regarding aircraft movements authorised for flying below 250 ft within the tactical training area is given in the table. The number of days on which such flying actually took place is not however available, and could not be provided without disproportionate effort. Figures in the table relate to the number of days on which flying was authorised to take place. We would expect actual figures to be significantly lower because alternative dates are often prebooked for use in case of bad weather. Operational low flying only takes place in the United Kingdom in the three tactical training areas.

Tactical training area

	Northern Scotland	Central Wales	Borders	Total
Operational low flying movements	518	242	626	1,386
Number of days on which operational low-flying was authorised	133	101	110	145

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of low-flying sorties carried out over the United Kingdom in 1987, calculated by (a) counting the number of sorties directly and (b) the pre-1985 method of logging movements between low-flying areas.

Mr. Freeman: The total number of sorties flown during 1987 was 147,661. The approximate total number of sorties flown, as recalculated from movements by the pre-1985 method, was 133,213.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total number of low-flying sorties flown over the United Kingdom in 1987 was accounted for by (a) fast jets, (b) light jet trainers, (c) heavy propeller-driven aircraft, (d) light propeller-driven aircraft and (e) helicopters.

Mr. Freeman: The proportion of military low-level training sorties flown over the United Kingdom during 1987 for each of the categories stated is as follows:

	per cent.
Fast Jets	60
Light Jet Trainers	10
Heavy propeller-driven aircraft	2
Light propeller-driven aircraft	1
Helicopters	27

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the total number of low-flying sorties flown over the United Kingdom in 1987 was represented by (a) British military aircraft, (b) United States air force aircraft, (c) other NATO air forces aircraft and (d) aircraft from non-NATO countries.

Mr. Freeman: Central statistics do not distinguish between categories (c) and (d) in the question. Otherwise available information for 1987 is as follows:

Operating authority	Proportion of sorties flown per cent.
British Military	84
USAF	15
Others	1

The RDG I figures relate to published information on individual payments of over £25,000 in the Consett and Stanley employment office areas which together almost exactly approximate to the Derwentside district. The number of RDG I payments made is not available. The Department does not maintain more detailed statistics.
The RDG II scheme was introduced in November 1984.

Business improvement service grant records are not maintained on a district basis.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many grants were made and what was the total annual amount of regional development grants, for each year since their inception, for the district of Derwentside.

Mr. Atkins: Information on regional development grants cannot be provided since the inception of the scheme in 1972. Sufficiently detailed records are available only from 1977 and these do not record the number of payments made. The amount of grant awarded in each year since 1977 and the number and value of grants approved under the revised scheme introduced in November 1984 are as follows:

	Original regional development grant (RDG I) Value (£ million)	Revised regional development grant (RDG II)

Advertising Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost of the current advertising campaigns for his Department.

Mr. Butcher: Planned expenditure on advertising for the enterprise initiative campaign in the current financial year is £6·3 million.

South Africa

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 21 October 1987, Official Report, column 814, what was the basis for Her Majesty's Government's estimate, that about 90,000 full-time job equivalents may be involved in the export of goods and services to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figure of about 90,000 job equivalents involved in exports of goods and services to South Africa was a broad estimate based on the aggregate level of trade with that country, together with an assumption about the relationship between output and employment.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the figures for exports from Scotland to the Republic of South Africa and for imports to Scotland from the Republic of South Africa, expressed as a percentage of total Scottish exports and imports in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available.

Space Research

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a regional breakdown of the expenditure on United Kingdom space research during the last year for which full figures are available.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 20 January 1988]: These figures are not held centrally and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on United Kingdom participation in the ERS-2 satellite and Columbus programmes.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 20 January 1988]: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently discussing with industry the scope for greater private sector involvement in the planning and financing of future space activities. We will take account of these discussions in assessing proposals for United Kingdom participation in the ERS2 and Columbus programmes alongside other priorities.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total value to the United Kingdom of exports of space technology and engineering in 1986-87.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 20 January 1988]: The information is not available.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what funds will be made available to the British National Space Centre for 1988-89 by his Department; what funds were made available for 1987-88; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979-80 both outturn and 1987 prices.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 20 January 1988]: The following table shows DTI expenditure on space, which since October 1985 has been administered by the British National Space Centre, from 1979-80 to 1986-87, and the provisions for 1987-88 and 1988-89. The amounts are shown in cash and in 1986-87 prices using the general gdp deflator.

Inner-city Development Grant

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Lancaster what definition of deprivation his D uses in relation to the granting of inner-city de grants.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

In England, priority for urban development urban regeneration grant is given to the programme areas. The selection of these areas, w authorities have been invited to submit programmes for support under the urban prog not based on any single measure of deprivatio following factors were taken into account:

Unemployment:
the scale, rate and concentration of residential ment, including information on long term unemployment, and unemployment at ward level.

Census information:
selected census indicators of economic, social an stress, showing the scale, intensity and concen deprivation.

Dereliction:
information from the 1982 derelict land survey.

Population:
towns over 30,000.

In addition to these specific factors, account of the local and regional economic context.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Records

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General wh the Lord Chancellor uses in determining the period for which papers withheld from the Pub Office after 30 years should remain closed; and make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Records may be periods longer than 30 years under section 5 Public Records Act 1958 and in accordance criteria set out in paragraphs 26 and 27 of the W "Modern Public Records", Cmnd. 8531, March period of closure is determined by referen particular nature of the record in question.

Judicial Review Pamphlet

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General place in the Library a copy of the training pam Judge over your Shoulder — Judicial R Administrative Decisions", prepared by the Solicitors Department.

The Attorney-General: Yes. I have today placed a copy of "The Judge over your Shoulder" in the Libraries of the Houses of Parliament.

DEFENCE

Home Defence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of his Department's current budget is devoted to providing home defence, defined as the approximate military equivalent of civil defence, for the protection of the United Kingdom in the event of hostilities in Europe.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is no clear military equivalent to civil defence. I therefore refer the hon. Member to figure 10 of the 1987 "Statement on the Defence Estimates", which attributes £2,219 million to defence of the home base.

Challenger Tank

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in encouraging the United Kingdom's North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies to purchase the new generation Challenger battle tank.

Mr. Sainsbury: We will continue to encourage NATO allies, whenever it is appropriate and realistic to do so, to consider Challenger as a means of fulfilling their medium-term requirements for main battle tanks, in the context of the general approach described in my reply to the hon. Member on 2 November 1987, at column 602.

Alvey Project

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will explain the purpose of the Alvey advanced information technology project.

Mr. Sainsbury: This is primarily a matter for my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

However, the Alvey advanced information technology project is a five-year programme of pre-competitive collaborative research in the technologies of IT between Government, industry and academic institutions. It is funded and managed through the co-operation of the Department of Trade and Industry, the Ministry of Defence and the Science and Engineering Research Council. The four major thrusts of the programme are intelligent knowledge-based systems, software engineering, VLSI (very large-scale integration) and man-machine interface. As these clearly have a relevance to defence systems, MOD has contributed financially and seconded manpower to the programme.

Simulators

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in introducing low flight and air combat simulators into the Royal Air Force and in improving their realism; and what is the cost programme for these simulators.

Mr. Freeman: Simulators of increasing sophistication and realism are currently being introduced into service. RAF air crew have been training for several years in a prototype air combat simulator, and a production system was delivered to RAF Coningsby in November. Orders have recently been placed for Harrier GR5 n simulators which will include digitally generated systems to provide a low-level flying training capa

The training value of simulators remains limit their inability to simulate all aspects of flying an must, therefore, be seen as a supplement to low-level training and air combat exercises in aircraft. The procurement cost of all RAF simulator program 1986-87 was £22·4 million.

Costs (Statistics)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for D if he will express total United Kingdom defence co an amount (i) per household, (ii) per taxpayer and (i person in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested, o basis of the latest estimate of defence expenditu 1987-88, is as follows:

Defence expenditure

Per household	877
Per income tax payer	763
Per person	331

Vanguard Class Submarine

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for D whether it is proposed that the Vanguard class subm currently being built will be capable of carrying missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Vanguard class subm currently under construction are not designed to ha capability of carrying cruise missiles and there are no to modify them to provide this capability.

Rolls-Royce plc (Winter Seminar)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for D if he will provide a complete list of personnel fro Department and the armed forces attending the lunc cocktail party and winter seminar organised by Royce plc on 13 January; and what was the purp their attendance.

Mr. Sainsbury: Ninety-four officers and ci personnel from the Ministry of Defence and the a forces attended the winter seminar organised by Royce plc on 13 January. This reflected their responsi to maintain close contact with major companies i aerospace sector.

Overspending

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for D if he will place in the Library a complete list of all and projects for which he is responsible, estimated million or over likely overspent from the last D Estimates, together with the amount overspent or overspent for items and projects from when first plac the Defence Estimates.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. While the terms of the questio not entirely clear, it would appear to cover a lot of gr and a great deal of effort would be required to answer it. I am satisfied that the scale of effort would be disproportionate, particularly since the annual major project statement for defence equipment which my Department supplies to the appropriate Committees of the House shows a comparison, for projects for which approved expenditure on development and production combined exceeds £250 million, between the estimated cost at the time of approval and the currently estimated cost.

NFR 90 Frigate

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when a decision is to be made about whether the United Kingdom will enter the next phase of the NFR 90 collaborative frigate project;

(2) further to his answer of 12 November 1987, Official Report, column 298, if he will make a statement about the outcome of project definition and subsequent decisions in respect of the NFR 90 collaborative frigate project.

Mr. Younger: Following completion of international feasibility studies, we have been considering whether to participate in the next stage, project definition, of the collaborative project NFR 90 (a NATO frigate replacement for the nineties). NFR 90 could potentially meet the Royal Navy's requirement for an anti-air warfare escort coming into service at the turn of the century to replace the type 42 destroyers. Adoption of a standard frigate by NATO navies would yield valuable operational advantages in terms of interoperability.

In the interests of sound and efficient procurement practice, we have been concerned to ensure proper co-ordination between work on the frigate and work on the principal armament it would require for Royal Navy service, namely a support defence missile system, which we hope to procure through a separate collaborative programme. Although our concerns on this score are not yet entirely allayed, I am pleased to say that, following discussion with our allies, we have now decided to join the project definition stage of NFR 90 and to sign the implementing memorandum of understanding. We are, however, making clear to our partners that our continued participation is conditional upon the agreement of a timetable which is both realistic in technical terms and properly matched to the timetables for the ship's major weapon systems.

The arrangements for project definition include provision for reviews at various points by the participating nations to take stock of progress. In the light of the first such review, we shall consider whether the timetable proposed for the remainder of the project has the characteristics we are seeking, and we shall decide accordingly whether or not to continue our participation.

Early Warning Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there is a ballistic missile early warning system in the United Kingdom purely for United Kingdom use;

(2) whether (a) United Kingdom or (b) United States officials have initial access to information from the early warning system at RAF Fylingdales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales was constructed as a joint venture by the United Kingdom and United States Governments. The system is under RAF co control and the early warning information is d in parallel to both the United Kingdom and U authorities.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State on how many occasions cruise missiles have outside the perimeters of their United Kingd

Mr. Ian Stewart: Cruise missiles have deployed during off-base training exercises.

National Joint Ocean Surveillance Informa

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State further to his answer of 14 December 1987 co United Kingdom national joint ocean information centre, what is its current cost to budget; and where it appears in the Defence

Mr. Sainsbury: Provision for the j surveillance information centre will be conta defence Votes 2 and 4, with a very small a attributable to Vote 1. The estimated costs are confidential.

States of Alert

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State if he will list the different states of alert, and significance.

Mr. Ian Stewart: For security reasons, i normal practice to give details of alert states.

Mould Radio System

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State whether the installation of the Mould radio been completed; if it has complied with budg requirements for its installation; and if he wi purpose.

Mr. Sainsbury: The installation progra Mould home defence radio system is ahead and within cost. Details of the project are cl

New Tactical Warhead

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State whether work has started at the Atomi Establishment at Aldermaston on the desig tactical warhead; and if he will make a state

Mr. Sainsbury: Work continues at the ato establishment at Aldermaston to keep ab relevant nuclear technologies, but no decisi taken to start the design of a new tactical w

Maritime Operations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State when the updating of NATO's concept operations is likely to be completed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I understand that n currently been set.

Military Bases and Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a list in the Library of those United Kingdom military bases and facilities with more than 500 personnel and the estimated number of personnel in each.

Mr. Freeman: It would not be in the public interest to make available information on the numbers of personnel in United Kingdom military bases and facilities at the level of detail requested.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence upon what satellite guidance system it is currently anticipated Trident will be dependent.

Mr. Sainsbury: Trident will not be dependent on any satellite guidance system.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of the Trident system.

Mr. Younger: I am pleased to announce that for the second year running there has been a reduction in the estimated cost of the Trident programme, which now stands at £9,043 million.

After allowing for the effects of inflation and exchange rate variations, there is a real reduction in the estimate over the one announced previously of some £376 million and a real reduction of £1,038 million over the original 1982 estimate, over and above the savings resulting from the decision to have United Kingdom missiles processed in the United States facility at King's bay, Georgia. The total will be spent over a period of 20 years.

In line with established conventions adopted for the recosting of the defence programme, the estimate is based on the exchange rate used for the long term costing of the defence programme, namely £1-$1·62.

The proportion of the programme to be undertaken in the United Kingdom has also reached its highest recorded level—64 per cent.

The Select Committee on Defence previously asked that when announcing the annual revised estimate, I should report on the state of the project as a whole. I am pleased to say that the project remains on programme to enter service as planned in the mid-1990s. There has been no slippage in the in-service date since the decision to proceed with Trident II was announced in March 1982. I am, as last year, sending to the Chairmen of the Select Committee on Defence and the Public Accounts Committee a more detailed report covering the points on which the Select Committee on Defence sought advice. I am also placing a copy of the report in the Library of the House.

Research and Development

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many research contracts or agreements for research and development his Department has with Southampton university; and into which subjects;

(2) how many contracts or agreements for research and development his Department has with the university of Aston in Birmingham; and into which subjects;

(3) how many contracts or agreements for research and development his Department is currently placing in United Kingdom universities or other such educational est ments; and at what cost for the financial years 1986 1987-88;

(4) if he will list the universities, polytechnics, schools or other such educational establishments United Kingdom at which research directly or in sponsored by his Department is taking place or ha place over the last two years;

(5) how many contracts or agreements for resea development his Department has with the unive Birmingham; and into which subjects.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence curre 753 research agreements and 76 contracts with range of United Kingdom universities, polytechn other institutions of education. In addition, the M participating with the research councils in makin funded grants for university research of releva defence.

The cost of research and development in the ac sector during the financial years 1986-87 was £14 and is forecast to be some £18 million in 1987-88. I our policy to give details of these arrangements. I the universities themselves to confirm their involv

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for D whether his Department has awarded any cl research contracts or agreements to United Ki universities or other such educational institutions.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are currently no cl research contracts with universities or other educ establishments. It is however MOD's practice t work at universities and other establishments of education by agreements rather than by formal co and at present there are three classified agreement

Bruslee Shooting Range, Newtownabbey

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for D what consultation took place with adjoining f whose livelihood was likely to be affected prior establishment of Bruslee shooting range, Newtown Co. Antrim.

Mr. Freeman: The MOD consulted Newtow urban district council in January 1973 about the pr to lease the Bruslee quarry site for a firing rang council agreed to this in March 1973 and the ran opened in November 1976. Although not obliged to do so, it would have been for the council to canva opinion on the project. The range has been closed a site was returned to the Newtownabbey district cou 31 December 1986.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for D what arrangements have been made for the holdi British Army equipment exhibition in 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my r 13 November 1987 at column 333.

RAF Training

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for D (1) what reductions in flying hours in the Royal Air fast jet operational training programme are planne the next three years;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Eustace report on Royal Air Force navigator training;

(3) if he will make a statement on action taken to implement the recommendations of the Eustace report on Royal Air Force navigator training;

(4) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Gibson report on Royal Air Force fast jet operational training, completed in August 1985;

(5) if he will make a statement on action taken to implement the recommendations of the Gibson report on Royal Air Force fast jet operational training, which reported in August 1985.

Mr. Freeman: The recommendations of the Gibson report on Royal Air Force fast jet operational training which were made in August 1985 have subsequently been examined and work has started on implementation as appropriate. If all goes to plan, some useful reductions in flying hours should be seen over the next three years. The recommendations of the recent Eustace report on Royal Air Force long-term navigator training are still being considered and no decisions have been taken yet on implementation. Both reports are internal working papers and it would be inappropriate to place copies in the Library.

Tornado Aircraft (Employment Implications)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has made of the employment implications for skilled and design staff of the Tornado mid-life update.

Mr. Sainsbury: No final decision has yet been taken on the content of the proposed mid-life update programme for the Tornado GR1 aircraft. It is not possible to assess the employment implications for skilled and design staff, but, if approved, a mid-life update programme would help to sustain job opportunities over a range of disciplines.

Eurofighter

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make representations to the other partners in the Eurofighter consortium to proceed with the Eurofighter in the light of the policy committee decision.

Mr. Sainsbury: As would be expected, my right hon. Friend frequently exchanges views with his colleagues in the other EFA partner countries and this dialogue is continuing as each of the partners proceeds with its national consideration of the launch of full development of the project.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the Eurofighter will be entirely European in design and content;

(2) whether there are any provisions to prevent American companies competing for Eurofighter contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: The involvement of companies from nations not participating in the European fighter aircraft is, in principle, permissible. In order to maximise the involvement of the participating nations, such companies would be encouraged to acquire a partner—or partners—from within these nations. As the equipments for the European fighter aircraft are to be selected as a result of competition, it is not possible to forecast what if any involvement of industries from non-participating nations there might eventually be.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of S how many jobs he estimates would be cr Aerospace by the purchase of 250 Eurofi

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not possible at specific about the number of long-term jo be sustained at British Aerospace as a r Kingdom participation in the European programme. However, it is clear that de subsequent production of the aircraft w significant programme of work well into not only for British Aerospace but Kingdom aerospace industry as a whole.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of S what estimate he has of the potential fo Eurofighter.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is too early at this sta forecasts of the sales of the European However, there is likely to be a big dema combat aircraft during the lifetime of the aircraft.

Radar Systems

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of S if he will make it his policy to give full Ferranti/Fiat/Inisel ECR90 radar syste American-developed APG 65.

Mr. Sainsbury: The radar for the E aircraft will be selected as a result of co that competition is currently under wa inappropriate for me to comment further for the Home Department what is the annual co funds of all the prisoners convicted of murder held in Her Majesty's prisons, using as the basis of the calculation the average cost of keeping all prisoners in custody.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average annual cost of keeping a person in custody in 1986-87 was £13,104. On 30 September 1987 an estimated 1,850 prisoners were serving life sentences for murder in penal establishments in England and Wales, but the uneven distribution of convicted murderers throughout the prison system makes it impossible to calculate the cost of keeping them in custody.

BBC and IBA

22. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the chairmen of the British Broadcasting Corporation and Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet the chairman of the BBC or IBA, but we expect to keep in close touch with them over the next few months as our policy on broadcasting develops.

Miss Salema Begum

23. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet arrived at a decision on the application by Miss Salema Begum at present on temporary admission in Oldham, to join her parents in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: I advised the hon. Member on 22 December that the outstanding inquiries — here and abroad—would take some time. I undertook to let him know the outcome in due course, and I hope to be able to do so shortly.

Immigration

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 17 December 1987, at column 628.

43. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many male immigrants from North Yemen have been allowed to settle in Britain annually since 1983.

Mr. Renton: Information is readily available only on the numbers granted settlement in the United Kingdom on the removal of time limit and these are shown in the following table for the years 1983 to 1986. In addition, there may have been a small number accepted for settlement on arrival in the United Kingdom.

In premises which do not require a fire certificate the occupier must provide such means of escape in case of fire for the persons employed to work there as may reasonably be required and appropriate means for fighting fire.

Parking (London)

28. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make more resources available to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to enable him vigorously to enforce parking regulations in London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The strength of the Metropolitan police has risen by some 5,000 police officers since this Government took office in May 1979. The strength of the civil staff has also risen—by some 1,400—releasing a large number of officers from administrative posts for redeployment on operational duties. It is a matter for the Commissioner to determine how best to deploy his resources to meet the many demands on the Metropolitan police, but I know that he recognises the importance of the enforcement of parking and other traffic law. Proposals for improving the effectiveness of parking enforcement (including those arising from a recent scrutiny of the Metropolitan police traffic warden service) are currently being considered by a working party, in which the Home Office, the Department of Transport, the police and the local authority associations are all represented.

Police Manpower

29. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on police manpower; and what recent discussions he has had with chief constables on this matter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Total police strength at the end of October 1987 was 123,870, the highest ever recorded. Since then my right hon. Friend has approved further increases in police force establishments as part of the phased programme which he announced to Parliament on 20 May 1986, at column 124.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the current level of recruitment of police officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 6,871 police officers were recruited in England and Wales including the Metropolitan police in the 10 months up until 31 October 1987, either to replace officers who retired or resigned or to enable forces to implement increases in establishment. Between May 1979 and October 1987, the strength of the police service, excluding those who are on secondment, increased by 12,019 police officers, from 109,998 to 122,017.

Alcohol Sales (Minors)

30. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to deter the sale of alcohol to minors from public houses and off-licences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my hon. Friend the Minister of State said in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 19 January, at columns 646-7, in the light of discussion within the ministerial group on alcohol misuse the Government intend to amend the Licensing Act 1964 to strengthen the of alcohol to young people under 18 and penalties for the offence. Appropriate amer tabled to the Licensing Bill.

AIDS

31. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary o Home Department what is the latest figure of prisoners infected with the HIV virus; make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 12 January 1 population of England and Wales includ reported as having been identified as positive. One hundred and fifty four such reported since central monitoring began in

Mr. John Patten: We remain committe just society in which all individuals, whatev colour, have equal rights, responsibilitie tunities. We shall continue to support th Commission for Racial Equality under its

Thamesmead (Prison)

35. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary Home Department when he expects const new prison at Thamesmead to be complete

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The new urban p being constructed at Woolwich is curr completion in December 1990.

Fresh Start Programme

36. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress being made to implement the fresh start prison programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Fresh start has been implemented at 105 establishments in England and Wales, including all those in the south-west and midland regions. Work is continuing to complete the process at the remaining 16 establishments by the end of February.

DNA Testing

37. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress with DNA testing.

Mr. Renton: DNA profiling has been used in the analysis of evidential material in about 150 forensic science cases so far, and in analysing samples from mass screenings. The technique is to be used in analysing samples from a mass screening which is to be undertaken in Thames Valley in connection with investigations into an unsolved murder.

Due weight is already given to the results of DNA tests submitted by applicants in support of entry clearance applications. The results of the pilot trial to evaluate the role of DNA testing in immigration procedures should be available shortly.

Television Licences

38. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from pensioners' associations seeking the abolition of television licences for pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: During 1987, six written representations, including one petition, seeking free television licences for pensioners were received from pensioners' organisations.

Rural Areas (Policing)

39. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's policy regarding the policing of rural areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for chief officers of police to determine the most suitable methods of policing rural areas.

Gartree Prison (Escape)

40. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome to date of the inquiry into the helicopter escape from Gartree prison.

Mr. Hurd: Two highly dangerous category A prisoners, Kendall and Draper, escaped by air from Gartree prison at about 3.15 pm on 10 December 1987. They were taken out in a helicopter whose pilot had been hijacked by an armed passenger. They disembarked a short distance from the prison and made good their escape by road. Police inquiries into the escape are continuing, but both men are still at large. Mr. G. H. Lakes CB, MC, deputy director general of the prison service, has completed his inquiry into the escape and has reported the results to me.

The escape was able to succeed mainly because, while Kendall and Draper were taking their normal exercise in a large open space under the supervision of prison staff, there was no physical barrier to stop the helicopter from landing in that part of the prison and no practical means of preventing it from leaving. The attempt was made easier because it came as a complete surprise to the staff and because those planning it had been able confidently to predict the time and place at which the escapers would be taking their outdoor exercise that day. The helicopter was on the ground for only 23 seconds and then in the air for less than five minutes before it landed again outside the prison. That was too short a period in which successfully to track it by radar in accordance with existing contingency plans, which have been further refined in the light of this incident.

It has been suggested that reduced manning levels resulting from fresh start transitional arrangements may have contributed to the success of the escape. A comparison of staff deployment both before and after 1 November clearly indicates that manning arrangements were unchanged.

Immediately after the escape an immediate and vigorous review of security measures was ordered and all establishments holding category A prisoners were put in a heightened state of alert. A number of practical steps were taken at once within dispersal prisons to frustrate any similar or other possible method of escape. Regime activities and arrangements for outdoor exercise have been changed and now make it significantly more difficult for individual category A prisoners to predict where they will be from day to day. Physical obstacles, for example wires strong enough to foul helicopter rotor blades, have been erected above exercise areas at a number of prisons, and will be installed at others very shortly, in order to impede a helicopter attempting to land in those areas. At suitable prisons observation posts at a level to watch for approaching aircraft will be manned at times when this is necessary. The prison service is reviewing the policy assumptions governing the arrangements for the security of category A prisoners. It has already introduced some changes which will bring the difficult job of preventing escape by highly dangerous prisoners under closer management attention.

The current system of dispersal prisons was designed to contain highly dangerous prisoners securely. It also has to provide satisfactory regimes which allow control to be maintained. It has to operate with sufficient flexibility to enable inmates to be moved from one establishment to another within the system for security, control or other reasons. Steps have been taken to tackle the security weaknesses revealed by this escape and further measures are being considered to give added strength to the dispersal system.

Prison Workshops and Farms

41. Mr. Atkinson To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve the profitability of prison workshops and farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The implementation of a series of measures for the rationalisation of prison industries announced in March 1986, which included the setting of clear management targets by the prisons board, has reduced the cost of employing inmates in prison workshops and improved the value for money obtained from the resources invested in providing this type of activity for prisoners. Work to maintain these trends is continuing. Prison farms and gardens consistently operate at a modest profit.

Chief Constables

42. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many chief constables have been dismissed under section 5 of the Police Act 1964 since the Act came into force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: One chief constable has been dismissed under section 29(1) of the Act, which empowers my right hon. Friend to require a police authority to exercise its power under section 5(4) to call upon the chief constable to retire in the interests of efficiency.

Vandalism

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the abolition of the age limit below which parents cannot be held responsible for vandalism caused by their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Parents are not responsible in law for criminal offences committed by their children, although they may be required to pay fines or other financial penalties imposed on children who have reached the age of criminal responsibility (10 years) but are under the age of 17. In 1987, the Home Office received about 20 letters suggesting that parents should be made liable for the criminal acts of their children; about half of them specifically suggested that such liability should extend to children below the age of criminal responsibility.

Citizenship

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the non-availability of forms required for the registration of British citizenship in accordance with the British Nationality Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We are satisfied that there were supplies available to meet reasonable demands for all the forms subject to the 31 December 1987 deadline for the ending of certain rights to register. There was a temporary shortage of forms which were not subject to time limits, but orders are now being met and the backlog cleared.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the income and expenditure account for the administration of citizenship applications for 1986-87.

Mr. Hurd: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the nationality fees income and expenditure account for the 12 months ended 31 March 1987.

Television Violence

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to enable him to enforce through statutory powers the so-called 9 o'clock watershed as a safeguard for young poeple against scenes of violence and depravity on television.

Mr. Renton: The responsibility for enforcing programme standards must rest with the broadcasting authorities. The Government recognise the need for stronger and more effective oversight of standards relating to the portrayal of violence and sex on television and to that end my right hon. Friend has announced his intention to set up the Broadcasting Standards Council.

Drug Trafficking and Abuse

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what part his Department took in the Council of Europe's parliamentary hearing on drug trafficking and drug abuse, held in Paris on 11 and 12 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The head of the Home Office drugs branch was present throughout, and delivered a paper, in his capacity as chairman of the committee of senior officials of the Council of Europe's Pompidou group.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has made a new electoral arrangement order for the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. I have signed an order implementing the recommendations of the Local Government Boundary Commission for England contained in its report No. 533, which was submitted to me on 24 March 1987. This provides for single member wards to come into effect for the next ordinary elections of the ILEA in 1990 as required by section 19(3) of the Local Government Act 1985. The commission was required to hold the review by paragraph 3 of schedule 9 to the 1985 Act, which also requires me to make an order implementing the commission's recommendations, with or without modifications. As the House knows, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science has introduced a Bill which includes provisions on the future of ILEA. Under his proposals, the size of the elected ILEA will be reduced if boroughs successfully apply to assume education responsibilities for their area. This does not effect the 1985 Act requirement that provision should be made for single member wards for future ILEA elections.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disarmament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the most recent responses by ambassadors at the United Nations 40-nation disarmament committee in Geneva on (a) nuclear disarmament initiatives from the United Kingdom under article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and (b) United Kingdom initiatives on verification procedures in support of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Mellor: Article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons requires the parties to it to pursue negotiations on effective measures connected with nuclear disarmament. The conference on disarmament provides a valuable forum for discussion of these issues, but since the United States and the Soviet Union possess between them the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear weapons it is universally recognised that the primary responsibility for negotiations must fall to them. The resolution of outstanding verification procedures in support of a comprehensive test ban treaty does not require "initiatives", which are unlikely to solve the real technical difficulties; rather, it needs scientific work, which is conducted by the conference on disarmament's ad hoc group of scientific experts, in which the United Kingdom plays a constructive part.

Nuclear Materials (Libya and Pakistan)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he possesses that nuclear materials owned by EURATOM, and under safeguards, have been illegally diverted from the Federal Republic of Germany to Libya and Pakistan.

Mr. Mellor: We have no evidence of illegal diversion of nuclear material from the Federal Republic of Germany to Libya and Pakistan. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany are currently investigating such allegations with the assistance of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The agency stated on 18 January that it was satisfied there had been no unauthorised diversion of nuclear material in significant quantities. We await further details.

United Kingdom-USSR (Bilateral Agreements)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report (a) all bilateral cultural, trade, science and technology co-operation, defence and arms control agreements currently in force between the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, (b) all multilateral cultural trade, science and technology co-operation, defence and arms control agreements signed, respectively, by the United Kingdom and Soviet Governments and (c) all United Nations decrees, charters and other agreements on cultural, trade, science and technology co-operation, and arms control matters signed both by the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mellor: Bilateral agreements under which activity is currently conducted include the following (year of signature and brief explanation where needed in brackets):

United Kingdom-Soviet Protocol on Consultations (1975. Provides for regular ministerial and official level discussions on a wide range of political issues).

Long-term Economic and Industrial Co-operation Programme (renewed in 1986).

United Kingdom/USSR Credit and Financing Agreement. (1987).

United Kingdom/Soviet Programme for Scientific and Technological Co-operation (1975).

Memorandum of Understanding on Energy, Trade and Co-operation 1986).

Memorandum of Understanding on Co-operation in Agriculture and Food Production (1986).

United Kingdom/Soviet Agreement on Co-operation in the Field of Medicine and Public Health (1975).

United Kingdom/USSR Cultural Agreement (renewed 1987. Provides for exchanges in arts, science and education fields).

Memorandum of Understanding on Information/Cultural (1987. Provides for closer contacts between the media and in other areas).

United Kingdom/USSR Co-operation Agreement (1987).

Agreement on Prevention of Incidents at Sea (1986).

Agreement concerning the Establishment of a Direct Communication Link (1967. Hotline).

Agreement on the Prevention of Accidental Nuclear War (1977).

For the remainder of the question, the answers are not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

South Africa

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the restrictive measures and sanctions which have been imposed against South Africa since 1983; and to what extent they are in line with measures that have been suggested by (a) the Commonwealth and (b) the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: The restrictive measures imposed by us against South Africa since 1983, together with an indication of whether they were adopted in common with our European and/or Commonwealth partners, are as follows:

1. Measures agreed at the Meeting of EC Foreign Ministers September 1985

(i) A re-affirmation of an embargo on exports of arms and para-military equipment to South Africa (United Nations Security Council resolution 418 of 4 November 1977);

(ii) A re-affirmation of an embargo on imports of arms and para-military equipment from South Africa (United Nations Security Council resolution 558 of 13 December 1977);

(iii) A refusal to co-operate in the military sphere;

(iv) The recall of military attachés accredited to South Africa and refusal to grant accreditation to military attachés from South Africa;

(v) Discouraging cultural and scientific agreements except where these contribute towards the ending of apartheid or have no possible role in supporting it and freezing of official contacts and international agreements in the sporting and security spheres;

(vi) The cessation of oil exports to South Africa;

(vii) The cessation of exports of sensitive equipment destined for the police and armed forces of South Africa;

(viii) The prohibition of all new collaboration in the nuclear sector.

2. Measures agreed at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, Nassau, October 1985

(i) The strict enforcement of the mandatory arms embargo against South Africa;

(ii) A re-affirmation of the Gleneagles declaration of 1977, which called upon Commonwealth members to take every practical step to discourage sporting contacts with South Africa;

(iii) Agreement upon the commendation to other Governments of the adoption of the following further economic measures against South Africa:

(A) A ban on all new Government loans to the Government of South Africa and their agencies;

(B) A readiness to take unilaterally what action may be possible to preclude the import of Krugerrands;

(C) No Government funding for trade missions to South Africa or for participation in exhibitions and trade fairs in South Africa;

(D) A ban on the sale and export of computer equipment capable of use by South African military forces; police or security forces;

(E) A ban on new contracts for the sale and export of nuclear goods, material and technology to South Africa;

(F) A ban on the sale and export of oil to South Africa;

(G) A strict and rigorously controlled embargo on imports of arms, ammunition, military vehicles and para-military equipment from South Africa

(H) An embargo on all military co-operation with South-Africa;

(I) The discouragement of all cultural and scientific events except where these contribute towards the ending of apartheid or have no possible role in promoting it.

3. Measures which the United Kingdom agreed to implement following the Commonwealth Review Meeting, Marlborough House, August 1986

(i) A voluntary ban on new investment in South Africa;

(ii) A voluntary ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa;

(iii) The implementation of any EC decision to ban the import of coal, iron and steel and of gold coins from South Africa.

4. Measures agreed at the EC Meeting of Foreign Ministers, September 1986

(i) A ban on imports of certain South African iron and steel;

(ii) A ban on imports of certain South African gold coins;

(iii) A ban on certain new investment in South Africa.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Training (Report)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the 26 institutions in England that formed the sample on which was based Her Majesty's Inspectorate's survey "Quality in Schools: the Initial Training of Teachers."

Mrs. Rumbold: The following English polytechnics and colleges were included in the sample of institutions in Her Majesty's inspectorate's report "Quality in Schools: the Initial Training of Teachers":

Bath College of Higher Education
Bedford College of Higher Education
Birmingham Polytechnic
Bishop Grosseteste College, Lincoln
Bradford and Ilkley Community College

Pupil Performance

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the relative performance of (a) state maintained and (b) independent schools in England and Wales at (i) GCE O-level grades A to C and CSE grade 1 and (ii) GCE A-level, in 1965, 1975 and 1985, taking into account the number and percentage of pupils educated in each sector in each of these years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Indicators of relative school performance would require information on the attainments and aptitudes of pupils on entry to the school or proxies for this, not collected by the Department. The GCE O-level grades A to C and CSE grade 1 examination achievements of school leavers from maintained and independent schools are as follows, expressed in terms of the number of leavers from each sector.

For GCE A-level the attainments are expressed in terms of the 17-year-old population. Because attendance post-16 is not compulsory, it is not appropriate to express A-level attainments as a percentage of school rolls.

University Entrants

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has as to the proportion of university entrants whose father's occupation is given as being in social classes IIIm, IV and V; how this compares with 1958, 1968 and 1978 in the United Kingdom; and what equivalent information he has about other countries.

Mr. Jackson: In 1986, 21 per cent. of university entrants were from social classes IIIm, IV or V. In 1978 the comparable figure was 23 per cent. Information for 1958 and 1968 is not available, but it is estimated that in 1955, 1961 and 1971 the equivalent figures were 25, 25 and 27 per cent. respectively.

The OECD has published some information on parental occupations for higher education students in a few countries, but this is not strictly comparable as each country has its own classification of occupations.

Nursery Schools

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which authorities provide an educational welfare officer service for nursery schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not centrally available. All local education authorities maintain an education welfare service, but it is for them to decide on its deployment. DES circular 2/86 on "School Attendance and Education Welfare Services" set out the Government's view that the objectives and emphasis of education welfare services should remain firmly rooted in promoting regular attendance at school. Attendance at nursery schools is not compulsory.

Widowers' Pensions

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will, in consultation with teacher's representatives, remove the discrimination against women teachers regarding the payment of widowers' pensions on contributions made prior to April.

Mrs. Rumbold: Discussions are continuing with representatives of teachers and their employers about the arrangements for covering pre-April 1988 service when automatic survivors benefits for female teachers are introduced into the teachers superannuation scheme. Although male and female teachers have paid the same contribution rate since 1972, that rate, determined by the Government Actuary in his actuarial valuations of the scheme, took into account only the existing benefits of the scheme. The contributions already paid by teachers d reflect the cost of covering pre-April 1988 servic survivors benefits for female teachers.

Leeds Education Authority

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of Stat Education and Science how much Leeds educ authority spent on books and equipment per pupil for year since 1982; what is the estimate for 1987-88; and is the comparable average expenditure for metrop districts over the same period, as a whole.

Mrs. Rumbold: Based on the returns of expenditu 1982-83 to 1985-86 made to the Department o Environment by local authorities and pupil returns to the Department of Education and Science the o expenditure on books and educational equipmen primary and secondary pupil for Leeds and fo metropolitan districts as a whole are as given in the The figures for 1987-88 are taken from "Educ Statistics, 1987-88 Estimates" published by the Cha Institute of Pulbic Finance and Accountancy; a co which is in the Library.

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of for Education and Science what steps have been tal encourage companies to donate equipment, partic computers, to higher educational institutions; and will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: There are various tax incentiv encourage company donations of equipment to education institutions. These will very shortly be br together in a convenient form in a guide to be pub by the Manpower Services Commission on the curre treatment of companies' expenditure on educatio training. As far as computers are concerned, the Con Board for the Universities and the research Coun ready to consider proposals for schemes of ma support involving donations of equipment.

Student Grants

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of Stat Education and Science when the regulations in resp educational grants to university students are likely amended to improve the position of self-employed pa

Mr. Jackson: The regulations make no distinction between self-employed and other parents, and it is not proposed to introduce one.

Bickleigh Down (Primary School)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will pay the final instalment of grant for the new primary school at Bickleigh Down, Roborough, near Plymouth, details of which were submitted to his Department on 20 February 1987 for the amount of £39,086·84; and if he will make a statement as to why there has been an 11 month delay.

Mr. Dunn: When my right hon. Friend approved the establishment of the new voluntary aided school at Bickleigh Down, the Exeter diocesan education committee was informed that grant would be paid on the whole of the governors' approved net building expenditure on the provision of the new school less the proceeds of the sale of the premises of the former Bickleigh CE primary school.

Before the final payment of grant can be made, the Department needs to know the proceeds of the sale of the Bickleigh premises. The Exeter diocesan education committee has been made aware of this requirement but, as yet, the Department has received no response. Until one is forthcoming it will not be possible to make any further payments of grant.

SCOTLAND

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the announcement made on the withdrawal of regional development grant for Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have not received any representations following the announcement of the ending of regional development grant for Scotland.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to respond to the Countryside Commission for Scotland's report, "Forestry in Scotland"; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Countryside Commission for Scotland published its report "Forestry in Scotland" in July 1986 and initially did not seek a Government response in order that it might pursue its ideas with the industry and the conservation movement in the first instance. However, the commission has recently informed the Government that it would wish a formal response and this is now under consideration.

Water Rates

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the percentage rise in average water rates for Scotland has been between 1979 and the latest date available in (a) cash and (b) real terms.

Mr. Lang: Comparison of rates between years before and after 1985 is not straightforward, because of revaluation. The percentage rise in average domestic water rate bills for Scotland between 1979-80 and 1987-88 has been 156·7 per cent. in cash terms and 47·9 per cent. in real terms.

Winget-Type Housing

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total numbers of Winget-type houses in each district council area of Scotland where such houses exist.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Glasgow district council has 1,268 Winget-type houses in its area.

Prisons (Statistics)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the certified normal prison accommodation and the actual population on the latest available date for (a) Her Majesty's prison, Peterhead, (b) Her Majesty's prison, Aberdeen, (c) Her Majesty's prison, Perth, (d) Her Majesty's prison, Saughton, Edinburgh, (e) Her Majesty's prison, Shutts and (f) Her Majesty's prison, Barlinnie, Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

HM prison	Design capacity	Current available capacity	Population at 19 January 1988
Peterhead	180	[1]130	124
Aberdeen	151	151	180
Perth	519	[1]478	481
Edinburgh	547	547	610
Shotts	528	[1]371	342
Barlinnie	983	983	989

[1] Temporary reduction in capacity due to work in progress following recent incidents.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of those persons sentenced to a period of immediate imprisonment in Scotland in 1986 were sentenced to a period of six months or less.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: 84·3 per cent.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average weekly cost of keeping a person in prison in Scotland at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: £260.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average prison remand population in Scotland during 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The 1987 figures are not yet available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the prison remand population for Scotland at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At lock-up on 19 January 1988 there were 938 remand prisoners in Scotland.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average prison population in Scotland for 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The 1987 figures are not yet available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the prison population for Scotland at the latest available date; and what was the comparable figure in 1979, 1983 and 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The figures are as follows:

Date	Prison population
16 January 1979	4,753
18 January 1983	5,039
22 January 1985	4,979
19 January 1988	5,287

Scottish Economy

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what estimates have been made of the effect of taking up of the ECR 90 option for the Eurofighter on employment in Scotland's electronics industry;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the adoption of the European radar system on the Scottish economy;

(3) what assessment he has made of the contribution of Ferranti to the Scottish economy.

Mr. Lang: Ferranti's Scottish group employs 9,500 and is therefore a major employer making a substantial contribution to the Scottish economy. Turnover in 1986-87 was over £280 million.

My right hon. and learned Friend and I both keep in contact with Ferranti about its efforts to supply the ECR 90 radar for the European fighter aircraft. In addition, Scottish Office officials liaise closely with colleagues in the MOD.

If the ECR 90 is selected in the competition now in progress it will maintain employment within Ferranti's Scottish group well into the next century as work on current contracts, including equipment for the Tornado aircraft, comes to an end. Success would also enable Ferranti to maintain its capability to design radar and other avionic equipment to the most exacting technological standard and to compete effectively in important international markets.

In addition to being important to Ferranti, the adoption of the ECR 90 for Eurofighter should also provide new opportunities for Scottish electronic subcontractors.

Housing Repairs

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for houses in need of urgent repairs (a) in urban areas and (b) in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Development Agency and others concerning the effectiveness of the Coatbridge project; what consideration he is giving to widening the project geographically to cover all of Monklands district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend a indicated to the Scottish Development Agency regard Lanarkshire as an area which continues t special attention of the agency. In the first however, it is for the agency and its partne Coatbridge project to consider any extension o geographical area at present covered or beyond currently agreed. I have been told by the agen intends to start discussions with its partne extension in both respects soon.

Last year the agency and my Department co research project which established ways to me achievements of an area initiative. This has no applied to the Coatbridge project.

Rating Reform

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of Scotland how many representations have bee (a) in favour of and (b) against the Abolition of Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned F received 853 representations since the Abo Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Bill was enacte last year. Since many representations have comments in favour of some of the proposals a others, it is not possible to provide the informa form requested.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of Scotland when he intends to inform Scot authorities of the level of the proposed unifie rate for 1989-90; and on what basis the busines be calculated.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the re on 27 November to the hon. Member for Clyd Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) at column 132.

YTS

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Government's undertaking that all unemployed 16 and 17-year-old school leavers would be offered a suitable YTS place by Christmas 1987 has been met; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I am very pleased to say that the Government's undertaking for 1987 has been effectively met. Some 330,000 young people joined YTS during the year, and on 4 January 1988 only 2,305 young people were waiting for the offer of a place, most of whom have now been made an offer. The 1987 figure is an improvement on the 1986 figure (2,376) especially since it includes, for the first time, 17-year-olds, and reflects great credit on the Manpower Services Commission and the careers service.

There will not be a specific Christmas undertaking in 1988. Instead the Government have given a new undertaking to guarantee a place on YTS for all 16 and 17-year-olds who want one. This guarantee will apply not just to school leavers but to young people who may have lost their job or left a YTS scheme. The availability of good quality training within YTS will ensure that in 1988 no one under 18 need be unemployed.

WALES

Teacher Training

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which two institutions in Wales formed the sample on which was based Her Majesty's inspectorate's survey "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers".

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Bangor normal college and the West Glamorgan institute of higher education.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate whether the two institutions included in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" provided British education degree courses which contained a method course designed for students to consider the application of their specialist subject to children's learning.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Yes, they did contain such a method course.

Health Authorities (Cash Allocations)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give an estimate as to the effect of the provisional cash allocations to Welsh district health authorities for 1988-89 on table 17 of "Results of Resources Formula for Distribution in Wales 1988-89;" and if he will publish in the Official Report an amended version of table 17 showing the results of his estimate on individual district health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The effect of the provisional cash allocations to Welsh district health authorities for 1988-89 on the results of the revenue formula assessment for that year is as follows:

	Per cent. Change Suggested by 1988-89 formula assessment	Per cent. Change Required as a result of 1988-89 Provisional Allocations

Revaluation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has as to the likely effects on average rateable values in each local authority in Wales if a general revaluation were to take place, and if he will publish in the Official Report the estimate for each Welsh local authority, together with current average rateable values.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 18 January, at column 555, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The same position applies for Wales.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total cost of the Welsh Development Agency, including grants each year since its establishment and the estimated number of jobs created in each year.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) on 19 January, at column 612, setting out the direct subvention to the WDA since its inception.

The Welsh Development Agency contributes to the job creation process through a range of activities including the provision of factory space, investment and advice. It is not possible to quantify the full cumulative impact in terms of jobs created. Information on job opportunities provided through the agency's factory building programme is published in its annual report and accounts, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The jobs forecast for the current financial year is given in table 17.10 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288).

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will direct the Welsh Development Agency to build additional new advance factories at (a) Engineer park, Sandycroft and (b) Deeside industrial park, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. The 30 per cent. increase in Welsh Development Agency resources announced for 1988-89 will enable it to make an early start on a wide ranging and ambitious new programme of property initiatives in conjunction with private sector and other partners. The needs and potential of north-east Wales will be recognised fully in the new programme which I plan to announce shortly.

Privatisation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each district health authority in Wales (a) which services have been contracted out, (b) the dates of the awards of these contracts, (c) what savings have been made or are expected from the process and (d) whether the authorities have notified him of their intention to contract out further specified services.

Mr. Grist: The information given in the following table relates to domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services which have been subject to competitive tendering. Details of contracts relating to other ancillary services are not held centrally. All Welsh health authorities have complied or indicated that they will comply with the requirement which my right hon. Friend placed upon them in August 1987 that they test by competitive tendering at least 75 per cent by value of their domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services by December 1988.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, with respect to the 15th report of Session 1986-87 from the Committee of Public Accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor General's memorandum on the National Museum of Wales, whether the Comptroller and Auditor General was provided with a copy of the agreement between the national museum and its former keeper of a approved by the Welsh Office and signed on 8 April 19

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for the Comptroller and Audit General to say what documents were provided to h during the course of his examinations.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, with regard to the staffing recommendations of his Department's staff inspectors for the department of art of the National Museum of Wales in 1983-84, what were the professional qualifications of the two full-time and one part-time conservators in post at the time of the staff inspection.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The professional qualifications of staff employed by the National Museum of Wales are matters for the museum authorities.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the maximum salary of a staff nurse and a ward sister in 1979 and in the current year; and what this represents as an increase in real terms.

Mr. Grist: The information is as follows:

	Salary 1979 £	Maximum 1988 £	Increase in real terms Percentage
Staff nurse	3,813	8,600	29
Ward sister	4,949	12,000	38

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much in 1988 prices has been spent on capital investment in the National Health Service in Wales since April 1979.

Mr. Grist: It is estimated that the net capital expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales between April 1979 and March 1988 will have been £497·6 million at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales (a) in 1978-79 and (b) projected for 1988-89; and what was the average spending per household on the National Health Service in Wales (i) in 1978-79 and (ii) projected for 1988-89.

Mr. Walker: The information requested is as follows:

National Health Service net expenditure in 1978-79;

Total expenditure	£398·2 million
Average spending per household	£410·8

Planned National Health Service net provision in 1988-89:

Total provision	£1,173·1 million
Average spending per household	£1,111·9

In reply to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) on 18 January, I stated that the gross NHS expenditure in Wales is planned to increase between 1978-79 and 1988-89 from £418 per household to £1,238. This information was given to me based on the number of households in 1979. The answer above takes account of the forecast increase in households—from 969,400 in 1979 to 1,055,000 in 1988. This increase largely represents a reduction in average household size (from 2·8 to 2·6) and not a significant increase in population. Therefore, the gross NHS spending in Wales will increase on current plans from £144·1 per person in 1978-79 to £426·7 per person in 1988-89, representing a real increase of more than 39 per cent.

Notes:

1. The planned provision is subject to parliamentary approval of the Supply Estimates.
2. The NHS totals include the administrative costs of the artificial limb and appliance service which will from 1 April 1988 be transferred to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many doctors and nurses are employed in the National Health Service in Wales at the present time and in March 1979.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table:

	Whole-time equivalents as at:
	March 1979	September 1979	September 1986	December 1987
Medical and Dental Staff	n/a	2,181	2,470	n/a
Nursing and Midwifery Staff	[1]24,826	[1]24,567	27,187	27,759

[1] Adjusted to take account of the change from 40 to 37½ hours in the working week in 1980.

Note:

Figures are available for nursing and midwifery staff on a monthly basis but only at September for medical and dental staff (1987 figures are not yet available).

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the increase in the waiting list for in-patients in Wales (a) between March 1978 and March 1979 and (b) between March 1986 and March 1987.

Mr. Grist: The in-patient waiting list in Wales increased by 4,126 between March 1978 and March 1979. It decreased by 1,053 between March 1986 and March 1987.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretarty of State for Wales how many hip replacement operations were carried out in Welsh hospitals in 1979 and for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: In 1986, the latest year for which complete information is available, 1,908 hip replacement operations were carried out in Welsh hospitals, compared with 1,551 operations in 1979.

NHS (Treatment Statistics)

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out for the National Health Service in Wales the increase in the treatment of in-patient cases (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) between 1979 and 1986, and the increase in new out-patient cases (i) between 1974 and 1979 and (ii) between 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table:

		Per cent.
In-patient cases
1974-79	+20,722	+6·3
1979-86	+84,175	+24·1
New out-patient cases

1979-86	+76,021	+17·7

A44

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he had any plans to improve the A44 trunk road by Rhydlydan, Ponterwyd, during the current year and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 18 January 1988, at column 545.

Milk Quota

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dairy farmers in Wales do not produce milk up to their allocated quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 19 January 1988, at column 615.

Greencroft Hostel, Aston

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if, on his visit to Clwyd county council on 22 February, he will take steps to discuss with the director of social services, the council and other senior county officials the financial implications of closing the Greencroft hostel, Aston, Deeside, so far as adequate funding and staffing and the consequent placing of former residents of the hostel in homes and flats in the Deeside community is concerned;

(2) if he will make extra financial allocations to Clwyd county council in order that the county will have sufficient cash successfully to locate the former residents of Greencroft hostel, Aston, Deeside, in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It is for individual authorities to determine spending priorities for their areas, having regard to the financial implications of particular schemes and the resources available to them. The total amount of rate support grant made available for 1988-89, and the principles underlying its distribution between authorities, are published in the Welsh rate support grant 1988-89. The allocations were approved by the House on 15 December, and there is no scope for extra allocations. However, in setting current expenditure provision for Wales in 1988-89, an increase of £9·9 million (7·1 per cent.) was allowed for personal social services (including port health).

My right hon. Friend expects soon to announce capital additional funding for the development of community-based services under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy in response to bids which have already been made by county joint planning teams.

Ewes

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that there will be no change in the definition of ewes eligible for payme variable premium in the foreseeable future; and if h make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The redefinition of an eligibl for the sheep annual premium scheme is one of a nu of proposals which the Commission has put forward review of the sheepmeat regime. Further detail required before the Commission's proposal can be assessed.

Tourism

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of Sta Wales if he will now respond to the Select Committ Welsh Affairs' report on tourism in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The response has been rel today and copies have been placed in the Libraries o Houses.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is an aim of the London Docklands development corporation to seek to reduce unemployment in docklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Yes—and the unemployment rate in docklands has fallen from 23 per cent. in January 1986 to 18 per cent. in October 1987.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many students have completed courses on London Docklands development corporation funded training projects; what were those courses; what qualifications they obtained; and what were the students' post-course destinations.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 23 October 1987 at column 891. No further information is readily available.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands Development Corporation takes to see that contractors offer employment to local labour.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC encourages its contractors to employ local labour. It cannot require them to do so.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the average house price at the mortgage completion stage in the London Docklands development corporation area during 1987.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 January]: From an analysis of sales of new homes on land owned by them, LDDC currently estimate the median price paid for a property during the first three quarters of 1987 to be £65,900.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of private sector money invested in the London Docklands development corporation area to date.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 January]: At 31 March 1987 an estimated £2·2 billion had been spent or committed by the private sector. A further £758 million is forecast for the current financial year. These estimates are published annually in the LDDC's annual report and in its corporate plan.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of public money invested in the London docklands area through the Docklands Joint Committee, the Port of London Authority and the London Docklands development corporation, including the cost of enterprise zone benefits itemised by categories of expenditure, grant and allowance, on an annual basis from 1974.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 13 January]: The latest figures for LDDC expenditure, and for the cost of the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone benefits, are set out in the tables. Information about the DJC and PLA expenditure in the London docklands area is not readily available.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the full category A royalty is levied for all copies of the Temple Press-Ordnance Survey "Motoring Atlas of Great Britain" hardback edition.

Mr. Moynihan: Category B royalty rate is charged on the "Ordnance Survey Motoring Atlas" of Great Britain published in softback only. This is in line with the rates applied to private sector publishers for similar publications.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report in rank order starting with the local authority with the highest proportion of rent arrears, the total arrears of rent outstanding for domestic properties owned by each English local authority at the latest available date, together with the percentage figure which their arrears represent of each authority's total rent roll and the number of tenants with arrears of more than four weeks.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today arranged to be placed in the Library tables setting out the figures on the cumulative arrears of rent owed to each local authority in England as at 1 April 1987, together with the percentage those arrears represent of the rent collectable. The authorities are ranked according to the percentage figure. Information on the number of tenants with arrears of more than four weeks is not collected centrally.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were recorded on local authority housing waiting lists on 1 April 1987 in England as a whole and for each region of England.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information provided by local authorities in their 1987 housing investment programme returns is as follows:

Households on local authority waiting lists, April 1987

Standard region	Thousands
North	112
Yorkshire and Humberside	160
East Midlands	110
East Anglia	43
Greater London	264
Rest of South East	200
South West	87
West Midlands	132
North West	181
England	1,289

Local authorities' criteria for inclusion of names on the waiting lists are not uniform and the frequency of reviewing the lists varies.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were housed by local authorities from their waiting lists through allocation procedures (a) during 1983-84, (b) during 1984-85, (c) during 1985-86 and (d) during 1986-87, for England as a whole and for each region of England.

Mr. Waldegrave: In their annual housing investment programme returns local authorities report the number of dwellings which have been let on secure te households under normal waiting list procedures. The information is as follows:

Acquisition and renovation	6,700
Bed and breakfast	31

Notes:

i. the estimates for new build and for acquisition a show the total first year costs to local autho accommodation shown;

ii. estimates of average new built and renovatio derived from information provided by local authorit subsidy and can show significant variation from authority and year to year reflecting differences in th undertaken;

iii. the bed and breakfast figures are gross costs per and are based on returns to CIPFA from those lo providing information on both gross expenditure breakfast and the number of household days of bed provided.

Home Improvements

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of Environment when he plans to publish the f his Department's distribution of grants inqu and when he will bring forward legislation t current system of grant aid for home improve private sector.

Mr. Waldegrave: We plan to publish a fu on the Department's distribution of grant inq as possible, though the main results have already been published in Cmnd. 9513. Legislation to reform the home improvement system will be brought forward at the first suitable opportunity.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the amount and (b) the proportion of net income after rebates, adjusted for family size, which households paid in domestic rates in 1987-88; and what estimates he has made of what these figures would be if the community charge were in operation in 1987-88, broken down into decile groups.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle).

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent it will be open to local authorities after the break-up of a marriage or cohabitation to recover any arrears of the poll tax which have accrued during the period of the relationship from either of the partners; and to what extent this will depend on whether the partner from whom the authority seeks recovery had his or her own income during the period when the arrears accrued.

Mr. Howard: It will be open to local authorities to recover arrears from either partner. In deciding whether to proceed against either partner or both, I would expect them to take account of each partner's income and assets.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a local authority wishing to hold a woman responsible for arrears of poll tax which accrued in the name of a man with whom she was living, but to whom she was not married, will have to establish whether the man and woman in question were living together as husband and wife.

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from organisations in the county of Durham on competition in the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Northern Council for Sport and Recreation is the only organisation based in the county of Durham to have responded directly to the consultation paper which we issued on this subject on 28 September 1987. The local authority associations have of course responded on behalf of their members and many local authorities (but none in Durham) have also submitted comments direct. The paper invited views by 11 December 1987 and all the responses received are now being considered in detail before any final decisions are taken.

Right to Buy

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the abolition of the housing cost floor restrictions in relation to the right to buy.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper "Housing: Government's Proposals" proposed that the cost floo under the right to buy should be abolished. The resp are still under consideration.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of for the Environment, when and in what form he pro to introduce measures to give effect to the Governm intention to seek enabling powers on charging for local authority services as announced in his statement of 22 July 1987, Official Report column 275.

Mr. Chope: The Government will introduce the necessary enabling power at the earliest practical legislative opportunity.

Derelict Land

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to how much derelict land owned by local authorities and public bodies could be sold for private development.

Mr. Trippier: Under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, a register of unused and underused land owned by certain public bodies, including local authorities, has been compiled. At the end of December 1987 about 91,000 acres of such land were entered on the register. In broad terms it is estimated that about 70 per cent. of this land has some potential for development.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a list of those local authorities and public bodies which currently own derelict land in excess of 1 sq mile.

Mr. Trippier: The amount of land entered on the registers of unused and underused land on 31 October 1987 owned by each of the following bodies exceeded 1 sq mile (640 acres) in total:

Blackburn Borough Council
Bristol City Council
British Coal
British Rail
British Steel Corporation
Central Electricity Generating Board
Commission for New Towns
Derwentside District Council
Department of Health and Social Services
Department of the Environment (including Property Services Agency)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to take action to reduce the amount of derelict land held by local authorities in the light of the report "Why Wasteland?" published by the Adam Smith Institute, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A programme of forced disposals of unused and underused land owned by public bodies, using the power under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 is under way. So far the statutory procedures have been initiated on 242 sites owned by local authorities, covering nearly 1,400 acres. I am considering what further action is necessary.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of S
Environment if he will introduce legislatio local authorities to sell waste land for priv development.

Mr. Trippier: Part X of the Local G
Planning and Land Act 1980 empowers me to

Rates

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 16 December 1987, Official Report, columns 521-22, what is the average cash figure paid in rates by the highest and lowest paid 10 per cent. of households under the current rebate system; and what is this figure expressed as a percentage of their incomes.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 January 1988]: The information requested is not available. Table 5 of the material placed in the Library on 13 January provides a comparison between net domestic rates and the community charge, on the basis of a 20 per cent. minimum payment by all ratepayers and community charge payers. This shows that households with net incomes of under £50 per week, for example, would on average pay 3·4 per cent. of their incomes in community charges, compared with 4·1 per cent. in rates.

CIVIL SERVICE

Job Dispersal

Mr. Sheldon: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on his policy for dispersal of Civil Service posts; if he will set out the number dispersed posts; and how many will be in the nort the north and Scotland.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 18 January 1988] 1979 some 5,560 Civil Service posts have been di from London under the Government's di programme, including 1,930 posts to Scotland an 1,210 to the north-west; no posts have been dispe the northern region. Further moves to Scotland of 125 posts are planned under this programme.

In addition, Departments have, under the Government's wider location policy, dispersed staff on their own initiative. Forty staff of the Data Protection Registrar were located at Wilmslow, cheshire, in 1984; by the end of 1987-88, the Department of Health and Social Security will have created over 500 new jobs at its Newcastle central office and a net addition of around 350 posts at the family credit centre at North Fylde; plans have now been approved to move 60 Ministry of Defence posts to Cheadle Hulme in Cheshire; the Inland Revenue opened a new office in Cumbernauld in 1987 (32 posts) and will be dispersing later this year some London tax office and head office staff to Manchester (36 posts), to Stockport (17 posts) and to Glasgow (12 posts).

For the future, Departments will be encouraged to consider all suitable locations, including those for the north-west, the north and Scotland, on the basis mentioned in my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General's answer on 18 January, at columns 475-76, to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram). Any specific plans will be announced as and when they are prepared.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cost-sharing Agreements

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide his estimate of the total annual amount forgone by the Exchequer under the cost-sharing agreements and special arrangements with the United States, based on the difference between current practice and market interest rates and United Kingdom taxes applying.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that the information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Profit-sharing

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to provide more information to the public about the tax reliefs available for share-based profit-sharing and about profit-sharing generally.

Mr. Lawson: This Government continue vigorously to promote awareness of the benefits of increased profit-sharing, whether in the form of employee share schemes or cash-based schemes. These efforts include the publication and dissemination by the Inland Revenue of a variety of leaflets and booklets providing information about the tax reliefs which are associated with schemes approved or registered under the Finance Acts of 1978, 1980, 1984 and 1987.

The success of this publicity is indicated by the growing popularity of these schemes. More than 1,400 all-employee share schemes have now been approved covering well over 10,000 companies; and 430 profit-related pay schemes, covering over 70,000 employees, have already been registered under the provisions of the Finance (No. 2) Act 1987.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any new proposals on profit-related pay.

Mr. Lawson: I cannot anticipate my Budget Statement.

Central Office of Informat

THE ARTS

Departmental Costs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the total cost to public funds of the Office of Arts and Libraries in the financial year 1987-88; and if he will publish corresponding estimates for the years 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Luce: The total cost to public funds of the central Government expenditure programme of the Office of Arts and Libraries in the financial year 1987-88 is estimated at £360·6 million. The corresponding figures for the years since 1983-84, when the OAL was established as a separate Department, are as follows. They include provisions for the British Museum (Natural History).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Aspinwall: T ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 18 and 19 January in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Discussion at the Council concentrated almost exclusively on mechanisms for stabilising expenditure under the common agricultural policy and on new Commission proposals for a wider scheme for taking land out of agricultural production. Both would form part of the package of issues on the future financing of the Community that will be before the meeting of Heads of Government on 11 and 12 February. No conclusions were reached and the Council will resume on Saturday.

Considerable progress was made on working out the details on a satisfactory scheme for the set-aside of agricultural land, but there is still some work to be done to achieve a satisfactory scheme. I had to express my deep concern at some suggestions floated during discussion in relation to expenditure stabilisers. The German presidency will be producing new proposals for discussion at the weekend.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the M Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many da there are in England, Scotland and Wales; wh corresponding figures in each of the three count and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The numbers of regi producers are as follows:—

Year	England	Wales
1980	35,494	7,864
1985	30,825	6,990
1987	29,428	6,720
In 1970, the comparable figures were:—
	64,246	16,019

Figures relate to March of each year.

Food Labelling

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of A Fisheries and Food what has been the response industry to his guidelines on nutrition labellin published in July 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Both food manufac food retailers have shown considerable i adopting the standard format for nutrition la out in the guidelines and in giving this infor consumers on the labels of their products. There two practical problems which have needed reso I am pleased to announce that adjustmen guidelines covering the category in which trans- should be declared and the way in which, fo being, dietary fibre shall be assessed have reso matters. I am, therefore, hopeful that th adjustments will result in a high level of upta industry of these guidelines.

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of A Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the cost of fraud under the common agricultural each of the last three years in (a) the United Kin (b) the rest of the Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 2 1988]: Member states are obliged to report qu the Commission on irregularitiees in claims, e the money may be recovered. The number and irregularities reported in the last three years figures are available were:

	1984		1985		1986
	Number	£ million	Number	£ million	Number	£ million
United Kingdom	46	0·3	59	0·7	68	0·5
Rest of EC	321	5·4	444	7·6	352	18·6

The vast majority of these irregularities relate to failures to meet conditions of scheme where fraud was not suspected. However, it seems likely that the relatively small number of likely frauds accounted for a significant part of the money.

It is not possible by definition to state th undetected fraud. The Government are con minimise fraudulent claims under the CAP and the Commission's recent initiative to dev resources to this important area.

Day Nurseries

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what research his Department has done on the correlation between levels of day nursery provision and the numbers of children in care.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has not commissioned any research specifically on this issue. However, some research studies have addressed it in passing. For example, a study of local authority day nurseries in England in the period 1975-83 showed that children of families in contact with social services departments were accorded priority for admission to day nurseries.

NHS (Funding)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the amount of Government funding for each year since 1979 to (a) Waltham health authority and (b) North East T health authority, based on (i) actual amo terms at current years prices and (iii) i current years prices based on information Health Service inflation and costs.

Notes:

[1] As shown in health authorities' summarised accounts.

[2] The 1982 reorganisation of the NHS resulted in substantial and complex boundary changes and changes in management responsibility. Figures for pre- and post- 1982 authorities are not directly comparable.

[3] District expenditure figures are distorted by a change in the region's accounting methodology which was introduced in 1985-86. Districts in North East Thames are now charged for the cost of "their" patients in large mental illness hospitals outside their boundaries.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the allocation of funds to the South West Thames area authority and to the Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton district health authority for each of the last 10 years; and what has been the percentage increase in each year.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 20 January 1988]: The available information is shown in the table. Information is not available on a district basis for the years prior to the 1982 reorganisation of the National Health Service. Comparable information for 1987-88 will not be available until after the end of the financial year.

Costs of Treatment

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the relative costs of different treatments and operations in (a) each regional health authority, (b) each district health authority and (c) each hospital; what actions he intends to take in order to obtain more detailed information; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 12 January, at column 253. The initiative is currently being piloted at five acute hospital sites in England.

Stockpiled Drugs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the quantities and the monetary value of drugs stockpiled for use in the event of war (a) in the current financial year and (b) cumulatively, in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: National Health Service drug stocks are kept at a level commensurate with short-term peacetime needs: there is no stockpile dedicated for use in the event of war.

A working group of officials within the Department is considering stockpile requirements for medical supplies to be used in emergencies. The cost of providing stores of essential items is likely to be high and so may have to be built up over a period of time. Guidance will be issued following completion of the study.

NHS (War Planning)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether plans for the National Health Service in the event of war indicate the number and the method by which patients will be discharged from National Health Service hospitals to make way for casualties; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: During a period of tension and when directed by the Secretary of State, health authorities would cease to admit all but emergency cases and arrange to send home as many as possible of the patients in hospitals and nursing homes whose retention was not medically essential. The selection of patients for discharge would be made on medical advice and would take account of the availability of accommodation and facilities for care in the community. Contingency plans do not refer to numbers of patients since these would depend on the prevailing circumstances.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether plans for the National Health Service in the event of war indicate in detail the role of doctors and how they are expected to choose between the injured who may be treated and those who will be left to die; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We are at present considering revised guidance on civil defence planning in the National Health Service but it will not attempt to detail the role of doctors. Planning officers whom we expect to respond to the guidance are aware of the need to take account of all available resources in drawing up detailed plans, and that the sorting of casualties is a matter for professional judgment in the light of the particular circumstances.

After any disaster the responsibility for sorting casualties and allocating priorities for treatment lies with doctors or ambulance personnel attending the injured at the material time. This principle applies in both peacetime and wartime emergencies.

Peterlee Community Hospital

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his proposals, and their timing, for the provision of a community hospital in Peterlee.

Mrs. Currie: The provision of capital schemes in the northern region is for the regional health authority to determine in the light of its available resources and competing priorities.

Claybury Hospital, Ilford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the policy towards heating the corridors of Claybury hospital, Ilford; whether any recent change has been made to this policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of Waltham Forest health authority, which is responsible for managing services at Claybury hospital, for this information, which is not held centrally.

Waltham Forest

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has received from Waltham Forest district health authority about its projected deficits for 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what action he proposes to take in response;

(2) why Waltham Forest has suffered a greater cumulative loss of revenue to hospital services between 1982-83 and 1985-86 than any other district health authority within the North East Thames regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of North East Thames regional health authority, which is responsible for the allocation of resources to its district health authorities, about these matters.

Donor Card Scheme

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has made any assessment of the effectiveness of the donor card scheme: and whether he has plans to improve its effectiveness.

Mrs. Currie: Organ donation is influenced by a number of factors, many of which cannot readily be quantified. It is therefore difficult to estimate separately the effect of donor cards on the number of organs donated. However, our view is that the donor card scheme has played a valuable role, especially when used in conjunction with other publicity initiatives.

We are currently following up a number of recommendations made by a medical royal colleges working party. For further details I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 18 December 1987 at column 934.

Geriatric Patients

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the levels of staffing dealing with geriatric patients in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool health authorities over each of the last three years.

Mrs. Currie: The figures are shown in the table.

Mersey Regional Health Authority (Contracting Out)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what services have been contracted out within the Mersey regional health authority to date; and what savings have been made or are expected from such contracting out.

Mrs. Currie: As at 30 September 1987, 94 per cent. of domestic cleaning services, 89 per cent. of catering services and 93 per cent. of laundry services in the Mersey region had been put out to competitive tender. Estimated annual savings generated from contracts awarded in the region currently total £5·9 million.

Schizophrenia (Homeless Persons)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any estimate of the total number of homeless schizophrenia sufferers who are in bed and breakfast accommodation in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret we do not have information on which to base an estimate.

Electorates

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 20 largest parliamentary constituencies by electorate, with their electorates on the current register; and what is the average constituency electorate in the United Kingdom and England.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Parliamentary constituency	1987 Electorate

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 20 English non-metropolitan counties which have shown the greatest percentage growth in electorate since 1982; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Ethnic Minorities

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many leaflets his Department publishes concerning benefits and benefit entitlement; how many of these are available in minority languages; what are those languages; when such minority language leaflets were published; and how many changes in the benefit system have occurred since that date.

Mr. Portillo: The Department currently publishes about 120 leaflets on social security benefits. Only one leaflet is translated into the main ethnic minority languages. This is FB22, a version of the English language leaflet FB 2 "Which benefit?", translated into Chinese, Urdu, Hindi, Gujerati, Bengali and Punjabi.

Five translations were made in March 1985. The Chinese version was translated in November 1984 and revised in July 1985. There have been several reprints of these translations.

Because leaflet FB 22 was worded in broader terms than the English version of the leaflet, the numerous changes in the benefit system since the translations have not dated the leaflets. However, following this April's social security reforms, it is intended to publish revised editions of FB 22 as soon as possible.

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are taken to assist ethnic minority claimants who cannot speak English in his Department's offices where there are no officers who can communicate with these claimants.

Mr. Portillo: In offices where there are no staff who can communicate with a claimant who has little or no English, his family, friends, and supporters in the community will act for him. In practice this works well.

Local Offices (Multilingual Staff)

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many bilingual or multilingual staff are employed in his Department's local offices in Middlesbrough, Stockton, Hartlepool, Redcar and Eston.

Mr. Portillo: Stockton local office has one bilingual member of staff. The other offices — Middlesbrough, Hartlepool, Redcar and Eston—have none.

Benefits

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department's leaflet "Which Benefit—FB2" is to be reprinted to incorporate the replacement of supplementary benefit and family income supplement by income support and family credit.

Mr. Portillo: A new edition of leaflet FB2 "Which Benefit?" is being prepared for publication by April 1988. The new edition will cover references to all the new social security benefits, including family credit and income support, and give details on where further information on these benefits can be found.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of people partially dependent or totally dependent on (a) supplementary benefit, (b) housing benefit and (c) family income supplement in (i) Wales and (ii) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 January 1988]: The readily available information is as follows:

1. n/a: Figures not available.
2. Recipients of one benefit may also be in receipt of another. For example, in the British figures, approximately 20,000 FIS recipients also receive supplementary benefit and about 120,000 FIS recipients also receive standard housing benefit.
3. Supplementary benefit recipients who are householders are also entitled to certificated housing benefit.
4. Supplementary benefit figures were obtained from annual statistical inquiries. FIS figures were obtained from administrative statistics and the figures on housing benefit are from the annual standard housing benefit inquiries and local authority returns. The figure for the number of housing benefit recipients in Wales is for rate rebate and excludes a small number of people who receive rent rebate or rent allowance only.

North Tees General Hospital

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to visit North Tees general hospital.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to do so at present.

Artificial Limb Centre, Roehampton

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision there was for inspection of repairs at the artificial limb fitting centre at Roehampton before the recent strike; what provision there is now; what change there has been in the number of inspectors; if he will ascertain from the companies supplying artificial limbs if there has been any increase in complaints; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The strike to which the right hon. Member refers was settled in May last year. It did not, as the right hon. Member's question may imply, take place at the Roehampton artificial limb fitting centre, but at the nearby factory of J. E. Hanger and Co. Ltd., one of the manufacturers of artificial limbs.

As the right hon. Member will be aware, from 1 July 1987 the Disablement Services Authority has taken over full responsibility for the artificial limb service, and for dealing with the suppliers of artificial limbs. I understand that the Disablement Services Authority is strengthening controls on the quality and cost of contractors' work.

Income-Related Benefits

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what figure from the annual statistical inquiry was used for supplementary benefit claimants' average water rates in compiling the tables on the estimated impact of the reformed structure of income-related benefits, published in October 1987.

Mr. Scott: The average water rate payment by supplementary benefit claimants was calculated from table 6.14 of the annual statistical inquiry for February 1986. The overall cost in supplementary benefit of water charges was updated to estimated amounts for 1988-89 and this figure was used in setting the income support levels for April 1988 and in compiling the tables on the estimated impact of the reformed structure of income-related benefits.

Income Support

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of estimated expenditure on income support for 1988-89 by claimant group (a) including the compensation for 20 per cent. contribution to rates and (b) excluding the 20 per cent. rates compensation.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Including compensation for 20 per cent. rates contribution (£ million)	(b) Excluding compensation for 20 per cent. rates contribution (£ million)
Pensioners age 80+	190	160
Pensioners age 60-79	1,160	1,080
Sick or Disabled	510	500
Lone Parents	1,830	1,790
Couples with Children	2,030	2,010
Others	2,850	2,760
Total (figures do not add owing to rounding)	8,570	8,290

Mr. Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government plan to withhold income support from Easter school leavers.

Mr. Scott: Young people who leave school this Easter will, subject to satisfying the normal conditions, be entitled to receive income support.

It is the Government's intention that from September 1988 there will be no general entitlement to income support for 16 and 17-year-olds. Only certain groups of people, to be prescribed in regulations and expected to include such groups as lone parents and the severely disabled, will be entitled in their own right. We also intend to provide benefit for a limited period for those young people who are unable to live at home, because, for example, of risk of physical or sexual abuse, and who would otherwise suffer severe hardship.

North West Durham District Health Authority

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were employed by North West Durham district health authority in 1979 and at the latest date available.

Mrs. Currie: Such information as is available is shown in the table.

Because of the 1982 National Health Service reorganisation consistent data at district health authority level are not available for 1979.

The figures exclude consultants and senior registrars whose contracts are held by the regional health authorities. The district health authorities where these staff work cannot be separately identified centrally. There will therefore be more medical and dental staff actually working in North West Durham district health authority than accounted for in the table.

Mr. Portillo: I regret this information is not avai Family income supplement claims are dealt with b centre at Blackpool and no information is maint about claims from particular local areas.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for S Services how many (a) direct and (b) indirect ma deaths in England and Wales in each year from onwards occurred in isolated general practioners' and how many were associated with anaesthesia.

Mrs. Currie: In order to identify those maternal d occurring in isolated general practitioners' units it be necessary to refer to the copies of the death certif of all registered maternal deaths. I regret that this be done for all the years requested only at dispr tionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of Stat Social Services if he will publish a table in the O Report showing the social fund grant allocations to office of his Department as a sum per head o claimants registered with each office.

Mr. Scott: Information on each local office's fund grants budget and live load at 28 July 19 available in the Library.

Hypothermia

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for S Services what are the total costs of advertising administration for the Government campaign of h education on the links between diet, warmth an dangers of hypothermia.

Mrs. Currie: I assume the hon. Member is asking about the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign and I refer her to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 16 December 1987, at columns 598-599.

The cost of the campaign to the Department is now estimated at £610,000. This includes production and distribution of the government booklet, television films, press advertisements and the telephone helpline. The increase in estimated costs is a reflection of the success of the campaign which has generated more telephone calls to the helpline and more requests for the booklet than was originally anticipated. I will arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy of the booklet. Copies have already been placed in the Library.

Disabled People

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys survey of disabled people; and whether he will place a copy in the Library in advance of publication.

Mr. Scott: The OPCS expects to publish the results of the survey of disabled people in a series of reports, beginning later this year. A copy of each report will be placed in the Library at the time of publication, in accordance with normal practice.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements will be made for consulting disabled people and organisations representing them in connection with the review of social security provision for disability.

Mr. Scott: An announcement will be made in due course about consultation with interested organisations on the implications for disability benefits of the results of the OPCS survey.

Trent Health Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if in the light of the closure of Middlewood hospital, in the Trent health authority, he will provide bridging funds to avoid damage to other services.

Mrs. Currie: Middlewood mental illness hospital is being run down on a phased basis and is due to close in 1994 by which time more community-orientated replacement services will have been developed. Bridging funds to support the build-up of the new service are already being provided by the Trent regional health authority within its existing allocation. The regional and district health authorities are keeping both the financing arrangements and the pace of service change under review.

NHS (Staff)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what has been the increase in staff employed in the National Health Service since 1958;

(2) what is the percentage of Health Service employees who at present are involved in an administrative and clerical capacity and what was the comparable figure in 1958;

(3) what percentage of National Health Service staff are employed at present to carry out ancillary duties compared with 1958.

Mr. Newton: I regret that staffing figures prior to 1974 are not comparable with those for later years, due mainly to the effects of the 1974 reorganisation. Comparisons from 1974 to the latest available date are in the table.

National Health Service Staff in Post[1] at 30 September

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the turnover rates in the National Health Service of (a) administrative staff and (b) district general managers.

Mr. Newton: Information on the turnover rate of administrative staff is not available centrally. We do not at present have full information on movements of district general managers within the National Health Service, but in the three years since the first appointments were made, 10 district general managers have left for outside employment. This represents a rate of about 1·7 per cent. per annum.

Private Health Insurance

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to facilitate employee and individual enrolment in private health insurance schemes.

Mrs. Currie: I welcome the fact that the number of people covered by private medical insurance has almost doubled since 1979—from 2·75 million to 5·25 million in 1986. This record clearly demonstrates the ability of the medical insurance industry to respond to the growing demand for greater choice in health care.

The Government are determined to encourage the industry's continuing expansion. Tax concessions have been given on employer-paid medical insurance premiums for people earning less than £8,500 p.a. since 1980.

District Health Authorities

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to put out to tender the management of district health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Management arrangements at local level are a matter for individual district health authorities to consider in conjunction with their regional health authority.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to transform district health authorities into competing health maintenance organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Health Vouchers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the introduction of health vouchers.

Mrs. Currie: We have received a small number of representations commending the introduction of health vouchers.

Local Offices (Budget Allocations)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of his Department's local offices raising operational questions relating to their budget allocations, referred to in the answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 167, and if he will indicate the subject matter of the questions raised.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 13 January, at column 400.

Pensions

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to publicise the new pension choices introduced by the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Portillo: The Government wish to ensure that employers and employees are made aware of the new pensions choices available to them as a result of the Social Security Act 1986. While the promotion of particular products and advice on the type of pension suitable in any given case are the responsibilities of pensions providers and professional advisers, the Government intend that the new framework created by the Act should be as widely understood as possible. We will, therefore, be taking the following measures.

First, we will be mounting a public awareness campaign, making use of television and press advertising. The major effort will be concentrated in the weeks preceding the start of the new personal pension arrangements on 1 July 1988, since it is only at that point that the full range of choices becomes available. This will be preceded by a shorter press advertisement ca March 1988, directed towards employers, which attention to the new options for occupation schemes starting on 6 April 1988.

Second, the Department will shortly be issui explanatory leaflets. The television and press ments are designed to lead people who are in obtain a leaflet entitled "New Pensions Choic will give an overview of the new options. This le attention in turn to two further leaflets, one employers and the other at employees. Sup detailed fact sheets, the two leaflets will descril new arrangements work.

South Yorkshire Ambulance Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State Services if he will make a statement rega implications of the case of the late Mr. Thom of 90 Raisenhall road, Sheffield, for the future p procedures of the South Yorkshire ambulance

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 19 regional health authority is responsible for ma South Yorkshire metropolitan ambulance understand that the incident involving Mr. Joh December referred to in the hon. I have asked Si Carlisle, the regional health authority chairma urgently into the second case involving Mr on 4 January and to write to the hon. Member incidents at the same time as reporting to me.

Mentally Ill Patients (Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State Services if he will publish the levels of sp mentally ill patients who have received or ar treatment in the Durham health authority durin 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987 to date.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 Janua Information on health authority expenditure patient is not collected centrally. Hospital c submitted to the Department show exper hospitals of different types and cost returns in community health services show expenditure the major areas of activity.

Total current expenditure on hospitals cat mental illness in the Durham health authority £1,017,556 in 1985-86 and £1,169,398 in Information for 1987-88 is not yet available.

Maternity Units

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary Social Services (1) how many small mater particularly in rural areas, have been closed in past five years; and what was the total maternity beds involved in each year;

(2) how many small maternity units, part rural areas, are currently subject to formal pr closure; and how many maternity beds are in cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost. Day-to-day management decisions on closures are a matter for individual health authorities in England.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 11 December 1987, Official Report, columns 297-98, if he will investigate the failure of Birmingham and Worcester district health authorities to consult community health councils when they made substantial reductions in the number of hospital beds in 1987.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 20 January 1988]: I am satisfied that the Central Birmingham and Worcester district health authorities have followed the procedures for consultation as set out in the National Health Service (Community Health Council) Regulations 1985. Urgent and temporary closures do not require pre-closure consultation.

Markets

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the regulations governing the hygiene standards for retail covered markets and market stalls are the same as for wholesale covered markets and market stalls;

(2) whether there is any provision under the Food Hygiene (Market Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) (Amendment) Regulations 1966 or any other legislation to prohibit the sale of fresh meat, fish, cheese and vegetables in a covered market unless the stalls are located in a separate food hall;

(3) what guidelines his Department issues governing the maximum levels of pollution acceptable from motor vehicles delivering goods to covered retail or wholesale markets.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 20 January 1988]: The Food Hygiene (Market Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations 1966, as amended, apply to food trading undertaken at covered retail or wholesale markets, or otherwise away from fixed premises. The regulations cover all food intended for human consumption and require that food traders should take all reasonable steps to ensure that food is protected from the risk of contamination. No guidelines have been issued centrally.

It is a matter for local decision as to where such markets are held and the local environmental health department should be able to advise on the implementation of the regulations.

ENERGY

Magnox Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he possesses regarding the availability for examination by independent civil engineering consultancy organisations of the full design plans of each of the Central Electricity Generating Board Magnox nuclear plants in advance of the beginning of decommissioning of the older reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is the responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board to make detailed plans for the decommissioning of its Magnox reactors. board's plans will be assessed by the independent nu installations inspectorate, and will need to be approve it before they can be implemented.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for En if he will make a statement on current government p on the time period over which the decommissionin older Magnox reactors is expected to take place.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Ce Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chair to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for En (1) how many applications have been made to the nuc installations inspectorate of the Health and Sa Executive by the Central Electricity Generating Boar operate a Magnox nuclear power station in experimental way to test reactor cooling by convect and if he will make a statement;

(2) on how many occasions his Department has notified by the Central Electricity Generating Board it intended to operate Magnox nuclear power station an experimental way to test reactor cooling by convecti and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is the first occasion that CEGB has decided to carry out a test of the kind propo at Trawsfynydd. Similar tests have been successf carried out, by the South of Scotland Electricity Boar Hunterston A in 1981, and by BNF plc at Calder Ha 1985 and 1986, with the full approval of the NII. proposed test will proceed only if the HSE's NII is tot satisfied as to safety.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Ene what papers have been commissioned (a) within Department, (b) from external consultants, (c) from Central Electricity Generating Board and South Scotland Electricity Board and (d) from the Uni Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on the implicati for privatisation of the electricity supply industry of decommissioning of the Magnox reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secret of State has asked for advice from a wide range of sour on many issues concerned with the proposed privatisat of the electricity supply industry. Advice given Ministers on this basis is confidential.

Trawsfynydd Nuclear Reactor

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State energy when he was informed that an emergency sh down procedure is to be performed on Trawsfyny nuclear reactor on 12 February; if he is satisfied with safety precautions to be taken to protect the residents the surrounding area during this procedure; and if he w make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The proposed test at Trawsfyny does not involve an emergency shutdown and will ta place only afte the reactor has been safely shut down in normal manner. It will proceed only if the Health a Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate totally satisfied as to safety.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State Energy when he was first advised of the propos experimental shutdown at Trawsfynydd power station; whether this experiment has his approval; what emergency arrangements are being organised along the west coast of Wales and England; whether he has received objections to this experiment; and if he will now instruct the Central Electricity Generating Board to abandon this experiment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate which received on 30 November last year the CEGB's proposal for a test of natural cooling following the routine shutdown of a reactor at Trawsfynydd. The NII is presently considering the proposal, and the test will proceed only if it is totally satisfied as to safety. Details of emergency arrangements for nuclear power stations are to be found in the reply given on 22 April 1987 at columns 547-51 by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad).

Monergy (Condoms)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department's "Monergy" campaign to save energy in industrial processing has included any departmental assessment of the energy-saving possibilities in the production of condoms in support of the anti—AIDS campaign.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Soviet trade union officials on the implications of the Chernobyl accident for the safe operation of nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend's discussions with the Soviet trade union delegation on 2 December covered a range of nuclear safety issues, including international initiatives since the Chernobyl accident and opportunities for bilateral and multilateral co-operation. The discussions complement existing links with the USSR at Government and industry level.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the financial and economic cost of the Chernobyl accident to (a) the United Kingdom nuclear industry, (b) United Kingdom farmers and (c) the United Kingdom tourist industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom industry was widely involved in monitoring the effects of the Chernobyl accident and in assessing its implications. The cost of this involvement is not readily quantifiable. The Government have so far paid out over £5·2 million in compensation to sheep farmers for the effect on their enterprises of the controls arising from the Chernobyl accident. It is not possible to quantify any effect on tourism.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest information on the evaluation made by the Soviet Union of the total economic cost of the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the 15 January edition of Pravda reported that at a Politburo meeting the previous day the direct cost of the Chernobyl accident was estimated at 4 billion roubles (£4 billion). According to the report, this cost doubles if economic loss is taken into account.

Mr. Parkinson: I have reappointed Sir Philip Jones as chairman of the Electricity Council for a further three years from 1 April 1988, and in my letter of 20 January I agreed the following revised objectives with him:

"This letter sets out the objectives which the Government wish you to pursue as Chairman of the Electricity Council. The objectives elaborate the responsibilities and obligations placed by Statute on the Electricity Council, and in particular the duty to promote and assist the maintenance and development by Electricity Boards in England and Wales of an efficient, co-ordinated and economical system of electricity supply.

1. The Government has announced its intention to bring forward proposals to privatise the Electricity Supply Industry. Your specific objective as Chairman of the Council will be to assist the Government in implementing those proposals, and in bringing about an orderly and timely transfer of the Industry to the private sector.

2. Meanwhile you should by all practicable means promote and encourage maximum efficiency throughout the Industry including sustained and detailed attention to cost control by the various Boards in England and Wales through all aspects of their activities. In this context:

(a) you should advise me on the setting of financial targets and performance aims for the Electricity Supply Industry in England and Wales and each Board individually; you should keep me informed, in accordance with guidance which I shall give you from time to time, on matters relevant to the setting of those targets and aims and on progress towards their achievement;

(b) you should encourage Boards to develop a wide range of challenging targets for cost control, efficiency and standards of service and to publish information about performance against targets.

3. It must also be your objective to encourage the Boards to develop co-operation with private generators of electricity, within the framework laid down in the Energy Act 1983, and ensure that effective commercial and technical arrangements exist to take full economic advantage of their potential contribution to supply. You should also encourage the Boards to adopt and support schemes for the combined production of heat and power in accordance with the provisions in the Energy Act.

4. I shall require Boards to set out their capital investment proposals comprehensively for my approval, explaining the proposals in relation to business plans and the achievement of financial targets and performance aims. I shall also require them to continue to pay close attention to the methodology used in capital investment appraisal. In advising me on these proposals it should be your objective to promote the production and distribution of electricity at the lowest possible cost consistent with maintaining adequate standards e.g. of security of supply.

5. To support the Boards' capital investment proposals and the Council's returns for the Investment and Financing Review, the Council should set them in the context of CEGB and Area Board business and trends, in a manner specified by the Department. The Boards' plans should also take full account of the objectives agreed with Government as well as the financial and performance targets agreed and the Industry's external financial limits. Bearing in mind the requirements of S.8(5) and S.8(6) of the Electricity Act 1957, you should ensure regular, timely, and effective information flows from the Boards to assist the Government and the Electricity Council in setting those objectives, targets and limits and in monitoring performance.

6. You should, in consultation with the Boards, and as appropriate with Government, develop and promote a framework of electricity pricing principles, within which the Boards set their prices so as to reflect the costs at the margin of meeting demands on a continuing basis, and so as to be consistent with the financial framework set by Government.

7. You should seek to ensure that contracting, sales of appliance and appliance repair activities of the Area Boards are carried out effectively and economically so as to yield a proper return on the assets employed.

8. Subject of course to European Community and other international obligations, you should encourage the Boards to assist United Kingdom manufacturing industr orders in export markets, in particular through th of support services through British Electricity Int

9. You should ensure that the Industry remai to the impact of its policies and prices on consume these are properly presented to the Industry's representative bodies and to the public at large.

10. Until the Industry is privatised you should practicable means to promote close working re within the Industry. In this connection I draw a David Howell's statement of July 1980.

11. Finally, I should make clear that the Gover wish to give further guidance to you at a later impose constraints from time to time, for wider your ability to achieve one or other of these obje

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Terry Waite

Mr. William Powell: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, whether the money paid by the Church of England to Charles Armstrong and John Entwistle in order to help secure the release of Mr. Terry Waite was paid from funds provided by the Church Commissioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: The money paid to Charles Armstrong and John Entwistle for travelling and related expenses for the purpose of trying to secure the release of Mr. Terry Waite and other hostages has been paid entirely from discretionary funds at the disposal of the Archbishop of Canterbury, none of which was provided by the Church Commissioners.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance on reporting complaints has been issued to all staff; how many complaints have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Civil Service policy on sexual harassment is set out in the programme of action to achieve equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service which was published by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) in 1984. Sexual harassment at work is not tolerated and is dealt with as a disciplinary matter through the usual Civil Service complaints procedures. Guidance on reporting complaints was issued to all staff in 1984.

Five formal complaints have been reported centrally to personnel division in the last five years. In the four proven cases appropriate disciplinary action was taken.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the current food situation in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: The food situation in Ethiopia is serious: over 1 million tonnes of food aid is needed to feed people until the next harvest in November. Donors have responded promptly with pledges of food aid which at present total over 600,000 tonnes. Shipments are well under way and will meet requirements for the earlier part of the year. Rebel action in Eritrea and Tigre is severely hampering delivery of this food to those in need.

Clywd (RDG)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the amounts of regional development grant in Clwyd for each year since 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been asked to reply. The information requested, which is only readily available for the financial years 1976-77 onwards, is as follows:

	£ million
1976-77	3·3
1977-78	7·4
1978-79	9·5
1979-80	4·9
1980-81	8·6
1981-82	15·8
1982-83	17·8
1983-84	12·2
1984-85	23·4
1985-86	22·8
1986-87	27·9

Expenditure in 1985-86 and 1986-87 included payments respectively of £1·5 million and £8·7 million under the revised regional development grant scheme introduced in November 1984.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department is considering a network as an alternative to his Department's participation in the Government data network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office has a number of current and future requirements for data communications, some of which are already served by networks. The proposed Government data network is one option to be considered in fulfilling each of these requirements.

Parole

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated effect on the prison population of abolishing parole for prisoners serving under (a) two and (b) three years and replacing this with supervised or conditional release after one-half and one-third of the sentence, respectively.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as shown. The estimates assume no compensatory change in sentencing practice. The effect also depends on the precise nature of the supervisory scheme and in particular the extent to which persons might be recalled to prison while under supervision. The estimates assume no offsetting increase due to such recalls or due to any additional reconvictions occurring as a result of earlier release.

Estimated reduction[1] in the England and Wales prison population[2] from replacing parole with supervised or conditional release after one-third and one-half of sentence.

Number

Sentence lengths affected	One half sentence	One third sentence
Under two years	[3] 300	5,900
Under three years	[3] 400	7,900

[1] It has been assumed that release would be contingent upon good behaviour and that, as with the existing remission scheme, offences against prison discipline would cause release to be deferred by the equivalent of 1 per cent. of sentence on average.

[2] Estimates based on statistics for 1986, adjusted to reflect the subsequent increase in remission to one half for sentences up to 12 months (August 1987). Excluding fine-defaulters, non-criminal prisoners, lifers and those prematurely released from prison whose numbers are unlikely to be affected by the scheme. Estimates rounded to nearest 100.

[3] No contribution made by sentences up to 12 months which are already eligible for remission of one half sentence.

Metropolitan Police

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of days off work sick reported for members of the Metropolitan police force for each of the last five years; and if he will express this as an average figure.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information supplied by the Metropolitan police is as follows:

[1] Year	Number of days	Average per officer
1984	292,156	10·9
1985	329,114	12·3
1986	346,135	12·8
1987	334,364	12·2

[1] Information for 1983 is not available.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley on the average time taken, from application to determination, in processing applications for firearms certificates, since December 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that this information is not available, though a rough estimate suggests that the normal procedures are completed in between two and six weeks.

Michael Ryan

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to the reasons for the speed with which Michael Ryan was granted a firearms certificate in December 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that Michael Ryan's application for a firearms certificate was received at divisional level on 25 November 1986 and on completion of the necessary inquiries a certificate was issued on 11 December. Information that the application was received on 10 December relates to the date of its receipt at headquarters, after it had been processed at divisional level.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the working group on nuclear safety established after the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the joint working group on Chernobyl which was set up jointly by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Home Department and for Scotland following representations from the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council for England and Wales and the Scottish Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council. The group is not concerned with nuclear safety generally but with the implications of Chernobyl for the fire services of Great Britain. It will in due course report to the two councils which will then advise my right hon. Friends what further action should be taken in the light of the report. The question of publication will be considered at that stage.

Nuclear Power Stations (Access)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions fire officers have been denied access to nuclear power stations to investigate a fire during the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Department does not routinely collect information of this kind. I understand, however, that two incidents were reported to the joint working group on Chernobyl but that any difficulties there may have been have been resolved.

ENVIRONMENT

Winget-type Houses

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the total numbers of Winget-type houses in each housing authority area in England where such houses exist.

Mrs. Roe: Information on the distribution of all designated dwellings by local authority was obtained in 1983 and updated in July 1986; copies of this are in the Library. Further updated information is being assembled and I shall arrange for this to be placed in the Library shortly. The following local authorities reported Winget properties in their area:

	Dwellings
Kingston-upon-Hull City Council	889
Norwich City Council	469
Wakefield City Council	1210

All but nine of these were in council ownership.

Urban Programme Schemes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will itemise, by borough, approved current urban programme schemes in Greater London which utilise Manpower Services Commission community programme placements in their operation.

Mr. Trippier: The Department does not hold the information in the form requested, but the following schemes involving community programme placements have been identified in the current inner area programmes.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details, using the most recently available figures, of how many non-domestic properties in England, Wales and Scotland paid annual rate bills of (a) less than £500, (b) less than £750 and (c) less than £1,000.

Mr. Ridley: This information is not collected centrally.

THE ARTS

Wales Railway Centre

Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he wi arrange to visit the site of the Wales railway centr Cardiff, to discuss future funding.

Mr. Luce: I have no such plans. I understand th project has received financial assistance from a number o organisations sponsored by the Secretary of State fo Wales.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of th Exchequer how much revenue was raised during the las year for which figures are available from value added ta on donations of equipment to higher educationa institutions.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that the information is no available.

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of th Exchequer on what basis value added tax on donations o equipment to higher educational establishments i calculated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Mr. Marshall) on 19 January at columns 652-53.

Growth Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual average compound growth rate in 1960 to 1969, 1970 to 1979 and 1980 to date for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) West Germany, (c) Japan, (d) France, (e) Italy and (f) Sweden.

Mr. Lilley: The figures are given in the following table:

Annual average compound growth rates[1]

	1960-69	1970-79	1980-86
United Kingdom	3·0	2·1	2·2
Germany	4·4	2·9	1·4
Japan	10·6	4·7	3·7
France	5·5	3·9	1·6
Italy	5·8	3·0	2·0
Sweden	4·4	2·0	1·6

Co-operative Retail Societies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the co-operative retail societies registered at the Registry of Friendly Societies;

(2) if he will list the trading subsidiaries of those co-operative retail societies that do not include the word co-op in their title.

Mr. Lilley: A list of the co-operative retail societies registered at the Registry of Friendly Societies has been placed in the Library. Particulars of the trading subsidiaries for all these societies could only be extracted from their annual returns at disproportionate cost. If my hon. Friend has a specific point in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

EC (Budget)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what information he has on the percentage of the annual EEC budget contributions of member states, other than the United Kingdom, which is made up from (a) value added tax contributions, (b) agricultural levies and (c) customs duties; and if he will give the figures for each of the last five years;

(2) what percentage of the United Kingdom's annual EEC budget contribution is made up from (a) value added tax contributions, (b) agricultural levies, and (c) customs duties; and if he will give the figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Brooke: Information concerning all member states' gross contributions to the EEC budget is contained in the "Official Journal of the European Communities—Court of Auditor's Report", OJ 87/C336, 15 December 1987, a copy of which is available in the Library. Table 19 of the report (on page 177) presents information on gross contributions made by individual member states for the period 1982 to 1986 inclusive, broken down into the categories requested. Similar information is contained in the annual statements on the Community budget, the most recent of which was published last July as Cm. 194.

Money Supply

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form the relationship between the rate of increase in M3 and the level of inflation 18 months later.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for the 12-month growth rates of M3 and the retail prices index are shown in the "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin", table 11.3, and the Monthly Digest of Statistics, table 18.5, respectively.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1958 the velocity of monetary circulation in the United Kingdom, the reserve ratio of the banks and the banks' holdings of (a) Treasury bills, (b) other short-dated securities and (c) other gilt-edged securities, and the level of bank advances to (i) manufacturing industry, (ii) home loans and (iii) other purposes.

Mr. Lilley: The available information is not always in the form requested, nor back to 1958. Annual information on the velocity of circulation from 1963 is given in the table. Information on reserve ratios for the period in which they were in force may be found in the "Bank of England Statistical Abstract, No. 2", the "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin" and "Financial Statistics". The most appropriate source for the other items requested is the monetary sector end-year balance sheets. These give information on outstanding levels of, inter alia, Treasury bills, British Government and Government-guaranteed securities, loans for house purchase and total bank lending. Such information as is available is contained in the appropriate tables of "Financial Statistics" or the "National Income Blue Book" or on the central databank. Information on lending to manufacturing industry is available in the "Bank of England Statistical Abstract, No.1", the "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin" and in "Financial Statistics".

Licensed Deposit Takers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of licensed deposit takers.

Mr. Lilley: The Banking Act 1987 eliminates the distinction under the Banking Act 1979 between recognised banks and licensed deposit takers. The Bank of England is required to list authorised institutions in its annual report, under the Banking Act, which is laid before Parliament. It also periodically produces updated lists of authorised institutions, and I am placing a copy of the list as at 8 January 1988 in the Library.

Small Firms (VAT)

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had in the EEC with a view to raising the level at which small firms become liable for value added tax and with what result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 19 January 1988]: The EC Sixth VAT directive restricts increases in the VAT registration threshold to those which maintain its value in real terms. Removal of this restriction would require an amendment to article 24 of the directive, which would require the unanimous approval of the member states.

In her address to the European Council in March 1985 the Prime Minister launched an initiative for deregulation to encourage the growth of small businesses. Late in 1986 the Commission produced a draft directive for small and medium-sized enterprises which proposes, among other things, a mandatory lower threshold of 10,000 ecu (about £7,000) and a higher optional threshold of 35,000 ecu (about £24,500).

The European Parliament has given general support for the draft. The United Kingdom will maintain its insistence that the optional higher threshold be no less than 35,000 ecu and will continue to argue vigorously for it to be increased. It is not possible to forecast when and in what form the directive will be adopted.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Disconnections

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of domestic electricity disconnections in Northern Ireland; and whether he has any plans to overcome this problem.

Mr. Viggers: In the 12 months to 31 December 1987 the total number of disconnections for debt in Northern Ireland was 2,439, which is less than one half of 1 per cent. of the average total number of consumers on supply.

Northern Ireland Electricity adheres to the electricity supply industry's voluntary code of practice in relation to disconnections, and as the rate of disconnections for debt has fallen in recent months no specific action is planned.

ACE Schemes

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on (a) the likely uses of the increased funding for ACE schemes in Northern Ireland and (b) the use of ACE projects in activities relating to the community care initiative.

Mr. Viggers: The ACE programme will increase from the current average level of 6,200 to 8,000 places during 1988-89. In allocating the additional places, priority will be given to projects which have the potential to create self-sustaining jobs, to those which further the development of community health and social care and to environmental measures. Special attention will also be given to projects in areas where the level of ACE provision is lower than the local incidence of long-term adult unemployment would warrant. Four hundred of the additional places have been specifically allocated to support the Northern Ireland 2000 programme, which seeks to provide more and higher quality environmental projects.

Sympathetic consideration is always given to proposals from sponsors seeking places for community care activities. Approximately 30 per cent. of ACE scheme places currently support such activities.

Kilroot Power Station

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the expected completion date of the Kilroot power station.

Mr. Viggers: Northern Ireland Electricity expects to complete the conversion of phase I of the Kilroot power station to dual coal-oil firing by July 1989. The first of the two generating sets undergoing conversion should be operational by the end of January 1989.

Hospital Beds

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland will encourage health boards to conduct audits of beds available at 12 noon on each day; what information he has as to the likely information to be gained from this, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Under the current arrangem information on daily bed availability is already colle in each hospital, summaries of which are provide boards to the Department of Health and Social Serv This count of bed availability is measured at midnight day.

Information derived from this source prov indicators for measurement of performance and ena the continuous monitoring of levels of service provid

Industrial Pollution

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of S for Northern Ireland if, in the light of recent inciden Carrickfergus and elsewhere, he is satisfied that there adequate measures and supervision to control indus pollution in the Province; and if he will make a statem

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 January 1988]: they are broadly in line with those which apply elsew in the United Kingdom. The resources required supervise the control of industrial pollution are kept u regular review.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAI

Israel

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now inst Her Majesty's ambassador to the United Nations to against the resolution which demands that Israel de from the removal from camps and the resettlemen Palestinian refugees in the Gaza strip.

Mr. Mellor: No. Israeli policy in the occu territories has involved unacceptable pressure Palestinian refugees to move against their will, and forced demolition of their shelters. We and overwhelming majority of the international commu oppose this.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Standing Committees

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Lord President of Council if he has anything to add to his answer of January, Official Report, column 486, regarding membership of Scottish Standing Committees; and i will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to pursuant answer to that question on Wednesday January, at column 740.

Parliamentary Salaries

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Lord Privy Seal w information he posseses on comparable parliament salaries exclusive of allowances in (a) the Uni Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Australia (e) the United States of America, for the latest publis figures available.

Mr. Wakeham [holding answer 19 January 1988]: information requested is as follows:

Country	Salary (per annum)
United Kingdom
Member of the House of Commons	Basic salary of £22,548. Maximum salary of £23,614 for those who draw the London allowance of £1,066 per annum, which is taxable. Whole of salary taxable.
France
Deputy in the National Assembly	410,634 Fr (£40,863) of which 45 per cent. 184,785 Fr (£18,388) is tax-free
Federal German Republic
Member of the Bundestag	DM 104,748 (£35,166). All taxable
Australia
Federal Member of the House of Representatives	A$ 46,065 (£18,326). All taxable.
United States of America
Member of the House of Representatives	US$ 89,500 (£49,958). All taxable.

Note: The sterling figures are calculated using rates of exchange at the close of business on Wednesday 20 January.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Beds

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will encourage health boards to conduct audits of beds available at 12 noon on each day; what information he has as to the likely information to be gained from this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The "bed count" is taken at midnight because at that time there is the least amount of patient movement and greater statistical accuracy is assured. A count at midday would disrupt the work of the ward and be a less accurate reflection of ward work. The information derived from the bed count is published in "Scottish Health Statistics," copies of which are held in the Library.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will revise the guidance to local authorities concerning homeless persons which is given under section 37 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Although the code of guidance has been well received generally I am aware from voluntary organisations in the field that some revision of the code might be desirable. I have asked for details of proposed amendments and when these are received I shall consider the position further.

The very difficult problems which can arise when dealing with homeless people call for the exercise of good housing management and close co-operation between all agencies involved. We are committed for our part to maintaining an effective legislative framework to help the homeless.

Local Authorities (Staff)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the most recent available figure for the total number of persons employed on a full-time basis, or full-time equivalent, by regional, islands and district councils in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1987]: This information is published quarterly in the "Joint Manpower Watch Survey", which is available in the Library of the House. The most recent figures available are for June 1987.

PRIME MINISTER

Hospital Services (Oswestry)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister whether she is satisfied with the co-ordination between the Welsh Office and the Department of Health and Social Security with regard to the services provided by the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt orthopaedic hospital at Oswestry; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. I assume the hon. Member's question relates to the recent decision of the Shropshire health authority to close a number of beds temporarily at this hospital. Health authorities are not obliged to consult over temporary closures, but should the authority decide to make a temporary closure permanent there is a set consultation procedure to follow. The Welsh Office together with local community health councils would be consulted formally.

Crown Employees

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister whether all persons in public service who are paid from moneys supplied under Votes by Parliament are treated as employees of the Crown for all (a) legal, (b) pensions and (c) other purposes.

The Prime Minister: Civil Servants, including those whose salaries are borne directly on Votes, are regarded as servants of the Crown for all relevant purposes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will introduce legislation to render all persons in public service who are paid from moneys supplied under Votes by Parliament and who are employees of the Crown liable to prosecution under the criminal law where they are alleged to have committed criminal acts.

The Prime Minister: No. Employees of the Crown are not exempt from the criminal law.

WALES

Privatisation

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by each Welsh local authority, each service which has been privatised or put out to tender and the savings which have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: All local authorities in Wales have complied with the competition regulations introduced under part III of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and put out to tender as appropriate highways and sewerage work, new building works, new works and maintenance work. The Local Government Bill currently in the House of Lords will extend compulsory competition to refuse collection/street cleaning, building cleaning, school/welfare catering, other catering, vehicle maintenance and ground maintenance. In addition, the Government are considering extending competition to the management of local authority sport and leisure facilities.

Information on the savings made is not held centrally. However, from time to time selective information on savings is published in the Local Government Chronicle and the "Public Service Review".

Neonatal Units (Staffing)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each year since 1976, for each neonatal unit in Wales (a) the number of sister posts, (b) the number of staff nurses or staff midwives, (c) the number of support nursing staff, including nursery nurses and nursing auxiliaries and (d) the number of medical staff with specific commitment to neonates.

Mr. Grist: Data on hospital midwifery staff, analysed by district health authority, are available annually in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales", copies of which are in the Library of the House. Detailed information on specific areas of work is not yet sufficiently reliable for the Department to give accurate staffing figures for each neonatal unit. Information on medical staff with a specific commitment to neonates is not held centrally.

Free Milk

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, how many children under five years of age and cared for by registered childminders are currently in receipt of free milk; and how many childminders are involved.

Mr. Grist: There were 5,571 places with 2,361 registered childminders in Wales at 31 March 1987. Information is not available centrally on the number and age of children using these places or on the number of children in receipt of free milk.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Sadds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, with respect to the 15th report of Session 1986-87 from the Committee of Public Accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor General's memorandum on the National Museum of Wales, and the agreement obtained in June 1979 from the Treasury for the purchase by instal the Rubens cartoons to be spread over three yea reservations concerning these cartoons were voice Department at the time that its agreement was o

Oswestry Orthopaedic Hospital

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the appropriate authorities with regard to the problems at the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt orthopaedic hospital at Oswestry; and if he is satisfied that this hospital is at present being run in a way which meets the needs of patients from Wales who depend upon it.

Mr. Grist: Officials of the Department are in touch with appropriate health authorities about the problems at the Robert Jones and Agnes Hunt orthopaedic hospital. The current closures are of a temporary nature and hence a matter for the Shropshire health authority. Shropshire health authority has undertaken to consult the Department, Welsh health authorities and other Welsh interests about any proposals for substantial permanent variation in the service provided at the hospital.

Winget-type Houses

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the total numbers of Winget-type houses in each housing authority area in Wales where such houses exist.

Mr. Grist: We have no record of any Winget houses in Wales.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to intensify his Department's monitoring on the state of the ambulance services in each part of Wales; whether he will review the procedure used for these purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Responsibility for the management and operation of the ambulance services in Wales is that of the district health authorities. I am satisfied with the Deparment's existing arrangements for issuing guidance and for monitoring its implementation.

Library Authority (Newport)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce a decision on Newport borough council's application of 1984 to be designated a library authority under the provisions of the Local Government Bill 1972.

Mr. Grist: I expect to be able to do so shortly.

Hospital Closure Procedure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wal pursuant to his answer of 18 January on hospital clo procedure, he will now undertake to review consultative documents issued by Gwynedd he authority on the future of (a) Mudog memorial hosp (b) Caernarfon cottage hospital and (c) the care facil for the elderly in Llangefni, with a view to determi whether these documents are prejudicial to pr consultation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: If the hon. Gentleman is concerned al the adequacy of the Gwynedd health author consultation documents on the future of these he services he should in the first instance bring this to attention of the authority. If, following such an appro his concern about the documents persisted we woul prepared to consider his representations.

Greencroft Hostel, Aston

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State Wales what representations he has received regarding implications of the closure of the Greencroft hostel, As Deeside, for the standard of living and opportunit enjoy communal social life of residents and their fami and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: None. I refer the hon. Gentleman to answer I gave to him yesterday, at colum 821, on subject.

Higher Education

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State Wales if he is able to announce his decisions on l authority higher education provision in 1988-89; and i will make a statement.

Mr. Peter W[illegible]er: Having consulted the Welsh J Education Committee and the Welsh Counties Commi I have decided that the advanced further educa quantum for 1988-89 should be set at £36·6 million. T represents a 7·3 per cent. increase between 1987-88 1988-89. I have decided that £400,000 of the quan should be used to fund the following selective initiati
Continuation of support provided in 1987-88 for development of in-service training courses to increase supply of Welsh medium secondary school teachers and the development of commercial activities and professi updating (PICKUP) courses.
Development of a manufacturing systems engineering de course at the Polytechnic of Wales.

Development of an engineering access course at the Polytechnic of Wales.
Support for research activities at the North East Wales Institute of HE and the Polytechnic of Wales.

I have received advice from the Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education on the planned disposition of academic provision and the number of student places on higher education courses in local authority colleges in Wales. The WAB proposals provide for a growth of 1 per cent. between estimated enrolments of 13,498 full-time equivalents in 1987-88 and target student numbers of 13,589 for 1988-89. The proposals provide for continued emphasis to be given to courses in science, engineering and other vocational disciplines; and for sub degree and part-time provision to be protected.

The WAB has also provided advice on how the AFE quantum, net of the £400,000 for selective initiatives, should be distributed between local authorities. The proposals for distributing the quantum are related to the proposals for target student numbers for 1988-89 by institution, mode of attendance and subject; and they allow additional funding for degree and post-graduate courses. WAB have recommended that Dyfed should continue to receive some cash protection for 1988-89 in respect of the College of Librarianship Wales. WAB has considered bids from institutions against the £400,000 set aside for selective initiatives and has provided advice on how this sum should be allocated.

I have decided to accept the WAB's advice on academic provision and student numbers, on the methodology for distributing the net quantum and on the distribution of the £400,000 for selective initiatives. The local education authorities have been informed of these decisions and of their individual allocations.

Copies of a note explaining the methodology by which the AFE quantum for 1988-89 is being distributed have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Non-Civil Servant Advisers

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list his non-civil servant advisers, giving their present main employment and their field of expertise.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 21 January 1988]: I have no special adviser.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Council for Licensed Conveyancers

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what have been the costs under convenient headings, and in total, of the Council for Licensed Conveyancers since its inception.

The Attorney-General: The expenses of the Council for Licensed Conveyancers for the 15 months from its inception to 31 March 1987 extracted from the audited accounts for that period are as follows:

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of Sta how many workers at the British N reprocessing plant at Sellafield have exceede radiation at which an investigation has to b whether any of them is entitled to apply for c what plans Her Majesty's Government ha the safety of such workers; and if he will mak

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have asked the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc to reply to the detailed questions raised by the hon. Member.

BNF plc, like any other licensed nuclear operator, must continue to meet the requirements of the independent Health and Safety Executive. Good progress has been made in meeting those requirements specified in HSE's initial audit report on the implementation of safety changes at Sellafield.

Windscale Fire

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the implications for current nuclear policy of the new information released under the 30-year rule on the 1957 Windscale fire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest release of records included no information on the causes or effects of the fire that was not already in the public domain.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what transmission line developments are to be made in association with the proposed Hinkley C and Hinkley D station developments; and what visual impact these would have.

Mr. Michael Spicer: An application has been received from the CEGB for the Secretary of State's consent under paragraph 10(b) of the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act 1899 for minor diversion of the transmission line entries to Hinkley point. The local planning authorities have objected to the proposal and it will therefore be necessary to hold a public inquiry into the matter.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received an application for a pressurised water reactor power station at Helbury, Dorset.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the estimates of radioactive emissions from (a) pressurised water reactors (b) advanced gas cooled reactors and (c) Magnox reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of radioactive emissions from nuclear power stations are published by licensed operators as follows:

CEGB: "Report on Radioactive Discharges, Associated Environmental Monitoring and Personal Radiation Doses Resulting from Operation of CEGB Nuclear Sites."
BNF plc: "Annual Report on Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment."

I am arranging for a copy of the CEGB report to be placed in the Library of the House. A copy of the BNF report is already in the Library.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the estimated numbers of households not connected to the electricity grid in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales; what are the comparable figures in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1973; and what measures exist to enable households to become connected to the grid.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Council advises me that the electricity supply industry does not have these figures. Electricity boards are required to make available to premises situated within 50 yd of a distribution main. Beyond this distance boards can arrange connection for an appropriate payment. In some circumstances it is possible to requisition a board to provide a distribution main to enable connection to be made.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he is in a position to announce his decision on the future role of the Energy Efficiency Office.

Mr. Peter Morrison: On 25 September I said that I intended to take stock of the Energy Efficiency Office programmes, to assess their cost-effectiveness, their continuing relevance and to consider the strategic objectives for the future. This I have now done, and conclude that there is a continuing role for the EEO to fund programmes, especially in the industrial and commercial sectors, continue to benefit the United Kingdom by improving energy efficiency, which is reflected in both export competitiveness and profits. In the domestic sector the EEO's activities promote the economic and energy efficient construction, insulation, heating and use of the nation's housing stock. Accordingly, I plan no change in the EEO's 1988-89 budget of £20·9 million.

However, general awareness of the case for energy efficiency is now well established and I have therefore asked the EEO to target its work in the most economically attractive areas. Moreover, I have also asked the EEO to examine how the contribution from those who benefit from the office's industrial and commercial programmes could be increased, including the feasibility of applying those programmes where appropriate to recover more of their costs, and the extent to which programmes could be taken over for operation by the private sector. Developments on both counts will be taken into account when the 1989-90 budget is finalised and I am committed to extending the present level of activity beyond 1988-89.

The EEO will shortly begin consultations with those concerned and I hope to announce the result of this review of its work before the summer recess.

Radiation (Research Study)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what evaluation he proposes to make of the implications of the radiation effects research foundation study report at the end of 1987 with particular reference to the implications for (a) the economics of nuclear power programme in the United Kingdom and (b) standards of radiological protection for workers in the United Kingdom nuclear industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The study by the Radiation Effects Research Foundation — "The Effect of Changing Dosimetry on Cancer Mortality Risk Estimates for Hiroshima Atomic Bomb Survivors"—was taken fully into account by the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) when issuing its GS-9 document, "Interim Guidance on the Implications of Recent Revisions of Risk Estimates and the ICRP 1987 Como Statement".

The implications of the NRPB's interim guidance statement are being considered by a working group which is advising the Health and Safety Commission.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has had any discussions with (a) the Central Electricity Generating Board and (b) the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate with regard to the implications for emergency services and health services in Wales of the proposed emergency shutdown experiment at the Trawsfynydd nuclear power station scheduled for 12 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on Thursday 21 January 1988 at column 856.

SOCIAL SERVICES

London Lighthouse

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial assistance he has given to London Lighthouse.

Mr. Newton: The Government intend to make a further grant of £750,000 towards the capital costs of London Lighthouse the West London hospice and community support centre for people with AIDS.

The London Lighthouse centre will provide much-needed community support and hospice care for people with AIDS. The Lighthouse has caught the imagination of many people, and has done extremely well to attract funds from so many sources.

The Government have already approved a grant of £500,000 towards the costs of the premises. This additional £750,000 will bring the total Government contribution to £1·25 million. This should enable London Lighthouse to open on time with its finances on a firm footing.

NHS Statistics

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will set out a table for England and Wales showing for (a) 1961 and (b) the most recent available date (i) numbers employed in the National Health Service and (ii) the number of hospital beds available to the general public;

(2) if he will set out a table showing the numbers employed in the National Health Service in England and Wales in (a) 1961 and (b) the most recent available date; and if he will list the population of England and Wales at the same dates.

Mr. Newton: The available information for England is given in the table. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Cold-related Deaths

Mr Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers by deaths by hypothermia and other cold-related complaints in the Seaham and Peterlee areas of his Department.

Mrs. Currie: The number of mentions of hypothermia on death certificates, irrespective of whether or not it was the underlying cause of death, registered for usual residents of Easington county district was one in 1986, which is the latest full year for which data are available.

Hospital Beds

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department will encourage health authorities to conduct audits of beds available at 12 noon on each day; what information he has as to the likely information to be gained from this; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. It is for health authorities to decide how best to monitor available beds each day. I do not consider any useful additional information would be obtained from specifying the time at which this should be done.

Social Fund Officers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what grade social fund officers will be given within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund officers will be employed from existing grades of DHSS staff. They will be staff at the local officer 1 grade, higher executive officer grade and local office managers. The local officer 1 grade is the main grade at which decisions on applications to will be made. There will in addition b administrative support provided by officers and administration assistants.

Genetic Metabolic Diseases

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of S Services what representations he has receiv for recognition of a supraregional servi metabolic diseases; what is the Governmen regard to the funding of the work undert hospital after next April; and if he will mak

Mrs. Currie: A number of representati made concerning the application for designation of the services for genetic met at Guy's hospital. An application was con Supraregional Services Advisory Group in hon. Friend accepted the advice of the advis the service did not meet the criteria for designation.

A further application for designation o will be considered by the advisory group t

The funding of the service continues to the health authority.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of S Services if he has any plans to make extra for kidney dialysis in 1988-89 in the Birm area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Decisions on the levels of seven renal units in the west midlands are a West Midlands regional health author

Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of that authority for further information. For our part we will be allocating some £1·21 billion to the west midlands health region in 1988-89 which represents a 6·7 per cent. increase over the current year.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates he has made of the savings to his Department by the introduction of the restricted list of medicines that can be prescribed by general practitioners under the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: In 1985-86 the selected list scheme saved £75 million on the drugs bill. It is difficult to make meaningful estimates for subsequent years, but we have no reason to doubt that significant savings continue to be made.

Oxford Regional Health Authority

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual administrative cost of the Oxford regional health authority, for the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 15 December at columns 493-95.

Leicestershire FPC

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in the Official Report in tabular form the resources made available for the last two financial years, and planned for the next financial year, to the Leicestershire family practitioner committee for the discharge of its functions.

Mr. Newton: The financial allocations made to cover administration costs incurred by the Leicestershire family practitioner committee were £810,100 in 1986-87 and, to date, £766,500 in 1987-88. The former figure includes non-recurring expenditure relating to a move to new premises, and the latter reflects the value of efficiency savings after the installation of computer facilities. The family practitioner committee has been informed of our willingness to increase this year's allocation by about £27,000.

Guardians Ad Litem

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the rate support grant allocated for the current year to Leeds, Calderdale and Bradford was to allow for increased expenditure on guardians ad litem; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Rate support grant is not paid in support of specified individual local authority services. Each authority is free to determine its own priorities between and within services. On provision for guardians ad litem, the position remains as set out in my letter of 1 December 1987 to the chairman of the City of Bradford metropolitan council, a copy of which was sent to the hon. Member.

Hospitals (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the hospitals and services proposed by Bradford health authority for closure or reduction in the Bradford area; what representations have been made by the authority chairman for increased funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Bradford health authority is responsible for managing services in Bradford and I suggest that the hon. Member approach the chairman for details of any planned changes. I have received no representation about funding from the Bradford health authority chairman.

Special Payments

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to the statement made on 18 December 1987 about special payments to certain social security recipients following the discovery of the error in the calculation of the retail price index, what plans he has to compensate people who retire or become widowed between the time the special payments are made, in the first week of February and April 1989.

Mr. Scott: In the case of individuals whose benefits become payable after the special payments are made in the first week in February, we have decided not only to compensate those who retire or become widowed, but to make payments to broadly the same additional groups as received the £8/£5 special payments. The only exceptions will be those who have not lost as a result of the error in the retail prices index: married women with retirement pensions based on their husbands' national insurance records, and those people who receive invalid care allowance, severe disablement allowance or the lower rate of attendance allowance.

Pensioners and others who enter after the first week in February one of the groups covered by the £8 special payments will receive a special payment of £5·50. In respect of mobility allowance, the special payment will be £3. We will aim to make these payments as soon as practicable after individuals come on to benefit.

There will be a cut-off point beyond which individuals entering the affected groups will not be eligible to receive special payments. This point will be the benefit week which ends on 2 October.

Special arrangements will be made to give extra compensation to severely disabled war and industrially injured pensioners who will lose significantly more than other groups.

AIDS

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will respond to the report by the Select Committee on social services problems associated with AIDS.

Mr. Moore: I have today presented to the House the Government's observations on the report from the Social Services Committee on problems associated with AIDS. The committee's report provides a valuable focus on the issues raised by HIV infection and AIDS, and the Government's response sets out the strategy which they have adopted to meet the challenge of AIDS.

DEFENCE

UK-USA (Special Arrangements)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the dates of all agreements relevant to his Department and United Kingdom forces between the United Kingdom and the United States of America relating to special arrangements.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the lists of bilateral agreements between the United Kingdom and United States Governments in the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 7 May 1987 at columns 532-34, and to my reply to him on 2 December 1987 at column 593 about the special arrangements covering nuclear accident response issues, whose details remain classified.

Military Uniforms (Unauthorised Supply)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will introduce legislation to provide controls over the unauthorised supply of British armed forces military uniforms by private arms dealers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what evidence he has of the incidence of the unauthorised supply of British Army uniforms by private arms dealers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will write to the hon. Member.

National Trust Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has received from the National Trust to his request for permission to erect military installations on National Trust land in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The MOD approached the National Trust last year in relation to two projects connected with the upgrading of tracking and safety facilities for the Royal Aircraft Establishment Aberporth range in Cardigan bay. One project requires the provision of a mast and instrumentation system to cover the northern area of the range and, for this purpose, the MOD sought to lease a small area of National Trust land at Mynydd Rhiw. The second project involves the modernisation of a number of existing tracking stations around the bay. The MOD approached the National Trust about improvements to the access to two of these sites which adjoin National Trust land and about safety aspects of a third site. The National Trust turned down the Ministry's proposals just before Christmas and we are now considering this in relation to our plans for the development of the range.

SS Castillion

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps his Department will take to ensure that all explosives are removed from the SS Castillion which sank off Ynys Môn in 1942; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The practicalities of resuming the clearance task later this year are being considered.

Trident

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate for the cost of Trident.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 21 January.

Employment (Suppliers)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of those directly and indirectly employed in the United Kingdom providing goods and services to his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest figures available are for 1985-86, when it was estimated that 285,000 people were directly and 230,000 indirectly employed in United Kingdom industry providing goods and services to the Ministry of Defence. Estimates for 1986-87 should be available in the next two months.

Nerve Gases

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints or representations he has received from service men or women or their representatives about ill effects following the testing of nerve gases or other chemicals upon them; whether any compensation has been paid or is being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the last 10 years there have been 15 inquiries from service men or women or their representatives concerning the testing of nerve gases or other chemicals upon them, none of which have resulted in any claims being made.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the recent non-stop flight from Britain to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As part of an operational training exercise, an RAF VC10 flew non-stop from RAF Brize Norton to the Falkland Islands, leaving on 19 December 1987, and then returned non-stop. The aircraft was air-to-air refuelled both southbound and northbound. The direct operating cost was £140,000, all of which fell within the budget for the agreed flying activity levels for the RAF.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research his Department has carried out into verification of chemical weaponry.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Research is carried out at the chemical defence establishment into the detection and identification of chemical warfare agents. This work is part of the United Kingdom's programme to provide effective measures of protection for United Kingdom forces, and is also relevant to the development of methods and procedures to provide effective verification of a CW ban. In addition, the United Kingdom has contributed significantly to the thinking of the conference on disarmament on verification, for example, in the development of the concept of challenge inspection.

NATO Nuclear Planning Group

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what matters he intends to raise at the next North Atlantic Treaty Organisation nuclear planning group meeting.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It would not be approprate for me to say; the details of nuclear planning group discussions are confidential.

China

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to meet his counterpart from the People's Republic of China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart; Defence relations between the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China are good. My right hon. Friend does not, however, have any immediate plans to meet Mr. Zhang Aiping.

Low-Flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are provided to United States Army helicopter units based in the Federal Republic of Germany to conduct low-level pilot qualification exercises in the United Kingdom; on how many occasions such facilities have been utilised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom provides facilities for training by helicopter aircrew of the United States in a variety of ways, including, on occasion, the use of the United Kingdom low-flying system for training purposes by aircrew based in the Federal Republic of Germany. Detailed records of such usage are not maintained, but my Department is not aware of any occasion during 1987 when such usage included low-level pilot qualification exercises.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what procedures exist to permit military aircrew to report their own breaches of low-flying regulations to the relevant authorities;

(2) how many breaches of low-flying regulations were reported to the relevant authorities by the aircrew involved in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Freeman: It is standard procedure for aircrew to debrief, normally to their authorising officer, on all aspects of a training sortie in order to confirm that the requirements of a sortie have been met. The debrief provides the opportunity for the aircrew to report any difficulties encountered during the sortie, including breaches of low-flying regulations. If a breach of the regulations were sufficiently serious it would be reported to relevant authorities, otherwise the matter would be dealt with at station level. Central records of breaches reported during the debrief sessions are not held.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many confirmed breaches of low flying regulations in each year since 1974 were caused by negligence on the part of aircrew.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested cannot be provided without disproportionate effort.

Holsworthy (Exercises)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defenc (1) what minimum separation distance was authorised fo fixed wing aircraft participation in the exercise held in th vicinity of Holsworthy, Devon, on 11 and 12 July 1987 (2) what minimum separation distance was authorised fo fixed wing aircraft participating in the no light exercis held in the vicinity of Perranporth and Mullion, Cornwal from 10 to 16 October 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The minimum separation distanc authorised was 250 ft.

Tactical Fighter Exercise

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defenc if a tactical fighter meet exercise is to be held in the Unite Kingdom in the current year; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Freeman: No such exercise is planned.

Decimomannu Range, Sardinia

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defenc what is the minimum height at which Royal Air Forc aircraft are permitted to fly over land at the Decimomann range in Sardinia.

Mr. Freeman: RAF aircraft on temporary detachmen to Decimomannu in Sardinia for training purposes mak use of the air to ground range at Capo della Frasca. It i standard procedure that, in the course of that training RAF aircraft on the range are not authorised to fly belo 85 ft above ground level.

Copper Flag Exercises

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defenc if he will list Royal Air Force participation in Copper Fla exercises in the United States since 1977, giving th number and type of aircraft involved and dates of th exercise on each occasion.

Mr. Freeman: The Royal Air Force has participate once in a Copper Flag exercise, which took place from 1 to 25 July 1986. Eight Phantom aircraft were involved.

Nuclear Weapon Tests

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defenc pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Davyhulm of 18 January, when he received the initial report of th National Radiological Protection Board into the mortalit and cancer incidence in the United Kingdom participant in the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon test and experimental programmes.

Mr. Sainsbury: My hon. Friend is presumably referrin to a preliminary draft of the report which the NRPB plan to publish towards the end of this month. This draft wa sent to the Department and others in late December fo comment on factual accuracy.

Bates Project

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of Stat for Defence whether the contractor providing software fo the Bates project has been changed since the contract wa originally let in 1981.

Mr. Sainsbury: Bates as a project has always been managed on a prime contractor basis with numerous subcontracts for various elements. Marconi Command and Control Systems (MCCS) employed subcontractors on the development of the software. However, since 1985 MCCS has increasingly taken on this work itself.

RAVC, Melton Mowbray

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether horses in the ownership or control of the Royal Army Veterinary Corps at Melton Mowbray are used for foxhunting purposes.

Mr. Freeman: Seven horses held on the strength of the RAVC centre, Melton Mowbray, have been used in fox hunts this season.

M16 and SA 80 Rifles

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations other than price influence the Government decisions on the procurement of either M16 or SA 80 rifles.

Mr. Sainsbury: Whilst price is of major importance in any value-for-money assessment, the Department also makes an analysis in detail of the performance characteristics of alternative weapons against the user's requirements before any decision is taken on a particular purchase.

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria have been used in the course of demountable rack off-loading pick-up systems/RTE procurements (a) for deciding whether to pursue trial equipments in preference to off-the-shelf equipments and (b) in deciding to whom to permit participation in the second round of procurement trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Following the initial DROPS evaluation trials in 1984-85, it was decided that the Department's production requirement for DROPS RTE equipment should be the subject of a full open competition to determine best value for money. As a consequence, the contract was awarded to Arbau Klaus in November 1987. Further RTE trials will be limited to pre-production evaluation and validation.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what respective numbers of the two types of demountable rack off-loading pick-up system trailer are now envisaged; what factors persuaded him of the advantages of a proliferation of types; to what extent the latter procurement is (a) to meet a new requirement not foreseen in 1982 and (b) to fulfil a role the previously selected trailers have proved unable to fulfil by virtue of not being manoeuvrable or operable by one man; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent announcements he has made to industry on forthcoming competition for a further substantial procurement of demountable rack off-loading pick-up system trailers; what will the relationship of such procurement be to the original 1982 demountable rack off-loading pick-up low mobility requirements in respect of manoeuvrability and one-man operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: As a result of the 1982-83 DROPS competition and subsequent trials, an order is already in hand to provide 295 trailers for the low mobility roles and requirements for DROPS operation in rear zones. A requirement for some 209 trailers has since been identified for the improved low mobility roles specific to DROPS support of the multi-launch rocket system. In addition to their timings the trailer requirements are distinct in calling for equipment of significantly different performance characteristics. No question of proliferation thus arises. The MLRS requirements were announced in the "Contracts Bulletin" on 28 October 1987 and were presented to interested firms at a conference on 29 November 1987. Tender invitations are now in the process of preparation.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies and equipment were selected in 1983 for rail transfer equipment trials following the original demountable rack off-loading pick-up system/CLOTS submissions from industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Ralph Blatchford and Co Ltd and EKA Ltd.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the off-the-shelf German rail transfer equipment now ordered meets the original specification published in the 1982 demountable rack off-loading pick-up system/CLOTS tender documents; whether he has changed the specifications required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: The original performance requirements specified have not changed in significant regards although the engineering specifications for the supply of equipment are now more refined and detailed. The ordered equipments meet all essential requirements other than in regard to minimum clearance of overhead power cables and full ability to operate at different step heights.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on equipment, development and trials of the aborted design of rail transfer equipment for demountable rack off-loading pick-up systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: Costs of providing and supporting RTE equipment for the 1984-85 DROPS trials were some £500,000. Trials costs cannot be separately identified.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision he has reached on further use of the rail transfer equipment for demountable rack off-loading pick-up system flatracks selected in 1983 for trials; what consideration is being given to off-the-shelf German equipment used by the Army for concept trials in 1979-80; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No final decision has been reached on the further use or disposal of the RTE trials equipment evaluated in 1984-85. The Department is currently giving no procurement consideration to German equipment used in concept trials in 1979-80.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the likely costs resulting from the failure of the medium mobility demountable rack off-loading pick-up system truck to meet its specifications; and by whom these costs will ultimately be borne; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what effect the problems of the medium mobility demountable rack off-loading pick-up system truck will have on the in-service date of this equipment; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if redesign will be required to remedy serious instability of the medium mobility demountable rack off-loading pick-up system truck; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement on the failure of trials involving a cross-country demountable rack off-loading pick-up system truck turning over on hard level ground; whether any injuries resulted from this failure; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will provide further details on the failure of the demountable rack off-loading pick-up systems truck during trials at the Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: In the course of handling trials on 17 November at RARDE Chertsey a fully loaded medium mobility DROPS pre-production validation vehicle toppled over on to its side whilst executing a figure of eight manoeuvre on the slip bed, causing slight leg injuries to its civilian driver. The vehicle is one of 12 medium mobility and seven improved mobility vehicles commissioned for the trials: three medium mobility vehicles had previously completed the manoeuvre without mishap. Further examinations by the Department's project and engineering staff in association with the main contractor for the vehicles have indicated that the incident resulted from the fitting of a larger pattern of road wheel to provide enhanced off-road mobility in the vehicle for validation purposes.

In the normal way the trials experience is to result in a number of detailed modifications involving the fitting of smaller wheels and other minor engineering changes. Accurate estimates are not yet available but the Department's modification costs are not expected to be substantial and will be contained within the approved programme limits. Major redesign work will not be involved and the vehicles are continuing to undergo their validation trials. The incident is not expected to have any major adverse affect upon the continuation of the DROPS programme or the in-service date of the vehicles.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in view of the closure of Scamell's plant at Watford and the departure of Multilift's chief design engineer, he is satisfied that sufficient design expertise will continue to be available to ensure that the redesign of the demountable rack off-loading pick-up system trucks will be successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: There is no requirement to redesign DROPS equipment. Therefore, the question does not arise.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what lessons have been learnt from the procurement of DROPS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1988]: DROPS procurement is still proceeding and will not be complete for some years. None the less the programme has demonstrated how the widest possible competitive approach to industry based upon a performance specification can achieve real value for money solutions and at the same time avoid unnecessary research and development costs for the taxpayer. It has also demonstrated the importance of full internal recording of all procurement assessment considerations and processes.

TRANSPORT

A20 (Improvements)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria were used in deciding to impose a 50 mph speed limit on the latest major A20 road improvements; and what discussions he has had with the police regarding the resources necessary to enforce this.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first two kilometres of the recently completed improvement to the A20 Sidcup bypass have a speed limit of 70 mph. The 50 mph speed limit on the urban section of the bypass was imposed to increase safety through the interchanges at Crittal's corner and Frognall corner and to reduce the speed of traffic approaching the sharp bend at Kemnal corner which has a speed limit of 40 mph.

Discussions were held with the police before the speed limits were imposed. I understand that they have the necessary resources to enforce them.

Motorways (Hunting)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 360, relating to hunting adjacent to motorways, he has received any response from the Fell Hounds Association; and if he will place relevant papers in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Early-morning Flight

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what aircraft passed over central London at 5.25 am on Sunday 17 January en route for Heathrow; what height it was flying; what was the maximum height at which it could have flown while still landing at Heathrow safely; and if he will, following his review of aircraft noise, ban such flights in future.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The aircraft was a Gulf Air Tristar.

I shall draw the request for height information to the attention of the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority and I shall ask him to write to my right hon. Friend.

We are still considering the responses to the proposals for future night restrictions at Heathrow which my noble Friend has discussed with the right hon. Member. The consultation document made it clear that we do not propose to ban flights arriving at Heathrow at this hour but we shall continue to restrict the total numbers of night movements.

Park and Ride (Cambridge)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the grounds on which his Department has refused to accept for transport supplementary grant in 1988-89 the Cambridge park and ride scheme proposed by Cambridgeshire county council and Cambridge city council; what alternative proposals for relieving congestion will attract support from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: TSG is intended to support capital improvements and traffic management measures on local roads which carry substantial flows of longer distance through traffic. The benefits from a park-and-ride scheme would be local in character. The scheme did not satisfy the criteria for TSG which are set out in the Department's circular 1/87; there is a copy in the Library. The responsibility for relieving local congestion rests with the local authorities to whom rate support grant is available.

New Railway Stations

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about plans to open new railway stations in Scotland in 1988, 1989, and 1990; and at what locations.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that British Rail is planning to open new stations at Musselburgh in 1988 or 1989, and at Wallyford in 1989.

It is also considering the recommendation of the Strathclyde rail review about stations on the rail network managed by Strathclyde passenger transport executive.

Rail Crash, Colwich (Report)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish his inspector's report on the rail crash which occurred at Colwich, Staffordshire, in September 1986; what is the reason for the delay; and what steps officials of his Department have taken to inform the widow of the train driver killed in the crash of the date of publication.

Mr. David Mitchell: The report on the inquiry into the collision between two express passenger trains at Colwich junction is in its final draft stage and will be published with the minimum delay as soon as essential consultations have been completed. The delay in publication is due to the extensive technical investigations that have to be carried out. The widow's son and her solicitor have been kept informed as to the progress of the report. The family will be informed in advance of the date of publication and arrangements have been made to send them a copy of the report.

School Transport

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the incidence of injuries to, and deaths of children being conveyed in vehicles to or from school.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of deaths, serious injuries and slight injuries to children conveyed in vehicles to or from school is given in the table.

Child casualties in vehicles including family cars travelling to or from school: by severity: Great Britain: 1982 to 1986.

Year	Fatal	Serious	Slight	All
1982	10	168	1,195	1,373
1983	3	142	1,092	1,237
1984	6	184	1,322	1,512
1985	5	157	1,327	1,489
1986	7	129	1,372	1,508

Cannibalised Cars

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in discussions with local authorities to extend the protection of the public from the sale of cannibalised cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs and I discussed the sale of unroadworthy cars with the Director General of Fair Trading, local authority, motor trade and consumer organisations on 15 December 1987. We are working with the Office of Fair Trading and the other organisations on the possible extension of trading standards officers' powers to inspect cars on garage forecourts. The repair of accident-damaged cars has been considered by a working party set up by the Association of Chief Police Officers, whose report I look forward to seeing. Buyers of second-hand cars would be well advised to arrange a pre-sale inspection.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the ACTRAM committee of the International Atomic Energy Agency on nuclear material transport and security with regard to the obligations discharged by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: ACTRAM is an independent body appointed to advise the Secretary of State for Transport and the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission on major issues relating to the safe transport of radioactive materials. It has no connection with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

ACTRAM's first report ("Transport of Radioactive Materials for Medical and Industrial Use") was published earlier this month. A copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

A second report, dealing with quality assurance and compliance assurance arrangements for the United Kingdom regulations covering the transport of radioactive materials, is expected to be published in the spring.

Cabotage

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the potential implications for the competitiveness of the road transport industry when EEC rules on cabotage come into force in the United Kingdom, with specific reference to the differing safety standards applicable in the road transport and cabotage industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A recent study on the impact of cabotage carried out by the Polytechnic of Central London has shown that there are likely to be more opportunities to be grasped by United Kingdom hauliers when cabotage is carried out under conditions of fair competition than there will be for foreign hauliers.

Work within the EC is directed at gradually achieving common conditions. There is already agreement on drivers' hours and tachograph recording.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for T if he will give the revenue support for London Transport for each year, in constant terms, from 1 what was the investment support for each year fr excluding money, for the docklands light railwa

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hedgerows

Mr. Warren: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the loss of hedgerows and their value to wildlife and the community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Hedgerows play an important role in the countryside and provide a wide variety of benefits. In addition to their agricultural role they can form an integral feature of the landscape, provide a valuable habitat for wildlife and, in some cases, be of considerable historical interest. Their value is, however, dependent upon positive action and sympathetic management to keep them in good condition.

It is my Department's policy to enlist the voluntary co-operation of the farmers and landowners to whom the management of hedgerows necessarily falls. Our Agricultural Development and Advisory Service provides expert advice on hedgerow management, and initial advice for conservation purposes is free of charge.

A certain amount of hedgerow removal has occurred in recent decades due to changing agricultural circumstances, but we would not condone the unnecessary removal of, or damage to, hedgerows. We no longer grant aid the amalgamation of fields which often involved hedgerow removal. On the contrary, we provide capital grants at very favourable rates for both the laying of hedgerows and the planting of new ones.

Dead Sheep (Disposal)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library any literature relating to the disposal of dead sheep circulated to farmers in the restricted area of Cumbria between 20 June 1986 and 8 April 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 21 January 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 14 January, at column 376.

EMPLOYMENT

Skillcentre (Newham)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of S Employment when he expects a skillcentre to Newham.

Mr. Cope: There are no present plans to skillcentre in Newham.

Radiological Protection

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of S Employment what action his Department ha following interim guidance on revised stand radiological protection issued by the Radiological Protection Board in November 198

Mr. Nicholls: As announced on 18 November Health and Safety Commission has set up a worki on ionising radiations which met for the first ti December 1987. The working group will cons recent guidance from the National Rad Protection Board as part of its remit and will ad commission on an appropriate course of actio content to await any subsequent recommendatio

Mr. Cope: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Job Creation

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the job creating schemes and training help for which companies located in the Blackpool travel-to-work area qualify.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission administers the following schemes/programmes which are available to companies located in the Blackpool travel-to-work area:

YTS
New job training scheme
Training grants for employers
National priority skills scheme
Training for enterprise
Community programme

These schemes/programmes have individual qualifying criteria and these would need to be satisfied before companies were able to participate.

Local employer networks and local collaborative projects also offer employers a chance to influence the provision of training in the area and there is a training access point which may help companies identify appropriate training.

Departments Cash Limits

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1987-88.

Mr. Cope: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made. The cash limit on class VII, vote 1, will be increased by £10 million from £1,414,276,000 to £1,424,276,000. This is due to additional expenditure of £15 million on the community programme, on which take-up is running higher than expected, partly offset by reduced expenditure of £5 million on the scheme, where take-up is slightly lower th net £10 million increase in the cash limi on cl 1, is more than offest by a reduction of £13,9 cash limit on class VII, vote 5, (Manpo Commission), from £1,949,853,000 to £1,935, to lower than expected take-up of the new scheme. There is a token £1,000 increase administration cash limit (class VII, vote 2 overall there is a net reduction in DE group £3,998,000.

The Department of Employment's runnir on class VII, vote 2, will be reduced by £2,5 £474,347,000 to £471,757,000 and the MS costs limit on class VII, vote 5, will be cor increased by £2,590,000 from £346, £349,133,000. This is to adjust for an over- DE's running costs when expenditure for the service was transferred from MSC to DE i Supplementary Estimates. The running costs Department of Employment Group as a w unchanged at £924,159,000.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOL

SESSION 1987–88

11th January-22nd January 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIA

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information Sy and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column r between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without re bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of M and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Departm however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members spe General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and M part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Sp and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are list respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the referen

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Com Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter t without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
